Y.M.C.A. NOTES

Many Boys on Hand for Swimming Lessons

An important meeting of the Board of Directors is being held to-night at 8 o'clock. Several matters of reform will be discussed, and other business attended to. Mr. Meserve will also outline a special programme for the summer, which will be of interest to the Board.

Boys' Secretary Galley, of the Y. M. C. A., leaves to-moroow for Toronto, where he will sit on the Board of Eaminers for the International Bible Class Examinations, when some 1,200 students of the various Associations throughout the Dominion wrote.

Some thirty boys took advantage of the free swimming lessons at the "Y" yesterday afternoon. The classes will be continued all this week and excellent results are anticipated, as in past years this has proved a big hit with the youngsters around the city, who are unable to enjoy the pleasures on the water through their inability to swim.

DIXIE MINSTRELS AT THE ROYAL

Clever Work by Company of Twelve People

The initial performances of the Dixie Minstrels, a company of twelve people, were a grand treat to patrons of the Royal Theatre last night.

Many people had to be turned away as every seat was taken shortly after eight o'clock. The entertainment lasts one hour and forty minutes, exclusive of pictures.

There are some very fine parts. The dancing is the best to be seen on the vaudeville stage.

OBITUARY

JOSIAH WILSON

The death occurred last evening of one of Peterboro's most esteemed residents in the person of Josiah Wilson, who succumbed to a lingering illness which had confined him to Nichols Hospital for several months. The deceased was born at Manvers 59 years ago, but was a resident of this city for many years. He is survived by six sisters, Mrs. John Hart, of this city, Mrs. Moore, Lindsay, Mrs. Wilson, city; Mrs. Richards, Oshawa; Mrs. Grimshaw, Buffalo, and Mrs. Round, Niagara Falls. Funeral service will be conducted at the home of Mrs. Hart, 559 Bethune Street, by the Rev. R. G. Peever at 8 o'clock to-night, after which the body will be conveyed to the C.P.R. station. The funeral will be private and interment will take place at Bethany.

THE LATE PETER CONNAL.

The call of death was answered on Sunday by one of Peterborough's oldest business men, Mr. Peter Connal. The late gentleman was of advanced age, and although able to be present at his place of business regularly he had been gradually growing weaker during late years, and after being confined to his room for a little over a week, he passed away.

The late Peter Connal was born in Stirling, Scotland, on September 17, 1827, and spent his early days and young manhood in that country. He entered into the grocery business and soon demonstrated great ability, in fact so much so, that Mr Robert Nichols employed him in Scotland to come to Canada and manage the local department of the firm of Nicholls and Hall, which was situated on Simcoe Street. He filled that position for a number of years, and left it in 1874 to go into business himself. He and Mr. W. G. Ferguson formed partnership and started a grocery store at 286 George Street, known as Peter Connal and Co., and when in 1889 Mr. Ferguson retired, the late Mr. Connal took his son, Mr. J. H. Connal, into the business and the firm was known as Peter Connal and Son.

The late Mr. Connal was well versed in proper business methods, and his success largely lay in that fact. He was well known by men of the trade all over the province and was held high in esteem by all. In religion he was an ardent Presbyterian, and a member of St. Paul's Church. His political views tended toward Liberalism.

His wife predeceased him, but he leaves two sons, Mr. J. H. Connal, of this city, and Mr. F. Connal, of Cochrane, also one daughter, Mrs. W. G. Cameron, of New York (formerly Miss Bessie Connal), to mourn his loss.

The funeral was held this afternoon from his late residence, 270 Brock Street, to the Little Lake Cemetery.

THE LATEST FROM DAME FASHION

THE SUMMMER WRAP.

There is hardly a costume complete this season without one of the loose airy wraps that gives just the right finish to the afternoon attire, some of them plain enough for morning wear too. This one is developed in the fashionable Egyptian crepe with velvet. The pleated peplum gives the right flare, the high waist line is a matter of personal choice, but the high collar is de rigueur.

Gentlemen,—On behalf of the Publicity and Entertainment Committee of the Board of Trade of St. Catharines, I desire to express our appreciation of the manner in which you decorated the city for the visit of Their Royal Highnesses The Duke of Connaught and Princess Patricia on May 11th.

Expressions of appreciation of the decorations were heard on every hand, and Their Royal Highnesses passed very complimentary remarks.

Your staff of decorators, under your Mr. Campbell, were very courteous, and did everything asked of them by the Committee.

Yours very truly,
HENRY B. BURGOYNE,
Chairman Publicity and Entertainment Committee, St. Catharines Board of Trade.

WHAT'S THE USE?

I MAKE a good speech,
And nobody cheers me;
I make a bad break,
And every one hears me!

I write a good song,
And nobody tries it;
I turn out some trash,
And everybody buys it!

I dance rather well,
And nobody's boasting;
I slip on the floor,
And I'm in for a roasting!

I dress a la mode,
And nobody truckles;
I wear an old hat,
And every one chuckles!

I work like a dog,
And nobody praises;
I slack up a bit,
And I get the blue blazes!

I pile up the dough,
And the world is no wiser;
I give away cash,
And they call me a miser!

I'm poor and I'm good,
And nobody flatters;
I'm rich and no worse,
And they tear me to tatters!

I talk like the rest,
I am called a good fellow;
I deal in the truth,
And they say I am yellow!

I bluster and swear,
I could pass as a Quaker;
I follow the church,
And they call me a faker!

I do as they wish,
And I'm all on the level;
I do as they please,
I'm a son of the devil!

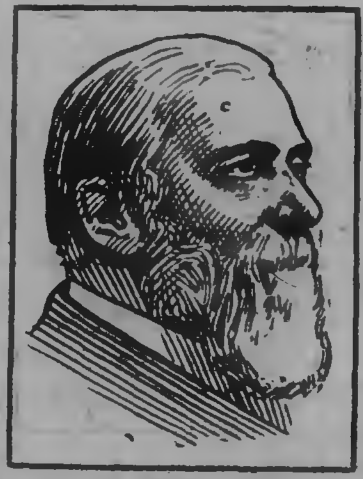
SIR JOHN HENNIKER-HEATON KEEPS AT POSTAL RFEORMS

The father of imperial penny postage, having accomplished his aim of bringing about two-cent postage between all parts of the British Empire, and also between Great Britain and the United States, has now turned his attention to France, and before long it is probable that letters will cross the Channel as cheaply as they cross the pond. Sir John's ideal is universal penny postage, and he will work towards that end till he drops.

This man of vision, the eldest son of Lt.-Col. Heaton, R. E., was born in Rochester, England; after a course at Kent House Grammar School and King's College, he turned to Australia, to agriculture, and to journalism. In all enterprises he prospered so greatly that at one time he could boast that he held $15,000,000 in his own name, and several newspapers. His marriage with Miss Bennett perpetuates his connection with the Australian Press, for her family founded and maintains a great Sydney organ.

The great event happened on July 12, 1898, Imperial Penny Postage was carried by seven votes to five at the London Conference on that day. One of the delegates made straight for the House of Commons to tell Heaton the news that he had won. "I hardly slept that night," he remembers, and at five o'clock a copy of The Times, confirming the news, was sent hot from Printing House Square to his bedside. At luncheon at the Carlton Club the Duke of Norfolk, who had previously been officially opposed to him, crossed the floor to shake hands with the conqueror. On that day, too, he received a popular, as well as, ducal recognition. When he called a cab to take him home, and was about to give his address to the driver, that worthy interrupted him with—"I know, sir; same name as yourself, Eaton Square!"



SIR JOHN HENNIKER HEATON, M.P.

By an irony of fate, Australia, Sir John's own continent, held out against the penny rate, but on March 25, 1905, Lord Stanley wrote: "Dear Henniker Heaton,—I cannot allow the bald statement which will appear in Monday's papers, to the effect that a penny postage rate is to come into force with Australia on April 1, to be the first announcement to you of the fulfilment of one of your postal dreams. You have worked for this reform with untiring energy, and I am glad to think that I am the first, though I certainly shall not be the last, to congratulate you." There was no April fooling about that, and Sir John at once sat down before a sheet of the familiar House of Commons quarto notepaper to make a handsome return of compliments. "You have forged the last link in the chain of Empire," he wrote; "you have thrown the mantle of Imperial unity over the shoulders of the sovereign. You have struck the 'Lost Chord' in the Imperial Symphony, and one grand, perfect chorus ascends over land and sea." These sentences illustrate a characteristic manner, but Sir John has used the Penny Post to even better advantage. No documents in the world would make friendlier reading than Sir John's personal correspondence.

In the year following the inclusion of Australia in the Imperial scheme he extended his activities to Universal Penny Postage. At that time it was Mr. Sydney Buxton who received his attentions and was given no loophole of escape. In proposing the penny rate between England and America, Sir John was able to tell the Chancellor of the Exchequer that he would place in his hands a bank guarantee, "bearing names honored on every Exchange," for the amount of the proved loss during the first three years' working of the reduced rating. Heaton, moreover, had the American Postmaster-General and public opinion behind him. Mr. Sydney Buxton and the Chancellor of the Exchequer did not, at the time, "see their way to accept his offer." But within two years the thing was done; and now Sir John is all intent on France. What Postmaster-General can evade him? Evasion always fails, though always tried. If it succeeds in the House, it melts away in private. "I have known," says Sir John, "an administrative chief, so 'stiff in opinion, always in the wrong,' at his desk, prove the most reasonable of men over a bottle of Moet and Chandon, or an after-dinner cup of coffee, and a genuine Havana."

COLLAR AND CUFFS.

A Handsome Set That Resembles Venetian Lace.

A very unusual collar and cuff set, which has the effect of the beautiful venetian lace, may be made with embroidery. Select embroidery patterns or draw forms which look like the motifs in venetian lace. Transfer to a lightweight muslin and embroider in straight satin stitch over a thin padding. Around each figure work a narrow buttonhole stitch.

Cut out these forms and baste them to a stiff paper or muslin pattern of any preferred collar and cuff shape. Then connect the various motifs with bridges or ties, which are made by carrying the threads across from one figure to another and then buttonholing over these threads.

The motifs should be arranged so that the solid large forms outline the edge of the collar with the smaller solid motifs inside.

If the work is well done the effect is really very lovely and forms a unique piece of needlework.

Lord Mayor's Privilege.

Exercising an ancient privilege, the Lord Mayor and Corporation of Dublin appeared at the Bar of the House of Commons the other day to present a petition against the abandonment of Queenstown as a port of call by the Cunard mail steamers. The Lord Mayor, wearing his robes, and attended by his officers, entered the precincts of the House, and, being observed by the Speaker, was challenged by him thus: "My Lord Mayor of Dublin, what have you there?" The Lord Mayor answered by reciting the prayer of the petition.

TOOK "CITY OF BLOOD."

Admiral Rawson's Rockets Spread Terror In Benin.

That intrepid sailor, Sir Henry Rawson, who became Governor of New South Wales, and had the reputation of being the most widely beloved member of the naval service, is commemorated in a biography just published in London.

The expedition against Benin in Africa, the "City of Blood" was the last considerable and important expedition, undertaken by the British navy. Asked for an estimate of the cost and length of time required for success, he named the sum of $250,000 and the space of six months. He took the city in four months and at a cost of $150,000.

When the expedition started, it was not even known exactly where Benin was; but Rawson made no mistake, and, having got within range of where he believed it to be, he had a couple of rockets fired in the direction.

"Little did the admiral know the effect those rockets were going to have in Benin. It would hardly be credited that at a mile distant, and fired only in a general direction, they should have pitched into the ju-ju compounds. A Benin woman afterwards described what happened:

"The compound was thronged with people, when suddenly from the blue appeared two hissing thunderbolts, which fell into the very heart of the sacred precincts. Not a white man in sight! Yet here were two messages from the skies. 'Truly the white men are gods!' they said, and ran panic-stricken, from the place'."

Nevertheless, though the city was easily taken, there was some sharp fighting on the way up, and the losses, both in officers and men, were considerable. The following extract, from a letter quoted in the book, from an unknown correspondent, shows what his men thought of their chief:—

"The admiral doffed his uniform immediately on landing, and, attired only in trousers and shirt and a big helmet, walked every step of the journey, plodding along with the aid of a walking-staff, although he was nearly fifty-three years old. His grand example kept the men well together, and although at times he could hardly put one foot before the other, so great was his fatigue, he gallantly refused the services of carriers. His treatment of the force was most kind and considerate, and when our poor fellows were buried, the admiral cried as if he had been their father."

The campaign was hardly over when Rawson fell sick with malaria, which left him with arthritis in the hip-joint. He suffered agonies from this disease for the rest of his life.

The Benin expedition is an episode of very real note in the history of the navy. But Rawson fought also in China, in Egypt, and on the East Coast of Africa. He was a favorite of everybody, from King Edward and the Duke of Edinburgh downwards, a great naval tactician, a gunnery enthusiast, and, above all, a model of all manly qualities, both in his public and his private life.

The Rosetta Stone.

The Rosetta Stone, now in the British Museum, is a stone discovered in 1799 by M. Boussard, a French officer of engineers during the French occupation of Egypt under Napoleon, in an excavation at Fort St. Julien, near the city of Rosetta. It is a piece of black basalt, 3 feet 7 inches in length and 2 feet 6 inches in width, and contains part of three distinct inscriptions; the first or highest in hieroglyphics, the second in enchorial or demotic characters, and the third in Greek. The Greek text, when translated, showed that the inscription was an ordinance of the priests decreeing certain honors to Ptolemy Epiphanes on the occasion of his coronation, 196 B.C. It contained a command that the decree should be inscribed in the sacred letters (hieroglyphics), the letters of the country (demotic), and Greek letters—this for the convenience of the mixed population of Egypt under its Greek rulers.

WOMEN'S COUNCIL EXPRESS GENERAL DISSATISFACTION AT COMMISSIONERS' ACTION

Deep Regret at Inadequacy of Action Taken to Meet Situation---Indignation at Language of the Chairman---Expected Sympathy but got Gross Misrepresentation, Scolding and Antagonism

The president, Mrs. J. C. Davidson, presided at a public meeting of the Women's Council in the Public Library yesterday afternoon. A Revelw reporter who presented himself at the meeting was asked to retire for the business session.

Reports from convenors of committees were received. The date for the Better Baby Show and Public Welfare Exhibition was set for the last week in September.

The following resolution was passed after much discussion, and for which a vote was taken, the result being 41 for and 15 against:

"Whereas the Police Commissioners at last have taken action on the petition of the Women's Council asking for the appointment of a woman to the police force with full porice powers, by appointing a police matron without salary, this local Women's Council expresses its very deep regret at the inadequacy of the action taken to meet the situation, as it exists in our city and expresses its sense of humiliation that the city should be put in the position of imposing heavy duties upon any lady for only the expenses entailed in the discharge of the duties imposed.

"This Council also expresses its sense of indignation at the language used by the chairman of the Police Commission in his address published broadcast.

"Among other indignities we are charged with acting illegally in petitioning a body of commissioners (of whom one member is a County Judge) when the Commission itself fixed the date and place for receiving representatives of the Women's Council in the full knowledge that a petition would be presented and when the Commissioners had themselves invited Adjutant McElhiney to be present and speak on the same subject during the same session. The illegality would seem to have consisted in the fact that the views presented by the Women's Council were not those of the chairman of the Police Commission, and not in the fact that views on the subject of police protection were presented. The Women's Council regrets that not one of the cases cited in their address was investigated, though the names of the parties are still available. Every case cited in the address occurred after April 1913, though the chairman of the Police Commission published abroad the statement that the only case investigated by him occurred five years ago. Had the chairman of the Police Commissioners asked the petitioners for the simplest facts in the cases definitely presented in the address delivered by our deputation or even given them credit for ordinary intelligence and sincerity, he would have saved himself and the Women's Council the injustice of his statement. Moreover the said chairman charges some one—he apparently lacks courage or fairness to name the individual, with "brazen falsehood." If such words were intended to apply to statements made by members of the deputation in presenting their side of the argument, we would assure the public that the chairman of the Police Commission is as wide of the truth as in the cases he supposedly investigated.

"The Women's Council deeply deplores the fact that where it looked for and expected sympathy, encouragement and co-operation, it has met with gross misrepresentation, scolding and antagonism.

"The Women's Council, however, does not intend to cease from its efforts to improve conditions admitted on every side to be serious and invites the earnest co-operation of all those interested in the moral welafre of the city to the end."

Some Objection.

It is stated that there was some objection to the publishing of the resolution.

Mrs. Armstrong, of Belleville, gave an address on the question of Supervised Playgrounds.

12 1-16c FOR FIRST SELECTION AT PETERBORO CHEESE BOARD FACTORIES BOARDED 575 CHEESE

The first meeting of the Peterboro Cheese Board was held this morning in the Bank of Montreal Chambers. There was five buyers, Messrs. Gillespie, Watkins, Johnston, Thompson and Morton. The amount boarded was 575 as compared with 930 last year. The reason given is the fact that tne profit is very small, and it pays the factory better to make butter. Some have made nothing but butter since opening.

President Switzer was unable to remain, and as Secretary Hawthorne was absent, the discussion, which usually features the opening meeting, were laid over till the next meeting to be held on Wednesday, June 3rd. Vice-President Mann conducted the sale, which Mr. Thompson opened at 11½. The bids were Mr. Watkins 11⅝, Mr. Gillespie 11 13-16, Mr. Johnston 11 15-16, Mr. Morton 12, Mr. Johnston 12 1-16. The latter selected Warminster, Shearer, Selwyn, Villiers, Westwood, Myrtle, Ormonde, Trewern and Fleetwood. The bidding for the remainder of the board was as follows. Mr. Gillespie 11¾, Mr. Morton 11⅞, Mr. Gillespie 11 15-16, and Mr. Johnston 12.

The factories boarded as follows:

Warminster—35.
Shearer—45.
Selwyn—40.
Villiers—36.
Westwood—40.
Oakdale—35
Daisy D.—35.
Myrtle—20.
Ormonde—40.
Young's Point—25.
Lang—30.
Indian River—30.
Treewern—40.
Norwood—50.
Fleetwood—25.
Killarney—50.
Total—575.

The price paid at the opening meeting last year was 11 3-16.

FATAL ACCIDENT AT RICHARDSON'S CROSSING

This morning Geo. Wellington, who resided near Lindsay, was killed by the G.T.R. flyer which leaves here at 7.10 a.m. It appears that he was driving a team across what is known as Richardson's Crossing, about a mile or so this side of Lindsay. The engine struck the wagon, killing one of the horses and throwing him to the road. The train was stopped and the injured man taken on board, with the intention of taking him to the hospital, but he succumbed, when in the waiting room of the Lindsay depot awaiting the arrival of an ambulance.

His leg was broken, his head badly cut, and he was also injured internally.

The victim of the accident was a married man and leaves a wife and three small children.

The engineer of the train is W. Chambers and the Conductor C. Adams.

SURVIVOR OF TRAGEDY CUT HIS THROAT

Man Who Escaped From Burning House at Coboconk Takes His Life

HAD BEEN DESPONDENT

Report Says That he Left Confession Dealing With the Fire

Allan Fountain died yesterday afternoon at the Ross Hospital, Lindsay, after cutting his throat with a razor. The man was brought to Lindsay from Coboconk.

Fountain was a lodger at the Wetherby home at Coboconk, when the house was destroyed by fire, six of the children being burned to death while the mother and Fountain escaped.

At the time the tragedy created considerable talk and while it was expected the Crown would take up the case, no such action followed.

It is reported that Fountain left what is said to be a confession relating to the tragedy. The man had been despondent and had been acting strangely. He committeed the fatal act Monday evening and was found near the pigpen at the rear of his mother's home.

DEPUTATION ASK FOR CONSERVATION

Mayor Buller, E. O. Patterson and W. H. Denham were in Ottawa yesterday with a deputation, asking the Government to conserve the waters of this district. Consideration by the Government was promised.

SERVICE TO AND FROM 'CAYGEON

Merchants Association Hear From the C.P.R.

Secretary Cameron of the Retail Merchants' Association received a communication from District Passenger Agent Murphy of the C.P.R., to the effect that the following was the result of the Retail Merchants' petition and request:

Service will got into effect on May 31st.

The regulations will provide for a train leaving Bobcaygeon at 7.00 p.m., arriving at Peterboro at 9.10 a.m. Returning, leave Peterboro at 10.50, arriving at Lindsay 12.00 noon, Bobcaygeon at 1.00 p.m. Returning leave Bobcaygeon at 3.30 p.m., Lindsay 4.25 p.m., Peterboro 5.35 p.m. A north bound train will returning leave Peterboro at 6.25 p.m., arrive at Lindsay at 7.35, Bobcaygeon 8.30.

In addition to this an express train will leave Toronto at 9.30 p.m., making all local stops between Toronto and Peterboro, en route to Montreal.

Sarcastic.

"She's sarcastic."

"I don't think so."

"I know it. She met me yesterday and said 'I'm pleased to hear that your rich uncle's health is failing rapidly."

VICE REGAL ITINERARY

Party Will Travel Throughout Summer

OTTAWA, May 20.—As at present arranged, Their Royal Highnesses will be in residence at Toronto from May 20 to 31, both inclusive.

At the conclusion of their stay in Toronto they will visit the following localities: Peterboro, Port Hope, Cobourg, June 1; Belleville, Kingston, June 2; Brockville, Cornwall, June 3.

From June 4 to July 4 Their Royal Highnesses will be in residence at Quebec, during which time His Royal Highness will probably visit Petawawa camp and the eastern townships.

On July 5 the Governor-General will pay a short visit to Newfoundland, proceeding there on H. M. S. Essex, which is coming to Quebec in July.

At the end of July Their Royal Highnesses will proceed west to Vancouver, making various short stops en route. They will be back in Ottawa early in September.

THE WELSH BILL

Becomes Law no Matter What Lords do

LONDON, May 20.—The first bill to become law under the operation of tho Parliament Act is the Welsh Disestablishment Bill, which passed its third reading in the House of Commons last night by a vote of 328 to 251.

Renewed interest has been taken in the question of Welsh disestablishment during recent months, because of its immense importance to the church and churchmen. Under the Parliament Act, the bill automatically becomes law after its third passage by the House of Commons, no matter what action the House of Lords may take.

Among other things the bill provides that so far as Wales and Monmouth are concerned, the Church of England will cease to be established by law; all cathedrals and ecclesiastical corporations will be dissolved, the bishops of the four Welsh dioceses will cease to be members of the House of Lords; the present ecclesiastical law will cease to exist as law, and no ecclesiastical court will have any coercive jurisdiction, and the bishops and clergy will not be members of or be represented in the house of convocation of the Province of Canterbury.

WAITERS WANT THEIR TIPS

Wouldn't Get $75 a Month Otherwise They Say

OTTAWA, May 20.—The waiters of Canada, or some of them, object to being deprived of gratuities by act of Parliament.

In the Senate yesterday a petition of the Chateau Frontenac waiters against the anti-tipping bill of Senator Davis was read. It stated that should tipping be made illegal waiters would be fortunate if proprietors paid salaries of $75 per month, and upon that a man with a family could not live and dress as a waiter was obliged to dress, and that everyone of the 45 waiters in the Frontenac was opposed to the bill, and belief expressed that 90 per cent. of the waiters of Canada were against it.

The petition stated that tipping was now optional, and should so remain.

Senator Davis said he had some communications on the same subject which he would read at the proper time.

Farmers Want Rain.

Reports from the farmers are to the effect that a good rainfall would be gladly welcomed.

BILLS PASSED BY COMMONS

Three Measures Are Given Third Reading

OTTAWA, May 20.—In the House of Commons the bill respecting judicial salaries was given its third reading, after being shorn of an amendment regarding traveling expenses, which Mr. Speaker declared out of order, the amendment sought to give the same traveling expenses to county judges who resided outside the county towns as those who resided in them where the business in the place of residence was as great as in the county town.

Hon. Dr. Reid's bill amending the railway act and extending the sum of $300,000 for another five years for the purpose of eliminating level crossings was put through. Figures submitted showed the expenditure during the past five years was $60,891. He said the amount voted stood as a fund from which the Government's portion of abolishing crossings, as ordered by the Railway Board, was to be paid, the board fixing the amount.

The act amending the St. John and Quebec Railway Act providing for the erection of certain bridges by the Government, instead of by the railway, the bonds for which bridge construction have been guaranteed by the province, was given a third reading after a protest from F. B. Carvell.

Hon. Robert Rogers' bill increasing the subsidy in respect to first-class dry docks from 3 1-2 to 4 per cent. of the total cost of the work as fixed under the dry dock subsidies act during a period not exceeding 15 years, was read a first time. This bill will not be retroactive, nor apply to contracts for dry docks already let.

JAPAN FOR PEACE

New Premier Strives to Remove Suspicion

TOKIO, May 20.—A plea to the press of the world to work for the removal of misunderstandings and suspicions between the nations was made yesterday by Premier Count Shigenobu Okuma in addressing a gathering of Japanese and foreign journalists. He declared these misunderstandings and suspicions to be terrible obstructions to the world's peace, but added that the time had not yet arrived in international relations to apply the Christian text, "Whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek turn to him the other also." Nations, he said, must be strong and exact respect of their rights.

The Japanese Premier declared that unjustified suspicions had led to the fortification of peaceful countries such as New Zealand and Australia, and concluded:

"America has no enemy, so what is the use of the fortification of the Panama Canal?"

COMMITTEE PURCHASE 500 FEET OF HOSE

Tenders were received last night by the Fire, Water and Light Committee for 500 feet of fire hose. Firms giving tenders were Gutta Percha Co., Toronto; B. F. Goodwill Co., Buffalo; Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., Toronto; Dunlop Tyre and Rubber Co., Toronto, and Goodyear Rubber Co., Toronto.

After considerable discussion the committee decided to purchase the 500 feet of Imperial hose, which would cost $500.00. The same amount of Paragon hose from the Gutta Percha Company would cost $550.00. The Chief remarked that he had always found satisfaction in Gutta Percha hose, and in fact, some of it was still in use in the Fire Hall although 18 years old, but the $50.00 looked nice to the Committee, and the resolution stood.

HON. T. W. CROTHERS ANNOUNCES LEGISLATION FOR NEXT SESSION

Minister of Labor, After Study of the British System of Providing Work for Unemployed, Has Evolved Scheme Applicable to Canada, Which Will Do Away With Unscrupulous Agents.

OTTAWA, May 20.—Drastic legislation to deal with the employment question will be introduced by the Government next session of Parliament. Action will be taken by the Canadian Government along the lines by which the Imperial Government has solved the difficulty in Great Britain, according to a statement made yesterday by Hon. T. W. Crothers, Minister of Labor.

Incidentally Mr. Crothers stated that there would be no labor legislation this year.

In Great Britain the Government has established a number of labor bureaus with a central office in London. All expenses are borne by the Government, and Mr. Crothers found that they were excellently managed and had proved a godsend. These bureaus supply workers for employers and work for those out of employment. There is a perfect system of information kept regarding the needs in the various parts of the country, and the unemployed are therefore not subjected to the more or less misrepresentation of employment agents.

Accurate information regarding labor conditions in the various parts of the country will be available at each office, and to these offices those who desire employment will go. Employers also will be able to secure information as to the ability and record of those whom the bureaus will recommend to them.

Mr. Crothers stated that the distance in Canada render it impossible for the Government to advance traveling expenses, as is done in England, but he believed that he has arrived at a solution of the difficulty by getting employers to advance the money.

LIVELY TIMES WHERE HERB JOHNSTON IS MISSIONARY

Sympathizers of Revolutionists Caused Much Trouble in Equador Town

The following item has been taken from the "Christian Alliance Weekly" of late date, written by Mr. Crisman who is Supt. of the Alliance work in Ecudor.

Equador, S.A.—Rev. G. H. Crisman writes the following interesting account of the recent revolution that has swept over the section in which he and his co-workers are laboring:

I wonder if the papers have informed you of Ecuador's latest, not revival, but revolution? They have them so often here we thought we knew almost all about them. But this one was different, being at a closer range than any we had ever gone through before. The real revolution is in the province north of us, but it has many sympathizers here and especially in our town. Hence the government had sent troops here to hold the plaza from the revolutionists that are around through the mountains. These have come in twice, two or three weeks ago, hoping to scare the guard away and get their rifles, and each time there was a battle right in our streets. The last and most serious lasted almost an hour and the bullets were whizzing pretty thick all around the house, a few hitting the front corridor. The next morning we found a Mauser bullet on the floor of my room. Brother Johnston, who has rooms about a block from us, found ten holes through his walls and would have been in real danger had he been there at the time. I had gone to Portoviejo on business that day, returning at 7.30 p.m., two hours after it was all over, and knew nothing of it till I was near the house and saw our "Stars and Stripes" in the street. I found my wife and children almost too scared to tell the story. One young man, a friend, had been killed by a stray bullet through his window, and several others were thus seriously wounded. As most of our town favor the revolution, the soldiers have taken many prisoners with great cruelty and have been so abusive to all the poor people, threatening to cut off both fingers and ears to get the jewelry..

"Ever since this occurrence our house has been quite a "Consulate" for the refugees and every night we have from 15 to 45 sleeping in our rooms and hall. As we have meetings with them it has given us good opportunities to preach to some who otherwise would not come to our house.

"We are still in suspense, not knowing what the outcome may be."

Since the above was written Mr. Herbert Johnston has sent word to his parents, that the trouble appears settled. Mr. Johnston in his letter gave the reason of his absence from his room. Desiring a rest from language study he went outside the town for a walk and soon found himself between two fires. The rebels on the bill top and the Government forces in the town. His friends will be pleased to know he came through in safety.

MUSKOKA FARMERS AND LUMBERMEN FIGHT FIRES

Two Weeks' Drought Contributes to Danger From Forest Fires Which Are Reported in Many Places—Axe Lake Plant Is Destroyed.

HUNTSVILLE, May 20.—Not even during the midsummer drought of last year when forest fires raged so fiercely was there felt the same measure of anxiety as is being shown during the present time in this vicinity No rain has fallen for two weeks, and fires appear to be raging in nearly every direction. Monday word was received that the Axe Lake Mill of the Muskoka Wood Manufacturing Co. was totally destroyed, and that a fire was raging in their limits. Yesterday large gangs of men were battling heroically to save the company's camps and to stay the progress of the flames. Word has just been received also that the forest in the vicinity of Sand Lake is ablaze, and summer residents have been rushing out in automobiles to make an effort to save their summer homes.

In the Townships of Stisted and Chaffey, the farmers are working as organised bands in seeking to stay the progress of the flames, but despite their efforts the high wind is driving the fire ahead, and it is feared that the loss will amount to thousands of dollars. Happily, up to the present there does not appear to be danger for the summer homes about Lake of Bays. The fires are burning in the vicinity, but have been controlled by organised efforts. Unless rain falls very soon North Muskoka will suffer a loss far in excess of any period for years back.

West Cobalt Threatened.

COBALT, May 20.—Bush fires are still raging in this neighborhood, particularly in West Cobalt, where the fire brigade have been busy ever since three o'clock yesterday afternoon. They are still out trying to prevent the fire from spreading. Helped by a fierce wind, the flames were rushed down the hill and destroyed everything within reach. The fire took a hold in several backyards, but was stopped in time, although several residences were threatened.

LIFE IN DANGER

William of Wied Said to Have Resigned

VIENNA, May 20.—A serious situation has arisen in Albania, whereby the life of the new ruler, Prince William, has been endangered. According to Durazzo despatches to The Neue Freie Presse, Essad Pasha had an audience with Prince William on Monday afternoon and tendered his resignation as governor. Essad Pasha had 300 adherents in his residence and 5,000 in Durazzo. They started a revolt on Tuesday, Essad himself firing the first shot against the prince's palace.

The prince thereupon appealed to the commander of the Italian and Austrian warships. They landed detachments, who set up machine guns in front of Essad Pasha's house. The Turkish commander then asked permission to be allowed to go aboard the Italian warship. This was refused, and he was arrested and placed aboard the Austrian warship Szigetvar as the prince's prisoner.

According to other reports, Prince William discovered a fortnight ago secret plans which had been drawn up by Essad Pasha, and ordered him to disarm his body guard Essad Pasha refused, whereupon the Albanian gendarmie, commanded by Dutch officers, attacked his residence, arrested him and turned him over to the Austrian commander.

Five hundred men from the Austrian and Italian warships are guarding the prince's palace.

MAY BE TROUBLE

Suffragettes Will Try to See the King

LONDON, May 20.—Lively scenes are promised when the suffragettes make an attempt to see the King on Thursday.

At Monday's meeting of the Women's Social and Political Union Mrs. Mansell said that it was going to be the biggest thing they had ever had. She thought the authorities must be trembling in their shoes. If there was going to be any militancy it would be on the part of the other side. If there was any attempt at militancy on the part of the minions of the Government it would be at their peril.

Mrs. Mansell added that Mrs. Pankhurst would be safe because, like Sir Edward Carson, she had got a bodyguard.

North Monaghan Council.

The Council of North Monaghan will meet as a Court of Revision next Monday and will also deal with general business.

ST. LUKE'S CHURCH.

To-morrow, Ascension Day, there will be a service in St. Luke's Church at 10.30 a.m.

BOY SCOUTS, TROOP 4.

All members of troop no. 4, Boy Scouts, are asked to attend a meeting in St. Luke's Sunday school room, Thursday, at 7.30 p.m. Wear uniforms.

F. J. SAWERS, Scoutmaster.

CALGARY EXCITED OVER RESULTS AT DINGMAN WELL

One Hundred Other Wells Will be Commenced

Canadian Press Despatch.

Calgary, May 20.—The oil boom continues, and it is estimated that one hundred wells will be commenced within sixty days. The Dingman well was gushed for several minutes yesterday, and the shaft is still full. Excitement following this announcement beggars description.

CITY PLANNING.

NOW THAT THE CITIZENS of this city are considering plans for civic improvement and beautification, it would be well to proceed along scientific lines. Such a procedure will involve a city plan. City plans fall usually into three divisions. The rectangular plan began on this continent in the city of Philadelphia where William Pen laid out the plan of that city, and which was adopted by New York and nearly every other city in the United States and Canada. The rectangular plan is known as the chequer board design and it does not give the best means for the construction of a beautiful city. It prevents a free circulation of air and does not provide quick and easy means of internal transportation.

The second kind of plan is known as the circular plan, which has been adopted in Vienna, and, in a modified way, in Paris. It involves large concentric drive ways with streets crossing them like the spokes of a wheel. These drive ways arose out of the destruction of old city walls and fortifications that had protected the city in medeaeval times.

The next plan is known as the diagonal plan which involves diagonal streets running from the outside to the centre of the city. The best example, perhaps, of this plan is the city of Washington. This design provides easy transportation throughout the city, admits the freest circulation of air, and in numerous instances gives variety to the scene and setting to the buildings, but it has the disadvantage of using up a great deal of land for streets. Thus in Washington, fifty-five per cent. of the city's area is used in streets, while in cities of the rectangular plan only about forty per cent. is used for streets. Thus, the latter plan provides the maximum area for building sites. In the former the many three cornered lots that are unsuitable for building sites are utilized as small parks or play grounds and provide the open spaces that give perspective.

As far as the city of Peterborough is concerned, and in fact most Canadian cities, no one of these designs would apply absolutely. In the instructions to the Land Boards of the old province of Quebec and later to the Crown Lands' Departments of Upper and Lower Canada, town sites were to be laid out according to well defined regulations and to have streets of uniform width of sixty-six feet. In no case were the instructions rigidly followed. In many instances the instructions were not understood or else were unknown to those who had charge of town sites. In many cases no one was responsible for the lay-out of the first centres of population in Canada. The result was that towns grew very much in a haphazard fashion. One reason for this was the lack of municipal bodies until the year 1849. Thus, the lack of sidewalks and muddy streets was the subject of constant complaint in the Legislative Assembly from places like Kingston. For this reason, nearly every city in this province, as far as its development is concerned, is a problem of its own kind.

There are many places in Peterborough where streets run together that are too small for building sites. These would make excellent breathing spaces or beauty spots if they were covered with grass or decked with flowers. This point is only one detail of a plan for civic improvement, but it illustrates a simple way of improving the appearance of a city throughout its length and breadth.

One of the proposals for improving Peterborough is the construction of a driveway taking in the main points of interest in the city. This will involve a good road way and in this particular we would draw the attention of authorities to the driveway that has been built in the city of Ottawa. The road bed of the driveway there, is built of Tar Macadam. The usual Macadam road in this country does not possess good wearing qualities There is nothing in the usual Macadam road to hold the individual stones together. As soon as one becomes loose it wears on the others, and thus starts a hole or a rut. Moreover, rain plays havoc with this kind of road. It washes the top dressing off and percolates through it causing it to be rough and yielding. These drawbacks are overcome by the use of tar which holds the stones together and presents a surface that will shed water and which is also impervious to moisture. It makes a very solid and smooth road bed, and one which is not so smooth or slippery as to be dangerous to horses or cause undue skidding to automobiles as the usual asphalt road, such as is laid on George Street, does. Along this drive way which is clean and which skirts the Rideau, shrubs and flowers have been planted, so that Ottawa possesses perhaps the longest and most beautiful drive way in the Dominion. If Peterborough is going to start to build a drive way, it might just as well start to do it as well as possible at the very beginning. It is not necessary to try and build the whole drive way in one year. A proper city plan should be adopted and then, a certain amount of constructive work done each year, so that in time, this city would be one of the most beautiful in the Dominion, and at an expenditure not oppressive to the taxpayer, by reason of spreading it over a period of years.

PETERBOROUGH CHORAL SOCIETY

THE MEMBERS of the St. George's Choral Society are to be congratulated on the step forward taken at their last meeting. The change in name means a larger work and a bigger outlook, which, it is hoped, will mean a greater appreciation of high class music in this city.

We have heard it said that the people of Peterborough do not appreciate good music as they should. The attendance at the presentation of "Judas Maccabaeus" is taken as conclusive evidence. We do not agree with this statement, nor do we consider the evidence warrants such a conclusion.

In every normal person there is by nature a love for the true and beautiful. The reason they do not appreciate the work of masters in any art is not that they dislike beautiful things, but that they do not understand them—they do not see in what their beauty consists. That is a point that the majority of music lovers do not appreciate. They know such a work as Judas Maccabaeus is a master's production, and cannot understand why any normal person does not see as they do. Nevertheless, such is the case. If a person cannot see that such a work is beautiful, they cannot appreciate its beauty.

To overcome, in part, this obstacle, the advertising of local efforts should be changed. To say that the society has practised so many months shows that they are doing something, but it is almost useless so far as creating in the mind of the general public an interest in the subject Such a play as "Within the Law" drew a good house, because its relationship to life was understood. People could appreciate the story of injustice, the criticism of legal mechanism, the ruthless methods of New York police. The relation of such a work as Judas Maccabaeus to life should also be shown, so that people would appreciate it and have their interest thereby awakened. One way is to publish the story of the work in part or in whole, as wisdom may dictate. It is not enough to present the story to the audience in a book of words. There are many other ways of reaching the end in view, but we think such a work would have a bigger audience if more care were taken in awakening the interest of the public in the actual pieces presented.

The Peterborough Choral Society starts on its course with hearty approval and with considerable success behind it. It has enough talent to assure success, but the business side of such an organization is quite as important as the musical side, and, if the Society's efforts are not appreciated, the public should be blamed only with a reservation. Perhaps it is not the public so much as the fault of the society in not making its efforts rightly understood.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

YESTERDAY the County Temperance Association held a hole-in-corner meeting. It was behind closed doors and our reporter was asked to withdraw. He complied. When all the dark and devious designs were discussed, a report was handed to the press, which is obviously not a report of the meeting. Why this secret process? Why not put confidence in the good sense of the general public? Is the object a worthy one? Again, why secret meetings?

IN THE SAME BOAT with the Temperance Association is the Women's Council. They decided to hold their meeting yesterday in camera and have handed out a similar report. What took place there can easily be guessed from the guarded report handed out. Why cannot those who are dissatisfied with the matter referred to be honest enough to show their colours? It looks like small potatoes to go beating about the bush especially when anybody with half an eye can see what the game is.

THE GOVERNMENT has decided to locate in Victoria, British Columbia, the new 72-inch reflecting telescope which is to be the largest in the world. It will cost around $200,000. Victoria has been selected because of its superior climate and its lengthened period of clear skies This item will allay the fears of British Columbians for they will look, we understand, at the British fleet through the new spy glass. A telescope you know shortens distance immensely.

WE OBSERVE no circuses are visiting Toronto. Thrillers are supplied the Telegram by the new sky-scrapers going up. The Borden Government's C.N.R. deal is a hair raiser for the Globe. Carson and Redmond supply fireworks for the News. The World is wholly absorbed in the Telegram, while the Mail and Star are merely two of the leading newspapers.

THE HOUSEHOLDER doesn't get a square deal. In winter he has to put on storm windows and doors to keep the heat in. In summer he has to buy screens and screen doors to keep the heat out. He has to shovel snow in winter and sprinkle and mow the grass in summer. Why should these things be ?

AUTOISTS should try to avoid running over people in this city. It may be permissable sometimes but it isn't polite on George St.

ARE THERE any surveyors in Peterborough? Alack, we cannot say, but the City Council may know.

WHY DOESN'T the City Council commission the surveyor of Bullock's Corners? some one asked.

ALDERMAN DUFFUS ought to support the driveway scheme. O, yes.

A Master of Freemen.

Toronto Telegram (Con.)

Is loyalty to plunder to become the test of loyalty to party under the leadership of Rt. Hon. R. L. Borden ?

It matters little to W. F. Nickle, M.P., and R. B. Bennett, M.P., how they are treated by the Conservative party. It will be for the health of the Conservative party if Rt. Hon. Borden remembers that he is the head in a household of freemen, not a hostler in a stable of slaves. Canadians have faith to believe that Mr. Borden will not seek to drive public rights Conservatives out of the party at the present time, as Sir Wilfrid Laurier drove out public rights Liberals at the time of the Crow's Nest Pass deal and other Siftonian triumphs. If Mr. Borden completes the disappointment of his admirers the Conservative party will lose more than the victims of party tyranny will lose.

THE CARPENTER

By Walt Mason

With shining weapons newly sharpened, the carpenter goes forth to carpent. No work of his is e'er a fizzle, but every product of his chisel, and of his plane and saw and measure, increases human peace and pleasure. Oh, where would be your vine-clad cottage, in which you hit the eggs and pottage; and where would be your stately palace, where you drink grape juice from a chalice; and where would be the school and college, imparting forty kinds of knowledge, but for the man whose saw and hammer kick up all day so glad a clamor ? The man who nails the boards and shingles deserves all praise, in prose and jingles; he builds the homes in which we tarry, in which we dance and sing and marry. He builds the church wherein the pastor explains the doctrines of the Master, our world-worn spirits elevating; he builds the rinks where we go skating; he builds the bleachers where we gather, to see the game, the whole blamed slather; and when we're done with this world's muddle, he builds the box in which we cuddle. The carpenter, in all the ages, has done far more than bards or sages to make the world a better planet than 'twas when Eve and Adam ran it. He builds the homes, while t'other fellows just sit around and work the bellows.

Birthdays of Note

WEDNESDAY, MAY TWENTIETH

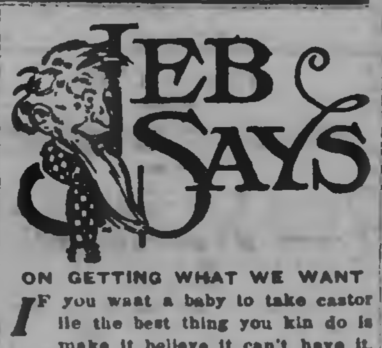
This is the seventy-second birthday of Sir Melbourne Tait, former chief justice of the province of Quebec, who was born at Melbourne, P.Q., in the year 1842. He was for many years the law partner of the late Sir John Abbot in Montreal and attained considerable distinction as an advocate in that city. He was raised to the Bench in 1887 and in 1894 became acting chief justice. He succeeded to the office in 1906, retiring a short time ago. His knighthood was conferred by Queen Victoria on the occasion of the Diamond Jubilee. Sir Melbourne has always taken an active interest in the affairs of church and state and at the time of the Fenian Invasion saw active service. He was one of the founders of the Children's Hospital in Montreal and has reached high rank in the Masonic Order.

Also born to-day:—

G. M. Annable, Moose Jaw, born Winchester, Ont., 1858.

Hon. F. L. Beique, K.C., born St Mathias, P.Q., 1845.

Hon. J. A. Ouimet, retired judge, born Ste. Rose, P.Q., 1848.



ON GETTING WHAT WE WANT

If you want a baby to take castor ile the best thing you kin do is make it believe it can't have it. Then it'll howl fer it and your work will be dead easy. Arter all, we're all babies when it comes to wantin' anythin' and we're liable to want most that which is hardest to get hold on.

It's the things as come easy that we are least liable to appreciate. Although they may be the very best things, the most wuth while things we side-track 'em for somethin' that calls for howls and scrambles and very often pain. We don't allars know jest what is good for us but if what is good for us is hard to attain, we're right lucky. Arter all humanity is two-thirds scrap and one-third commonsense, ain't that right?

Hartley's Caller

The Meeting Brought Matters to a Crisis

By COLIN S. COLLINS

"Lady to see you," announced Jimmie, one of the office boys, with a deference that he showed only to Hartley, the dramatic critic, and Murphy, the sporting editor. The sporting editor could call all the baseball players by their first names, but Hartley had only to write a slip of paper and it would take Jimmie into the much desired "show." Such small fry as editors and star reporters were not at all in the same class with a man who carried passes in his pocket every day.

"I've told you a hundred times to get the name, Jimmie," was the testy response. Hartley was ill at ease with the whole world that morning.

"I know," admitted Jimmie, with unembarrassed truthfulness, "but, say, Mr. Hartley, she's a peacherino for fair!"

"I'm not interested in fruit," was the cold response as Hartley turned to his desk. He hated all women at the moment, for he had had to do a thing which would probably cost him the love of the one woman he really did care for.

He had had to tell the cruel truth about Norma Keating as an actress, and he felt that the high spirited girl never would forgive him.

Jimmie, the persistent, hung over the desk.

"She don't look like an actress," he declared, using the argument he knew to be most potent. "An she's a pippin for fair!"

"I can't see any one who does not send in a card," declared Hartley as he turned to his work again, and Jimmie dashed out presently to return with a bit of pasteboard.

With a start Hartley read Norma's name and gave orders that she be ushered in. It was better perhaps that since there was to be a quarrel they should meet on his own ground.

Somehow, with the familiar surroundings, he felt more safe than he ever could in the parlor of the little actress' suit at the hotel. With a sternness that indifferently masked the misery that he felt he prepared to receive his caller.

He had expected that she would come storming in to denounce him for his criticism and to declare him biased and unfair.

He was braced for the shock and ill prepared for the sight of the dejected little woman who came timidly into his dingy office, her rich furs forming a strange contrast to the bare walls and cheap furniture.

Jimmie slipped away after one last admiring glance, and then the girl raised her eyes to Hartley's and met the pity in his bravely.

"I did not come to reproach you for your notice," she said, with a quick appreciation of his attitude. "It was your right to say what you pleased. I paid a big price for the special performance in order to get the metropolitan notices, and in doing so I exposed myself to every form of critical attack.

"I suppose that you are expected to be severe on beginners, to ridicule them and beat them down and force them into their proper places.

"You demand that we start at the bottom. I can see now that it was absurd to think that I could win favorable comment from the great men who have made their reputation more through the savageness of their attacks than through their ability as critics."

"And yet you said you had not come to reproach?" he asked gently. Even in her bitterness he noticed a new note in the rich voice. It hurt him to think that he was in part responsible for that little catch of pain which would sound, try as she would to be hard and cynical.

It was as if her whole quivering soul was laid bare in spite of the dress of words with which she sought to clothe it.

"I did not mean to say that," she cried. "I only meant to come and ask you if you would let me have my photographs back. You and the rest of your confreres have beaten me. I am in retreat. I am going as far from New York as I can. I want to take with me everything that is mine."

"You should have sent your agent and spared yourself," he reminded her gently. "I will see that the pictures are found for you. Will you sit down?"

He indicated a chair as he rang for a boy, and presently Jimmie went away with instructions that Miss Keating's photographs were to be returned by the art department at once.

Neither spoke until the boy had laid the package down and had departed for the outer office. Then Hartley rose and placed them on the chair beside her.

"There is another one," she said uncertainly, "the one that I gave you. May I have it back, please?"

"If you wish," he promised as he turned again to his desk to draw from one of the recesses a photograph with a flowing autograph across its face. "Does your anger go so deep that you are unwilling to leave me even this souvenir of a friendship that I shall always treasure in my memory?" he asked. "May I not keep it?"

"To add to your sacrificial heap," she retorted bitterly. "I suppose you must have a goodly collection of those you have flayed."

"I have few photographs—and few friends among the women of the profession," he said simply as he opened a drawer for an envelope. "I had hoped to number you first among those few."

He held the envelope toward her, and for a moment she hesitated. She seemed about to leave the room, but she turned and faced him again.

"You told me once that you never would marry an actress," she said tensely. "Was it because—because you did not want me on the stage that you—that you wrote as you did?"

"I have made no secret of my admiration for you," said Hartley simply, "and I may have made the remark you attribute to me, but it was with no desire to drive you from the stage that I framed my criticism as I did.

"Can't you see," he continued passionately, "the awful position in which I was placed? If I praised your acting I should have made my paper the laughingstock of the town. If I spoke the truth I knew that I should lose you. Every line of the story in this morning's paper was studied that I might speak as warmly as I dared without stultifying the paper."

"It was a little better than the rest," admitted Norma, "but I thought you had been a little kind so that I would not suspect how you had induced the other critics to be so merciless."

"On the contrary, I saw none of the boys," he declared. "I was far too sick at heart to mix with them and hear their ugly comments."

"Was I really as bad as that?" asked the girl wonderingly. "I thought it was because I was an amateur and had the money to hire the theater and the company. They always jump upon the rich amateurs, I had heard. I thought that was it. Was I really as bad as all that?"

"Don't ask me," pleaded Hartley, but the girl persisted.

"You have a good voice and a good presence," he said slowly. "You have some crude ability, but that is all. You lack the spark of genius. Even money cannot buy that."

"Then you think I will never be an actress?" she asked with quivering lip. Hartley shook his head, and she turned away to the window, pressing her brow to the cool pane, against which the sleet rattled angrily.

For several minutes she stood thus looking out into the whirling snow and hail with unseeing eyes, while Hartley silently watched her.

He would have given the world to take her in his arms and comfort her, but instinctively he realized that she must fight her battle alone. She was the one woman in all the world to him and yet he dared not speak.

At last she turned, and now her eyes were smiling, though her lips still were drawn and white.

"Why struggle against unanimous condemnation? You must be right," she conceded. "I never shall make an actress, and you said that you never would marry an actress."

"I'd marry you if you were Bernhardt and Duse in one," he cried, "but I rather would marry just you, dear. Will you have me? In spite of the blow that I have struck your pride can you love me?"

"I hate to marry a wife beater," she said with a wan little smile, "but, Frank, I think I'd rather have your love than to be a great actress, and I don't mind the notice—now."

Jimmie, coming in with a card, turned and fled precipitately.

"I used to think that Mr. Murphy had the best of it, goin' to prize fights an' ball games," he said reflectively, "but I guess it's Mr. Hartley that has the cinch. I'd rather kiss that pippin than know the hull ball team."

Died In Her Coffin.

Mme. Henriette Teyssedre, who recently died at the age of eighty at her residence in the Rue de la Grange-aux-Belles, Paris, was buried in the coffin in which for the last thirty years she slept nightly. When three decades ago her husband died Mme. Teyssedre ordered a coffin of polished oak with silver corner pieces, silk and velvet lining and with images of saints painted on its sides. Her servant found her dead in it.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Nervousness In Women.

When the nerves get out of order the whole system lags in sympathy. The digestive system, the liver and the heart all refuse to do their work. Every nervous woman should eat several times a day. She should eat three meals, have a light luncheon between meals and never omit a warm drink taken just before she goes to bed. Gentle exercise and work are as necessary to the woman with nerves as food and fresh air. An active interest in life will be her salvation, but generally the woman in such a condition thinks she is not interested in a thing in life, so she must keep at work until she develops an interest. A celebrated physician has said: "If you wish to avoid nervousness live with reason, have a purpose in life and work for it. Play joyously, strive not for the unattainable, be not annoyed by trifles, aim to attain neither great knowledge nor great riches, be not self centered, but love the good and thy neighbor as thyself."

Strange Arabian Custom.

In a Tripoli cemetery the gravestones, with bowls or saucers sunken in the cement, indicate that the one who lies buried there was a person of wealth and importance. These receptacles, however, are not for flowers, as one might imagine, but to hold water for birds. The birds are said to bring good fortune, so the drinking basins are not provided wholly for love of them.

OUTING COATS.

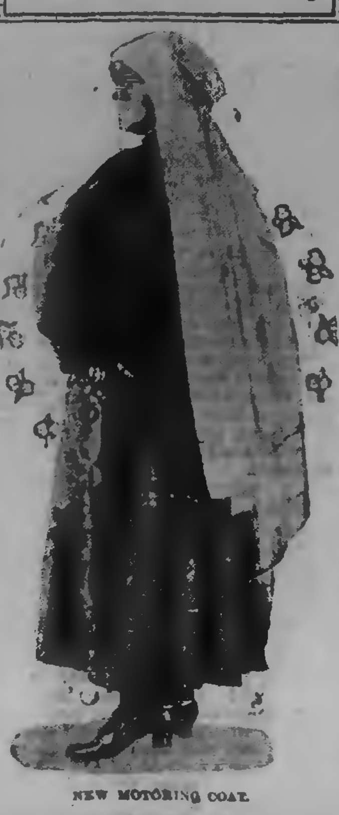
The Correct Wrap For the Woman Who Is Devoted to Motoring.



NEW MOTORING COAT.

With the return of spring and its many possibilities in the way of outdoor sports, the woman who is fond of these recreations casts about for new and suitable clothes.

One of the most useful garments is a long coat which can be used for driving or motoring. Dress and sports coats have extended sleeves.

The modish coats for motoring in cold weather are of heavy mannish mixtures, English and Scotch tweeds, serges, cheviots, gabardine and fancy coatings. It is such materials as these that the Englishwoman who loves to be about in all kinds of weather chooses for her coat. When milder weather comes eponge, linen pongee and the like are heavy enough. Reversible materials have been much used for the heavier coats, but just at present smart ones are lined with silk in Roman stripe.

White corduroy is one of the fabrics that will undoubtedly be very smart all through the spring and summer.

The motor coat pictured here was carried out in imported novelty cheviot and lined with Roman striped silk.

GOWN FOR EASTER.

Wide Range of Fabrics and Designs From Which to Choose.

The shops are full of suggestions for milady's Easter gown.

Clothes in general are departing from their extremely simple lines.

Tunics take on bustle modifications, and plain skirts take on flounces and frills galore. There is a hint at period dress revivals of the middle nineteenth century and some picturesque panniers. The mannish tailored suit is now the exception.

BLUE MOHAIR GOWN.

The gown illustrated here is made of the fashionable mohair and wool in a lovely shade of peacock blue. This frock is a part of a three piece costume and shows one phase of the famous new bustle drapery. A vestlike peplum falls over the drapery from a high waisted beltless skirt top. The kimono blouse has the desired uncut effect over an underblouse of blue embroidered net, finished with a collar of white crepe lisse.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

It isn't as easy to be popular as it is popular to be easy.

It is a savage blow to a boy's self respect to take him on a railroad journey on a half fare ticket.

The man who knew all about women forgot it for his own peace of mind.

Putting yourself in his place might be all right if you are persuaded that you will fit.

Exercising common sense is a most uncommon accomplishment.

The things we miss the most are sometimes those we have noticed the least.

Married men have troubles of their own and occasionally some they don't own.

It isn't so hard to get what we like as it is to keep on liking it.

Over and Over.

In June the old, old story
  Appears as fresh as though
It hadn't been related
  Ten thousand times or so,
And those who listen to it
  And those who hear it through
Don't wear a bored expression
  And call for something new.

With just the proper setting
  Beneath an apple tree,
Where no one but the moon man—
  And he won't tell—can see,
The story has a freshness
  If told with proper art,
And any one will listen
  Who knows the lines by heart.

The stories of the ancients,
  The rhymes of Mother G.,
The pleasant little legend
  About the cherry tree,
For every generation
  And age still have the call,
But there's the old, old story
  That quite outranks them all.

With youth and health and vigor
  It falls upon the ears
And sounds a note compelling
  Like music of the spheres.
Nor does it with the telling
  Grow stale and flat and old.
It sounds as good at forty
  If by the right one told.

Promising Chip.

His Mother (suddenly entering the children's room)—Why, Tommy, you ought to be ashamed to have so untidy a desk! And why have you scattered these scraps of paper all over the floor?

Tommy (with a pencil behind each ear)—I'm playin' I'm carryin' on a real business, same as papa does.

Her Titled Suitor.

"Have you heard it?"

"What?"

"Ethel's engagement is announced by her mother."

"No; but I heard something else."

"What?"

"Her dukelet denounced by her father."

Among Others.

"He thinks the sun rises and sets on that boy of his."

"Well."

"Well?"

"Doesn't it?"

Cause to Desert.

"That man is very absentminded."

"No wonder."

"Why?"

"Well, knowing him, I don't blame his mind."

NEWS NOTES FROM OMEMEE

Special Correspondence.

Omemee, May 19.—Victoria Day Concert! The Oscara Dramatic Stock Company will put on a play in the Coronation Hall on the evening of 25th inst. There will be three acts in the comedy and a number of unique variety stunts will be performed between the acts. This promises to be a splendid performance and should be well patronized by lovers of fun. Reserved seats can be secured at Murray's.

Our baseball team has been invited to the tournament at Bethany on Victoria Day.

Rev. Mr. Robinson preached in the Presbyterian Church on Sunday morning and at Mount Pleasant in the evening.

Major Fee of Lindsay, was home for over the week end.

Mr. A. C. Hodgetts, manager of the Bank of Toronto, has returned from Collingwood, where he attended the Miller-Birnie wedding on Thursday.

The successor of Christ Church, to the Rev. H. Earle, has taken up his work in Omemee parish. On Sunday, Rev. Mr. James, of Craighurst, preached initiatory sermons in all the appointments. His family and household effects have arrived and the Rectory has assumed its usual signs of activity. We extend a welcome to the newcomers.

Mr. Charles McCaffery, jr., of Toronto, was in town over Sunday.

Delegates from Omemee and Emily attended the Liberal Convention at Lindsay on Saturday.

We note the death on Tuesday last of the late Wm. Hetherington, of Fenelon Falls, in his 89th year. He was a pioneer of Verulam Township and besides his wife, leaves 7 sons and 5 daughters. One of the latter is Mrs. John Bennett, of Winnipeg, who, for a number of years lived on Sturgeon Street, Omemee.

Rev. Cecil Best was in Omemee on Thursday evening on his way to his home near Mount Pleasant. We understand Mr. Best has the offer of a good position as assistant pastor in a prominent Winipeg church.

Mr. and Mrs. Dr. Irvin of Lindsay, came down on Sunday in his car, and were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Earle, of Sturgeon Street. At the evening service in the Methodist Church, Mrs. Irvine contributed a very pleasing vocal solo.

Friday will be Empire Day in the schools.

Our streets are very dusty and we are without a water wagon.

The Liberal Conservative convention for South Victoria will be held next Saturday at Lindsay.

Mr. C. Best of Mount Pleasant, was in town the first of the week.

Miss Parsons made a call on friends at Peterborough on Monday.

Dr. Sims of Lindsay made a professional visit the first of the week.

Farmer Injured by Train

CHATHAM, Ont., May 20.—While driving home at nine o'clock yesterday morning William Saddlington, a well-known farmer of Mull, was injured as a result of a collision with an M.C.R. express on a level crossing just north of Blenheim. Mr. Saddlington was driving a team of horses attached to a wagon. Both horses were killed and the wagon completely demolished. Mr. Saddlington was hurled a great distance and both of his legs and both of his arms were broken. He was taken back to Blenheim where he now lies in a very critical condition. His surgeons state that he cannot recover.

"HOIST" FOR C.N.R. BILL DEFEATED IN HOUSE

Government Has Majority of 47 in First Division on Aid

OTTAWA, May 20.—By a majority of 47 the Government last night was upheld in the first vote upon the Canadian Northern legislation. E. M. Macdonald's motion for the six months' hoist was defeated on division. Yeas, 64; nays, 111. It was a party vote, except that Messrs. Bennett and Nickle voted for the amendment, and Mr. Charlton (Lib., Norfolk) voted with the Government.

Mr. W. F. Maclean (Con., S. York) opposed the six months' hoist, declaring that all thinking men of the country united in saying that the question before the House was one of urgent importance. He thought the legislation brought down by the Government was a long step in the direction of public ownership, but favored the Government immediately obtaining an option on the balance of the common stock of the Canadian Northern Railway Co. so that the system might be nationalized at any time and linked up with the Intercolonial as a great transcontinental railway.

Mr. Verville (Labor, Maisonneuve) said the Borden Government was fond of juggling with millions. Last session it was $55,000,000 and this session $45,000,000. He argued in favor of nationalizing the railways and pointed to the success of nationalization in Europe and Australia.

Mr. Foster ( Con., Kings, N.S.), while supporting the Government, urged that the resolution be so amended as to compel the C.N.R. to withdraw their steamers from the North Atlantic combine. With these two vessels to begin with, the Government might charter others and thus secure lower ocean rates.

Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux described the Government's proposal as "iniquitous legislation being forced through an uninformed Parliament in the dying days of the session." He said it was common knowledge that Mackenzie and Mann were millionaires. It was common gossip in Montreal that they had exploited vast holdings in real estate adjacent to the Mount Royal tunnel. The great banking houses, Morgan & Co., and Lazare & Co. of New York had combined with Mackenzie and Mann in this speculation whose profits aggregated not less than $20,000,000. Why did not the Government get as security some of these "golden acres in Montreal?"

Mr. Charlton (Norfolk) said he could not support the motion for a six months' hoist, but would vote to have the Prime Minister's resolution considered in committee of the whole House, clause by clause. He read from Hansard to show that Mr. Borden and Sir Wilfrid Laurier agreed that the Canadian Northern system must be finished, that the system must not be allowed to collapse, and that Canadian credit must be saved from the blow it would receive through a transcontinental railway going into liquidation. Much of the discussion which had taken place since had concerned itself with discussing Mackenzie and Mann. It was said that they must be eliminated because they were not railway men but mere contractors. Nearly all the great railway men on this continent had begun at the foot of the ladder.

There was quite a lively time in committee over the Mackenzie and Mann resolutions after the division earlier in the evening. Mr. Carvell moved that Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann personally guarantee the payment of certain obligations under the contract as well as Mackenzie and Mann Co., Limited. This renewed the old dispute as to the private fortunes of Sir William and Sir Donald and their obligation to risk the same in support of the Canadian Northern.

Assertions and counter assertions were vigorously made by Government and Opposition members. The fight for the Carvell motion being led by Messrs. Carvell, German, Graham, and Lemieux. Mr. Meighen took up the cudgels for the Government. The resolution will be further discussed to-day.

Was Papal Countess.

KINGSTON, Ont., May 20.—Mrs. Nancy Hutchinson, a native of Prescott, died at the House of Providence. She held the rank of papal countess, conferred by Pope Pius IX. Her father was at one time chief engineer of the dockyard at Woolwich.

Quebec Forests Burning.

MONTREAL, May 20.—The city was overhung by a pall yesterday, caused by the smoke from big forest fires in the Laurentian Mountains. While a great amount of timber, it is expected, will be destroyed, so far there had been no loss of life.

Vendor of Stallion Charged.

GALT, Ont., May 20.—Acting for Joseph Gale of the Breslau road, the farmer who was recently attacked by a ferocious stallion and severely injured, M. A. Secord, K.C., has laid information against Edward Smith of Port Rowan, who sold him the animal. The charge is a criminal one. The complainant's claim that the stallion was known to be unmanageable, and that before being sold to Gale it had vented its ferocity on those handling it.

Prof. Kirkpatrick Dead.

MONCTON, N.B., May 20. — Prof. Kirkpatrick of Queen's University, Kingston, who came here in connection with the preliminary work for the Prince Edward Island car ferry, died here suddenly yesterday.

His condition was dangerous and he was unsuccessfully operated upon for intestinal obstruction.

TISZA IS WOUNDED.

Hungarian Premier and Adversary Fail To Make Up.

BUDAPEST, Hungary, May 20.—Count Stephan Tisza, the Hungarian Premier, and Stephan Rakovsky, a member of the Lower House, fought a duel with rapiers here yesterday afternoon. The adversaries fought five bouts and both were wounded.

Count Tisza was cut in the right arm and Deputy Rakovsky sustained a six-inch superficial slit in the abdomen. The duel thereupon was stopped, but the duelists left the field without effecting a reconciliation.

The duel grew out of an altercation which took place in the committee room of the Hungarian Parliament on May 14, when the Premier challenged Committeeman Rakovsky to settle their differences on the field of honor.

Woman Stricken After Funeral.

ST. CATHARINES, Ont., May 20.—Edward E. Healy was buried in Victoria Lawn cemetery Monday afternoon, and members of the family who had been attending the funeral had left the cemetery for their homes when the stepmother, Mrs. Mary McCallum, from whose home the funeral took place, toppled over in her chair and fell dead. She had been apparently in robust health. She was the widow of the late Peter McCallum and had been twice married. She was also a sister of Ald. O. M. P. Gibson and leaves three daughters and three sons.

Mill Dam Blown Up.

KINGSTON, April 20. — At Mellburn, thirty miles from here, a big sensation was caused by the blowing up of the mill dam owned by John Jackson. This is the second time in a year that it has been destroyed. The wires and battery used to set off the dynamite were found. Mr. Jackson will ask the Government to have the case investigated.

Son Saves Father's Life.

KINGSTON, May 20. — Samuel Stinson was saved from being gored to death by a bull by his 14-year-old son and his dog. He was down on the ground with the bull attacking him when the son grabbed the angry animal by a ring in its nose, led it away, and the dog made an attack by biting the legs of the bull.

McMullen Acquitted.

TORONTO, May 20.—After about ten minutes' consideration a jury before Judge Coatsworth, in the Sessions Court yesterday, returned a verdict freeing former County Constable James McMullen from a charge of forgery and perjury, which had been preferred against him at the conclusion of the Davis-Wettlaufer case about three weeks ago in the non-jury assizes court. It was charged that McMullen, who had been employed as a private detective on the case, wrote three letters, signing the name of Mrs. Wettlaufer.

Judge Coatsworth, when addressing the jury, said that he could not see how they could return any other verdict except that of "not guilty."

Lady Bulyea Very Ill.

EDMONTON, May 20.—Following an attack of nervous prostration two weeks ago, Mrs. Bulyea, wife of the Lieutenant-Governor of Alberta, has never rallied, and physicians in consultation yesterday agree that they could do nothing to relieve her condition, which is very serious.

Bonar Law's Mother Dead.

LONDON, May 20.—Mrs. Jane Law of Glasgow, the widow of the late Rev. James Law of New Brunswick, and mother of Rt. Hon. Andrew Bonar Law, the leader of the Unionist party in the House of Commons, died at Bath.

Appeals Are Dismissed.

OTTAWA, May 20.—At the conclusion of argument in the Supreme Court yesterday afternoon, in the Chateauguay election case, both appeals were dismissed. The result is that the petition and counter-petition will go to trial on their merits. The first case heard was the appeal by Hon. Mr. Fisher against James Morris, M.P., the sitting member, on preliminary objections.

Saved Six Infants.

MONTREAL, May 20.—The timely arrival of Special Constable Maurice Galitzain and District Chief Marin before six burning cottages on St. Lawrence street enabled them by catching the children flung from the upstairs windows by frantic parents to save six infants. The fire broke out while the inmates were asleep, and spread so rapidly that they were cut off.

Villa Routs Federals.

EL PASO, Texas, May 20.—Gen. Villa has defeated a Federal force of 5,000 men at Paredon, according to a message received here last yesterday, from Isidore Fabela, acting Minister of Foreign Relations in Carranza's Cabinet. The date of the engagement was not given.

Hindus To Be Deported.

OTTAWA, May 20.—The Dominion Immigration Department has issued instructions to its officers at Victoria to prevent the landing of the Hindu party coming over on the Komagata Maru.

In case they succeed in getting ashore they will be arrested and held for deportation.

It is said that the hands may be speedily whitened by rubbing them well for three nights successively with sweet almond oil and then dusting over them as much fine chalk as they will retain.

Agricultural Notes

Following the recommendation of the Colonization Branch of the Department, more farmers are hiring help by the year, thus doing much to solve the farm labor problem.

Reports of co-operative work in the destruction of weeds show that the growing of rape has been fairly successful in eradicating Perennial Sow Thistle and Twitch Grass.

Experiments on the Agricultural College plots show that a mixture of barley and oats will give better results in feeding than either one of these grains when fed alone.

The Department has charge of the certificating of stationery engineers, of whom 1,136 were examined last year, making the total number of certificated engineers nearly 8,000.

Two new varieties of oats have been developed by the College which ripen earlier and give heavier yields than the average varieties. These are O.A.C. No. 72 and O.A.C. No 3.

In addition to grants to the Winter Fairs at Guelph and Ottawa, the Department assisted twelve local horse shows and forty-four poultry shows on behalf of the live stock industry.

Short courses in stock and seed judging are increasing in popularity, and eighty-eight such courses were held last year under the auspices of the Department of Agriculture.

A new Field Husbandry Building for the Ontario Agricultural College one room of which accommodates 400 students, will be ready for occupation during the coming academic year.

Winners in acre-profit competitions conducted in twenty-six counties were given a two weks' course at the Ontario Agricultural College in seed and stock judging, free of all expense.

The spraying of fruit trees is now so widely practiced that where once one factory was sufficient to meet the demand for supplies, there are now nine companies engaged in the business.

The freshman class at the Ontario Agricultural College for the current year totalled 225, an increase of 40 per cent. over the previous year and practically double that of ten years ago.

For curly bacon cut it very thin and half cook it in boiling water, then cut it, fasten in shape with a toothpick and broil it over the fire.

KILL THE FLIES IN YOUR HOUSE NOW

Toronto's Medical Health Officer says: "If you come across any flies in your house kill them now." Therefore all good housekeepers should commence using WILSON'S FLY PADS early and continue their use through the season.

Remember that every ten-cent packet of WILSON'S FLY PADS will kill more flies than three hundred sheets of sticky paper.

EAST CITY AND GARBAGE SYSTEM

Prosecution Will Follow Says Sanitary Inspector

The alleged reason for the cause of the East City residents refusing to accept the garbage collection system for East City has been unearthed. Sanitary Inspector Spence informed the Review that from Hunter Street to Hazlitt Street, the banks of the Otonabee were a dumping ground for cans, rubbish and much other refuse. This is an infraction of the Public Health Act.

The bank of the river is in a most unsanitary condition. This is due to the residents making use of the banks for a dumping ground.

"They can well afford to keep their yards in good condition," said Mr. Spence.

"This matter has got to stop and without further warning I have placed a man on the scene and a police court case will result for the first one caught dumping garbage on the banks of the river."

The man who deserves a medal for a clean, modern yard in this city is a Mr. White of Bolivar Street. His yard is a perfect one. This opinion was advanced by Mr. Spence when commenting on the prevailing conditions.

GEO. BALL TO MAKE UNIFORMS

His Tender of $548 is Accepted in Committee

On motion of Ald. Dobbin and Ald. Anderson, the tender of Geo. Ball for supplying firemen's uniforms was accepted by the Fire, Water and Light Committee last night.

The specifications called for 17 coats, 17 vests, 34 pair of trousers, 1 extra fireman's pea jacket, and an extra uniform and overcoat for the chief. The tenders were:

| | |
|---|---|
| Geo Ball.. .. .. .. .. | $548.00 |
| George Evans .. .. | 575.00 |
| T. L. Anderson .. .. | 575.00 |
| Reid Bros.. .. .. .. .. | 416.00 |

As the last tender did not include the overcoat for the Chief or the extra fireman's coat and their goods are not made in this city as requested by the specifications, the application could not be considered.

Asked if Mr. Ball's work was satisfactory, the chief responded, "perfectly so."

I suppose every other woman is wearing blue this year because she wants a color and she's afraid of what the neighbors will say if she does tango.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

MAYOR BULLER'S IDEA.

Editor Review:

Dear Sir,—To amount to anything as a city we must have ideals and ideas. Mayor Buller is to be congratulated on the idea of a beautiful Riverside Park and Drive. One can easily compare with the present appearance of the place with the beauty of this scheme connected by a pleasant driveway connecting along the river through Engleburn Park.

The press is the best means for the citizens in private life to bring an idea to the public mind. I am encouraged to express the following plan through the effect of a letter written to the press about a year ago in regard to the Pulmotor. Almost every idea expressed in that letter has been carried out and it has already borne fruit in the saving of life.

Anyone with half an eye can see that business is progressing westward as fast as possible, and what we will require ten years from now we can not conceive. But we can plan for it.

One thing certain we will need wider streets in our business section and if the following plan were impossible it would not be expressed.

I suggest the formation in the centre of the city of a BROADWAY, and this can be a double Broadway in the form of an X with the centre at Aylmer and Charlotte Streets.

George Street can not be widened nor the east side of Aylmer, but the west side of Aylmer from Murray to Dalhousie and the south side of Charlotte from George to Bethune and the north side of Charlotte for a block or two beyond can be widened without interference with buildings of much value except Mr. Gillespie's creamery, not yet constructed.

On the south side of Charlotte if possession were obtained of all land in a line with the White House door as one building and another gradually fell down in the course of a few years we would have a street worth while.

The expense could be met in many ways. For example, a lot 100 feet deep facing on Charlotte Street would be more valuable 90 feet deep on a street 10 feet wider. The lot opposite it would also increase and inasmuch as this lot uninterfered with has increased, owner should pay in part for it in the form of increased taxes whereas the owner who has given a few feet to the public could be given a decreased assessment for a number of years.

This scheme is possible now, but once a building like Turnbull's or the new Customs House is built on the present street line and it immediately becomes impossible. No matter what it costs it is merely the highest form of investment for the public benefit.

Signed respectfully,
E. V. FREDERICK.
300 Charlotte Street.

CHILDREN'S EYESIGHT

It is astonishing the number of children who suffer from the effects of eyestrain, and many of them are unjustly blamed for being unambitious or mentally stupid. It has been shown by authentic investigation under municipal direction that from 20 to 30 per cent. of the children in public schools have defective vision and should wear glasses.

We make a specialty of examining children's sight by the most improved scientific methods, and if your child does not need glasses, we will tell you so frankly, and make no charge for the examination. But if your child should need glasses, we will guarantee that the glasses we fit are the proper correction, and will give perfect results. Our 10 years of successful optical business in this city is the guarantee we offer you.

We carry a special line of children's spectacle frames in heavy weight, in Gold Filled and Aluminum.

WANT SHOP LICENSES TO BE CUT OFF

City Association Urged to Initiate Campaign

PARTY POLITICS

Not in Platform of County Temperance Association

At a meeting of the Peterboro County Temperance Association, attended by some one hundred delegataes from practically all the municipalities of the county, held Tuesday, forenoon and afternoon in the Public Library, the delegates concluded their discussion by pledging themselves unanimously through a standing vote to cut out party politics in the approaching elections and work for the election of the candidates of which ever party takes the most advanced stand on the temperance question. The delegates furthermore pledged themselves by a standing vote to return to their municipalities and work through their primaries for the election of delegates to the party conventions who will work for the nomination of candidates at the conventions favorable to advanced temperance legislation.

The Executive of the Association was instructed to interview the candidates immediately after their nomination and obtain from them signed statements showing exactly where they stand on the temperance question. In the event of neither party bringing forth suitable candidates the Executive was instructed to call temperance conventions in both ridings with the view of taking action to promote the interests of the temperance party. The Convention discussed the platform of the Dominion Alliance relating to political action, clause by clause and adopted it in full.

The Convention was most representative in character. Delegates were present from Havelock, Norwood, Lakefield, Peterboro, Keene, Warsaw, Bridgenorth, Selwyn, Indian River, Bethel, Westwood, Zion, Stewart's Hall, Young's Point, and other points throughout the two ridings. One from Apsley arrived late.

The Convention throughout was harmonious and enthusiastic. The importance of the thorough organization of the temperance forces was emphasized again and again. The meeing was thrown open to the fullest possible expression of opinion. To insure the question at issue being discussed by both party conventions in both ridings the Executive was instructed to forward a communication to both parties to be read at the nomination conventions. This resolution expressed in full the attitude of the convention.

Attitude of Convention.

It was as follows:

1. "That this Convention reaffirms as its platform the object for which the Dominion Alliance stands, namely, "The Total Suppression of the Traffic in Intoxicating Beverages," and declares it to be the duty of the Ontario Legislature to enact legislation prohibiting the liquor traffic as far as is within the power of a Provincial Legislative Assembly.

2. "That this Convention calls upon all friends of the temperance cause to rise above party preference and affiliation in earnest effort, on every opportunity to secure the nomination and election to the Legislative Assembly, of men who will support the most progressive temperance legislation proposed, regardless of party consideration, and that this can only be attained by loyally standing by candidates who are known, avowed, and trustworthy supporters of the Alliance policy."

"As we represent both political parties we would prefer to support the candidate of the party to which we belong and therefore, we express the hope that both parties in both ridings in the county will place in the field, candidates who will undertake, if elected, to vote for the abolition of the bar, shop and club license, and who will also undertake to support all advanced temperance legislation by whichever party it is introduced.

"Should only one temperance candidate be nominated in each riding we shall feel in honor bound to support him provided his record is acceptable to the temperance interests, and if neither party places a temperance man in the field our executive is instructed to immediately call riding conventions and arrange for the taking of such further action as may be in the best interests of the temperance cause."

A resolution was passed urging the members of the city of Peterboro Temperance Association to initiate a campaign for the cutting off of the shop licenses in the city of Peterboro. It was pointed out that the sale of bottled liquor is now confined to the retail shops and that these are the main source of supply for the local option districts surrounding the city of Peterboro. In the event of a vote being taken it can be carried by a bare majority.

Dr. W. S. McTavish of the Dominion Alliance was present and reported on the progress of the temperance sentiment throughout the Province. The meeting was presided over by the President of the County Association, H. B. Cowan. A. B. Cunningham acted as Secretary.

SOLDIERS OF THE KING

The following orders were read last night to the regiment:

The regiment, with both bands and stretcher bearers and signallers, will assemble at the Armouries on Sunday at 9 o'clock for the purpose of attending divine service with the 15th Regiment of Brockville, at St. John's Church. They will leave the Armouries at 9.30.

The following subalterns have been detailed for the guard of honor for the Royal party, consisting of H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught and party on June 1st: Lt. K. G. Leck and Lt. A. E. Hagerman.

The following N.C.O's are detailed for duty on the guard of honor: Col. Sergts., Succee, Dodd, Howarth and Sergt. Davis.

The commanding officer has been pleased to make the following promotions.

E. Co.—To be Sergt., Pte. Ellis.

To be Sergt. provisionally, Corp. Lightfoot.

To be Corp. provisionally, Pte. Morgan.

D. Walker, Major Adjutant.

The regiment were served with tunics and helmets preparatory for the parade on Sunday.

The Regiment were out in strength of fully three hundred last night. Their work was favorably commented on by the commanding officer.

The camp at Petawawa this year promises to be one of the best yet. Everything is being prepared for the comfort of the men, with great care.

Remember that pressing is not ironing. The iron should be hot enough to remove the creases and should be passed very slowly over the goods, or held where it needs filling in.

It looks as if the girls this year had tried to get just as bright colors as the soldiers. Why they've even stolen the Kilties' plaid.

INJURED FIREMAN TO RECEIVE PAY

Sprained His Ankle While on Duty at Hall

NEW ALARM BOXES

The meeting of the Fire, Water and Light Committee last evening, at which were present Chairman Alderman Green, Aldermen Anderson, Stratton, Duffus, Dobbin, Saunders and Fire Chief Howard, decided to place new alarm boxes at the corner of Lock and Princess and Park and Charlotte, the last being recommended by Police Chief Thompson, who includes that point on the beat of one of his men.

Pay for Fireman.

Another question which attracted the meeting's attention was a report from Chief Howard in regard to a fireman spraining his ankle while in discharge of his duty and a possibility of his being idle for about a month. There is no clause in the by-law which would permit this man to receive compensation and the Chief wished to know what course he would take. After a short discussion it was decided that he should receive his pay during his absence from the Fire Hall, and that the Chief have him report to work when the doctor in attendance deems it advisable.

When the Bell Telephone Company, at the request of the City Council, commenced removing their poles of George Street, the wires on the fire alarm system which had been on these poles, had likewise to be removed. The batteries of the system are handling about as much wire as possible, thus it would be impossible to string the wires on another street. The Mayor and Alderman Green had a short conference and as immediate action was necessary, they decided at once that they would endeavor to obtain permission from the Machine Telephone Company to use one of their vacant conduits, and when this permission was given they immediately went ahead with the work. In reporting the matter to the Committee last evening, Alderman Green stated that the work and material would cost about $600.00, and when he told the Mayor that the Committee hadn't the funds to pay for the work, His Worship told him to go ahead.

After some discussion a resolution was passed confirming the action of the chairman and the Mayor, and reefnirrg and referring it to the City Council.

STRANGE HERMIT LIVES IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Writer Tells of a Visit to the Resident of Rock Bound Canyon in the Muskine Valley.

Far up in Northern British Columbia lies the Muskine Valley, down which flows peacefully the river of that name, says a writer in The Toronto World. Four hundred miles away I had heard of it from a Hudson Bay Co. factor, and lured by his account of its beauty and of the "Better Land" Indians—true aboriginals—who lived there, had travelled single-handed to visit it.

It is a lovely, if a neglected country, and a happy time I spent in exploring and hunting there.

There was this curious thing about it, that the Indian guides never would consent to my going up to the head of the valley.

"Spirits of long dead tribes haunt the place! It is bad medicine to go there, where a band of Crees was killed in battle by Muskine Indians!" Thus they dissuaded me.

Four months passed by, and I again approached the Muskine Valley, and from above its head.

This time I was driving a team of husky dogs, who were drawing a sleigh-load of furs. I was treading on forbidden ground. The lowering sky was threatening one of those sudden northern storms, and I wished to cross the valley and Muskine river before it came on, so I kept urging my dogs by whip and word. The short day was almost closing when I crossed the river one mile above the canyon. I could plainly hear the roar at that distance; as soon as I crossed the river I headed for a clump of spruce trees to the right and at the foot of the canyon. Suddenly, something seemed to rouse the dogs, they threw up their muzzles into the air, uttering loud howls, and increased their pace.

Swinging around the bluff of timber at the foot of the canyon, I saw a sight that caused me to drop my whip and utter a cry of astonishment. About three hundred feet up the canyon, where a little strip of woods jutted out from the rock wall, stood a little cabin built of logs, and in the doorway, with a large wolfhound on either side of him, stood an old white man, his snowy hair falling over his shoulders.

I continued gazing at him while the huskies, taking advantage of my having dropped the lines, bounded up to the door of the cabin.

I was brought back to my senses by hearing a voice say: "Stranger, what brings you here?" Advancing, I replied that I hoped I was not intruding, as I thought I was the only white man within hundreds of miles of the spot.

He replied by asking me if I would accept his hospitality for the night. The long-threatened storm now broke in all its fury, howling through the canyon like some giant whistle. Hastily unharnessing the dogs and giving them their supper, I entered the cabin. The interior of the cabin was lighted by the huge fire-place which stood at one end, while on the walls were hanging pelts of almost every kind of fur to be found in the north; bear and wolf skins covered the floor, and the place seemed altogether comfortable.

The old man waved me to a seat, while he prepared the evening meal.

I tried to study his heavily-lined, sorrowful features, and draw some conclusions as to what had brought him to this out-of-the-way place. I was positive, however, that the features spoke of benevolence.

After supper, the old man drew his chair up towards the fire and I stretched myself on a huge bearskin on the other side. Drawing my tobacco pouch from my jacket, I passed it on to the old man, and he filled his.

With our pipes alight, we smoked in silence, the two huge wolf-hounds lying at their master's feet.

I noticed and wondered at it, that there were tears in his eyes, as the Old Man addressed me.

"Boy, he exclaimed, you are wondering how I came here; what brought me here. Time alone heals heart-wounds! I will tell you my story. You will be the first and the last to hear it, for soon must I part from this house of clay.

"You are the first white man I have seen, since I turned my back on the civilized world., twenty-seven years ago. You will be my guest tonight, filling the blank of 27 years of the world's history.

"I was born in the town of W—— in the state of Vermont. My father was a lawyer of good reputation, and had a profitable business. My mother, was a gentlewoman, who interested herself in my father's affairs, helping him in his daily task, making our home one to be proud of. My sister and myself, the only children, were beloved by both of our parents.

"My father wished me to study law. Being a little impulsive, I told him I wished to become a doctor. He finally gave his consent, and I plunged into my studies; everywhere success awaited me. I became very popular, and all this tended to make me a little proud, and over-confident. At the age of twenty-two I graduated and was ready to commence life's battle.

"I hung out my shingle in my own home town; it was not long till I had a large practice, which gave me a good income.

"For two years I practiced in my home town; then came the call to a large hospital in another city. I accepted. Again I prospered and became acquainted with several society people; this brought me into another circle.

"One morning I was called to a prominent society man's house; his daughter had been taken suddenly ill with typhoid fever. When I arrived I found the patient delirious; there and then I fought one of the hardest battles with death in my career.

"I spent hours beside my patient, neglecting all others. I fell in love with her. To make a long story short, she recovered, and I found my love returned, or at least I thought so. As soon as she was strong enough to travel, her father took her away to a southern clime; she remained away for six months.

"How I longed to meet her! A few nights after her return at a ball given in her honor, I asked her to marry me. She told me she did not love me, and had just amused herself with me.

"All my hopes and dreams were dashed down to the lowest depths.

"I resigned my position, and went abroad. There I fell in bad company; wine and cards brought me to ruin; my father was disgusted with me. Returning to America, I immediately came west, and spent another two years of a reckless life.

"I woke one morning sober, and there came to my mind vividly the thought that all the world were my enemies. A few days before I had met an old trapper, who had generated far into the Canadian north. He was leaving town in a few days for the frontier, and I agreed to accompany him. I made several trips with him.

"He died and left me his outfit and a store of woodland secrets. I had never once communicated with my people, and after my old friend the trapper died I spent several years in different parts of the country.

"One day I set out towards the north with the idea of finding some little spot to pass the remainder of my days in. I knew the Indians of the north better than any other white man. So I returned to the north for good, bringing with me a good supply of drugs. It would take hours to tell of that trip.

"Two years later saw me enter the Muskine Valley, and camp at the foot of Rock Bound Canyon.

"Disease was rife amongst the Indians, so I set to work with the few remaining drugs I had and saved man: a life, winning their gratitude. From the Indians I learned that white men never visited the country; here, I thought to myself, is the long sought-for place. When I told them of my intentions to live and stay with them always, their joy was unlimited, so I built this cabin, lived the life of an Indian—the life that nature alone can give.

"When the trading post 400 miles away was established, the Indians made an annual trip to bring me supplies and secure some for themselves. When the few white men began to come into the country, the Indians always told them to keep away from this spot as the bygone spirits of their tribe hovered there.

"This was only a blind to protect me, for as the years went by I hated the thought of the white man coming. But when I saw you standing at the entrance of the Canyon today, there came back to me the rush of bygone days, for although I have hungered for news of the world for twenty-seven years, I have lived in a world of my own."

As the old man finished he buried his face in his hands and sobbed aloud, the two wolf hounds uttering low growls.

After a time he calmed, and began eagerly to ask questions of the world's doings.

I had to tell him of all the changes that had taken place in those years, and as he listened, his face seemed to grow young again. When I hunted out a newspaper seven months old, he laughed boyishly. The night was far spent when we sought rest.

I remained with him several days, and when I asked him to accompany me back to civilization his face grew sad as he replied: "I will not live to see the grass grow green; there is no question about it." He smiled and added: "Remember, I have been a man of medicine for many years."

"I have been happy in my solitude. I regained my manhood that I once lost, and your coming has made me happy. My Indian friends will lay me in my last cabin when the time comes to answer 'The Great Call.'"

So I left him, and have no doubt that as he foretold, so it happened to him.

This is probably the explanation of all the wild talk heard in the north country respecting a mysterious "Old Man of the Mountains."

Kidneys Wrong?—

If they are you are in danger. When through weakness or disease the kidneys fail to filter the impurities from the blood, trouble comes at once. Backache, Rheumatism, Sciatica, Gravel, Diabetes, Gall Stones and the deadly Bright's Disease are some of the results of neglected kidneys. Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills contain a most effective diuretic which strengthens and stimulates the kidneys so that they do their work thoroughly and well. Try

His Missing Hat.

Dr. Murray McFarlane, the Toronto specialist, enjoys a good story, and the fact that the joke is on himself in no way detracts from his zest in the telling of it. A story he has been telling with great gusto lately has to do with a patient of his who is gifted with a vivid imagination and rather addicted to exaggeration. Give him a valley of dry bones and in a few days, in the telling of it, he will have a wealthy and prosperous nation.

Leaving the doctor's house one day he took the doctor's hat in mistake for his own. A week later he was back and told the doctor of a strange experience he had had.

"The other day," he said, "I was in a barber shop, and some old tramp took my hat and left me the worst specimen I ever saw. It was three or four years old, and dirty and greasy; and, believe me, doctor, it was absolutely alive!"

Record Apple Crop.

A record breaking year for the apple crop, is the expectation of Mr. G. H. Vroom, chief fruit inspector for the Province of Nova Scotia. Mr. Vroom bases his hopes on a well-kept record of other years, which shows that the winter preceding the great crop of 1911 was almost identical, day by day, with the winter just past. This condition, he said, being especially marked during March and April.

Death Rate In Quebec Mines.

The death rate in Quebec mines for 1912 was 3.47 per 1,000. The figure is based, as is correct practice, on an average of 300 days of work; that is, the date is actually 3.47 per 300,000 shifts worked.

A Speedier Step.

The chief was berating a patrolman.

"Why did you let that crook get away from you?" he demanded. "You saw him enter the house?"

"Yes, chief."

"And you saw him come out?"

"Yes, chief."

"Then, why didn't you dance right after him?"

"I did dance after him," protested the patrolman, "but you see he was using the tango, and I was using the hesitation."—Judge.

Hard Work.

Bobby was spending the afternoon at his aunt's and for some minutes had been gazing out of the window in a painfully thoughtful sort of way.

"What makes you so serious, Bobby?" asked his aunt.

"Why, ma told me that I must remember not to ask for anything to eat, and I'm trying to remember it."—Union Signal.

Among Friends.

Patience—Every one at the meeting said I had a perfect figure.

Patrice—Indeed! How many women were there?

"Just fifteen."

"Well, I read in the paper only yesterday that only about one person in fifteen has perfect eyesight."—Yonkers Statesman.

Foresight.

"You say you are educating your boy for a theatrical career?"

"Yes."

"An actor or producer?"

"No. I want him to become prosperous as well as prominent. I am going to make a ticket speculator of him."—Washington Star.

His Hosts.

"What did the detectives do with you?"

"They acted like a hospitable club friend."

"How was that?"

"They took me to the grill room."—Baltimore American.

Love's Amusement.

"I wonder why it is said that 'all the world loves a lover.'"

"I guess it's because the world thinks it's such fun to hear his letters read in court."—Catholic Standard and Times.

Selfish Interest.

"Brother Johnson, will you pray for rain?"

"I'm afraid my heart wouldn't be in that prayer, Parson Goodson. My roof leaks."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

No Wonder.

Patience—They say her husband has a passion for music.

Patrice—That's right. Every time she plays or sings he flies into one.—New York American.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

REAL TROUBLE.

Oh, speak not of trouble and prate not of woe,
Though thickly they come to your mitt;
Don't mention distress, though it falls more or less
The earmarks to bear of a hit!
The worries that come from your dealings with men
Like molehills to mountains appear,
As pygmies seem other annoyances when
The typewriter gets on its ear.

Perhaps you are writing a beautiful ode
On spring, which is always a mark,
And getting a twist with your pliable wrist
That flashes the genuine spark,
And then without warning or notice by mail
Perhaps as the mooring draws near
And as you are making the harbor full sail
The typewriter gets on its ear.

The letters make only one-half of the mark—
The ribbon has gone on the blink,
The keys commence sticking, the tension is kicking,
Your fingers are covered with ink.
You call for a screwdriver, borrow a wrench,
Examine it bottom and top,
And straightway your table resembles a bench
That blooms in a carpenter shop.

Of all of the meanness, contemptible, low,
And calling for words that are strong,
A typewriter lame is severely the same
When things in its inwards go wrong.
And when you have put it together again
You find it is still out of gear.
Oh, it is the mischief and several things when
The typewriter gets on its ear.

No Class.

"Is your husband an artist?"

"Well, he is a sign painter."

"That is hardly art."

"I am afraid not, because there is a good living in it."

And She Worried.

"I'd go through fire and water for you," he said.

"Yes," she sadly replied as she got a whiff of his breath, "but you don't seem to be able to give up firewater for me. I told you I'd break our engagement the next time you came around in this condition. Go!"

Later the poor girl worried, for she had an idea that she might have driven him to the dogs.

Her Opinion.

"What do you think of me?" chirped the rah-rah boy.

"What do you think of yourself?" replied the spinster.

"I am fresh and unspoiled," proudly announced the rah-rah boy.

"There is no doubt about your being fresh," quietly replied the spinster, preparing to move away.

Raised a Doubt.

"What are you looking so blue about, old man?"

"I used to think I was as bright as other people."

"Ain't you?"

"Well, they accepted me on the jury this morning."

Earning His Board.

"Will your dog bite?"

"Of course he will."

"Then why do you keep him?"

"You didn't suppose a dog was a parlor ornament, did you?"

Natural Gift.

He—That historian had a marvelous memory for details.

She—They say he inherited it from his mother. She was the greatest gossip of her time.

The First Offense.

He loved her more than treasure,
Than could be told by tongue,
So you can take his measure
And guess that he was young.

The Point of View.

Brother William—Yes; Deacon Jones is a good man.

Sporty Ike—Who did he ever lick?

Just Good Business.

"He claims to have no vices, and yet he stole an umbrella."

"He calls that a virtue."

Tipping the Headsman.

Ancient usage in England has a peculiarly consecrating effect in the matter of tips and fees. Horace Walpole records the astonishment of George I. when told that he must give guineas to the servant of the ranger of his park for bringing him a brace of carp out of his own pond. Apparently everybody in England is at some time or other justified in demanding a fee unless it be the monarch. When Tait became archbishop of Canterbury and met the queen he breathed a sigh of relief on at last encountering a person to whom he had not to pay something. According to Bishop Burnet, a man used to have to give a tip in order to be decapitated. He tells the story of Lord Russell when under sentence of death for high treason asking what he ought to give the executioner. "I told him 10 guineas. He said, with a smile, it was a pretty thing to give a fee to have his head cut off."

Push, but No Pull.

Sir Oliver Lodge claims that there is no such thing as pull applied to bodies—that is, that an engine, for instance, never pulls a train, but really pushes it. A little excursion into what he means will readily convince the skeptical that he is right. Take this example: The coupling of the engine extends behind that of the car following and does actually shove it forward. The reason it comes forward is because its parts do not separate—that is, it has cohesion.

But the actual force administered is that of a push and not a pull. Take a rope pulling a safe up to a window. It is wrapped under the safe, and that is the part that is exerting the force and urging the safe upward, the other parts of the rope simply sticking together. When we pull our coats off we really push them off, for the force is exerted behind the object in the direction of motion, and, as every one knows, that is called a push.

So if we really desire to speak in chastely scientific terms we should say push our coats off, push our hats off, push a safe up through a window.—Chicago Record-Herald.

HOMESTERS SCORED TWICE; CHAMPIONS WERE HELD BACK

Blounts Band Biffed Bingles and Bungled Not ---Senators Were Dangerous Only in the First

THE best thing the slugging Senators seemed able to do yesterday was to wear a beaten path from the bench and return, as Louie Schettler let them down with two hits, and was only in serious "slabancial" difficulties in the opening frame of a game which the Petes won by the shut-out route, the final tally being 2-0. On the other hand Kane, who hurled his first game of the season, was no lemon, and in the seven innings he pitched, the Petes garnered only five hits. Four of them came in bunches of two, however, and that sort of overshadowed his otherwise good work. It was a real tidy game, and the ladies, who were out in large numbers, latest of finery and nightingale voices, enjoyed the sport immensely, as did the good following of the harsher class. Ottawa backed up Kane in grand style, and not one boot was credited to them. The locals had three boots, one in the first which threatened to cause trouble, another in the third which did not figure, and one in the fifth which did no damage.

Local fans will seldom see better box work than that provided by Schettler. He had everything that makes a twirler effective from the stuff on the ball to the stuff in the noodle. He also punched out two nice singles, one through short and the other right through the middle station. He passed two men and hit one. One of the passes was a premeditated one, and was a wise move as he shot four wide ones to Cozy Dolan with second and third occupied. Thirty four Shagmen faced Schettler in the nine innings he worked, and six of that number made the journey to the pan in the first inning. Six of the league leaders whiffed the ozone, two were passed and one hit.

Twenty-four men faced Kane in the seven frames he held forth on the mound. He did not issue a pass nor hit a runner. Kubat, who batted for Kane in the eighth and finished the game in the box, allowed one hit and passed one in the innings he operated.

During the game fifteen balls were clouted to the outergarden men and they handled them without the semblance of a blow. Nill and Fried had a big day at second and short for Ottawa, and between the two had ten assists and three put outs. The local infield also played nice ball and had three excusable misplays in fifteen chances, most of them hard ones. Frank Fox pulled the best catch of the day when he went back towards second and cut off a sure hit by leaping into the atmosphere and spearing Lage's poke with the bare hand. Fox also had a neat double which sent Blount scurrying across the pan. Wilcox had a good day with two singles and two thefts, his pilfer in the first following his hit, being responsible for the ice being broken, as King chased him home with a timely single.

How They Scored.

The locals grabbed their first run in the opening frame, when, after Blount had flew to Dolan and Fox had fanned, Wilcox singled through second and stole on the first pitched ball. King came through with a wallop to Shag, and Wilcox counted. King was out trying to break into the petty larceny class. In the fourth Wilcox singled again with one down and stole second, but King and Byrne failed to connect. In the sixth Schettler bingled over second and was forced at the keystone sack on Blount's attempted sacrifice. Fox drove the pill over Lefty Rogers' head for two sacks, and Blount counted. With Wilcox up, Fox started for third on a proposed hit and run but Willy failed to hit, and Fox was out.

The fans were very anxious in Ottawa's half of the first. Bullock was safe on Byrne's error, and he went to third when Nill doubled along the third base foul line. Shag hit to King who threw his out at first, Bullock being held at third. Rogers drove one at Schettler, who ran Bullock down before he could get back to third, Nill shooting into third on the out, and Rogers going to second. Dolan was passed, and with the bags choked, Powers whiffed. Ottawa was not dangerous again, although in the ninth Lefty Rogers dropped one just a few inches outside the line in far left and then struck out. Dolan got Ottawa's No. 2 hit in this frame when he dumped one into right field.

The glad tidings follow:

This town is no suffragette abode if the manner in which the fannettes turned out yesterday and rooted for the Blountmen is any criterion.

Umps. Evans, who handled the indicator last year, officiated yesterday, and gave good satisfaction. Ump. Bedford, who had charge here, had charge at Brantford, filling the vacancy caused by the deportation of Umpire Raley. Evans worked in the doble umpire system at London in the Ottawa series.

It was some game. It just required one hour and thirty-five minutes to peal it off.

Some stab Frank Fox made in the second on Lage's smash over second.

The main stand was practically packed with ladies, and even the school girl was there with her bundle of modern day knowledge under her arm.

It's no use girls, Mr. L. Schettler, the dispensing artist who performed so charmingly yesterday, is a married man.

"Shag" took a chance on a Wager in the ninth but Blount gobbled in the long fly

Schettler made a great stop of Shag's sizzler in the sixth.

Lefty Rogers is the most unconcerned and obliging individual in the world. After he had just failed to connect for a triple by inches, the ball being foul by a hair's breadth, Lefty struck out.

The wind interefered with Schettler's curve ball to some extent. If there had been no wind the Ottawa batsmen would have caused some draft by their useless swings. As it was they managed to create a pleasant zephyr on six occasions.

Mr. Kane, the tall indivdual who served them up for Ottawa, pitched good enough ball to win the majority of games.

Mully Miller caught nicely and seems to steady the team. Milly will knock the head off a couple in the brewery one of these days. He's stinging the pill hard, but without any luck.

The youngster, Fried, shaped up nicely, and saved himself an error in the fourth by a quick recovery and a good whip.

COMMENT

As You Like It

The work of the Petes during the past few days should be sufficient to make the fans realize that the Blountmen will be there or thereabouts in the fight for the flag. In Schettler, Creswell, Tracey, Sterling and Belting, the club is well fortified with twirlers who can be counted on for many good games. Where the great improvement is noticed, however, is in the infield. The removal of Price and the switching of King over to short and Fox to second, makes the club look like a new mould. The infield works smoother because the previous uncertain quantity at short has been removed. The directors are also casting about for three players who can hit. At present there are some weak stickers on the local squad, but the box scores of the two last games, although they show the hits collected by the Petes total 12, do not hit the nail exactly, as the club has been stinging the pill hard, but without any of the breaks. The Petes in their home games ran into London and Ottawa, two of the strongest clubs in the league, but had they displayed the form against London they have shown against Ottawa, the Cockneys would never have taken two of the series.

Little is known of the Hamilton, Brantford and St. Thomas clubs. Toronto will be a contender, but Hamilton and Brantford do not look like serious battlers for the flag, while St. Thomas can be counted on to improve. Erie can hit, but the team is erratic in its fielding. It looks like a merry fight between about five of the clubs with Erie, Brantford and Hamilton, bringing up the rear.

In the two games with Ottawa local fans have watched some tidy ball. In the seventeen and one half innings the teams played, the hits have totalled 20, runs 4, errors 5, bases on balls6, and hit by pitcher 1.

Lou Marsh, the well known Toronto sport writer, had his leg broken in Toronto yesterday. Lou was proceeding along Wilton Avenue on his motorcycle, when he was run down by a motor truck. Lou flew to Hamilton last week in a hydroplane and escaped uninjured.

Ban Johnson has announced that he will introduce a motion to prohibit runners sliding into first base after having hit the ball. He claims the play confuses the umpires. Sliding into first does not gain much, but Mr. Johnson will have to make some provision for a slide when a runner attempts to avoid an opposing player who is waiting to tag him out.

"SHAG" OFFERS TO LOAN SMYKAL TO THE PETES

Would Send Him Here Till Local Club Secures New Players Now Being Sought—Hilliard May Come—A Few Notes

Smykal, the speedy little shortfielder of the Ottawa crew may be seen in a Peterboro uniform in the near future. Manager Shaughnessey, who is well fortified at that position by Fried's work, is willing to loan Smykal to the local club if the management wants him. The Ottawa manager does not care to sell Smykal, as he could be used as utility infielder. His work in the field has always been brilliant, but his stick work cannot be called good, while on the other hand, Fried, who is breaking in, shapes up first class in all departments. Smykal is at present in Chicago, to which place he was called Saturday, owing to the illness of his mother. The local management is considering "Shag's" offer.

Word has been received at local headquarters from the Cleveland Club of the American Association to the effect that the Naps cannot allow Hilliard to come here at the present. The local club wil have first call on him, in all probability, and it would not be surprising if he hit here in the near future.

The directors have not heard anything definite from the other players and clubs who are being negotiated with. Hitters are being sought and the fans can expect some welcome news by the end of the week.

Shaughnessy will send Peterson, one of his new additions, to the mound this afternoon. Lage will do the receiving. Tracey will shoot them across for the locals, with either Miller or Kelly behind the pan.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

ILLUSION.

A book, a quiet evening smoke,
A friend to tell an ancient joke,
A purchase in our mind of stock,
A quiet walk around the block—
I tell you, boys, we call that sporty
When we have passed the age of forty.

A game of cribbage with a friend,
A bill we do not have to spend,
A drink of cider on the sly
When tired out and extra dry—
That's going some—just ask our wife—
When we are tasting middle life.

We kick our heels and blithely say
We feel as young and spry today
As when we carried twenty-three,
But it's a bluff the blind can see.
Would we, if that's the story straight,
Turn in along toward half past eight?

Were we of added proof in need
That old age almost has us treed
See the impatience we display
When giggling, gushing youth gets gay,
And say we do not see the use
Of acting like a half baked goose.

It's no use trying to disguise.
We're growing old if not more wise,
And soon, back numbers, we will sit
And watch a generation flit.
Old Time on us has turned the trick,
There's no use kicking on a brick.

Sea Mussels as Food.

The sea mussel is closely related to the oyster and the clam. It is not, however, to be confused with the fresh water mussel. As a nutritious and wholesome food it is equal to either the oyster or the clam, and many persons regard it as superior in flavor. The mussels exist in such abundance in such readily accessible places, and they are so readily obtained by the oysterman's regular equipment, that they can be put upon the market at lower cost than can either oysters or clams. They are at their best, moreover, when oysters are out of season, though they are in season all the year round. As a food they are economically good not only because of their high nutritive value and digestibility, but because, unlike the clam, all the meat is edible, and, because their shells are thin and regular, a barrel of mussels contains more edible material than a barrel of oysters. A peck of mussels in the shell will supply all the meat required for a meal for ten persons.

GIVING HIM A CHANCE.

Wifey Warns Hubby to Dodge Bullets if He isn't a Burglar.

THE wife of a traveling man, who makes her home in Baltimore, has never until recently evinced any fear at being left alone during her husband's frequent absences from the Monumental City. There came a time, however, during the operations of a burglar in the neighborhood that the good woman experienced quite a fright, caused by the sound of a man coming up the stairs. As a matter of fact, the man was her husband, but of this fact the wife was not sure, inasmuch as she had not received from her spouse the usual wire announcing his coming.

So it was with considerable trepidation that she provided herself with a revolver and took her stand in the darkness at the head of the stairs. Then it was that her husband was first made aware of the situation. In a high, strained voice the tones of his wife's voice came to him:

"I don't know whether you are a burglar or my husband, but I'm going to be on the safe side and shoot. If you're Clarence, you'd better get out of the way."—Detroit Free Press.

An Ideal Person.

"I am afraid," said the assistant manager of the mammoth metropolitan department store, "the young woman who just inquired for a job isn't quite up to our standard."

"I thought she seemed like a very nice looking person," said the manager. "You know it pays to have good looking people back of the counter. Have you ever considered that point?"

"Yes, I have. I agree with you. But she struck me as being extremely stupid. She certainly was not very well educated."

"Could she read and write?"

"Barely."

"Did she have any knowledge of literature?"

"Apparently none whatever."

The manager's face brightened up.

"She's too nice a looking person to let go by. In that case, why don't you employ her as a saleswoman in our book department?"—Life.

Thought It Was Time.

The minister of a rural church gave out the hymn "I Love to Steal Awhile Away," etc. The regular old precentor being absent, his function devolved upon a good old deacon, who commenced, "I love to steal," and then broke down. Raising his voice a little higher, he then sang, "I love to steal." At length, after a desperate cough, he made a final demonstration and roared out, "I love to steal."

The effort was too much. Every one but the parson was laughing. He rose and with the utmost coolness said:

"Seeing our brother's propensities, let us pray."—Philadelphia Ledger.

HALF YEARLY STATEMENT BANK OF MONTREAL IS A STRONG ONE

(From the Montreal Star, May 19).

What is likely to prove the most important statement issued recently is the semi-annual report of the Bank of Montreal, issued to-day.

In banking circles it is generally admitted that British and International banking houses look to the Bank of Montreal statement as being an important index of Canada's position, and as the statement for the half year ending April 30th is one of the strongest ever issued, it is sure to be of the greatest benefit to Canada, more particularly in London and foreign investment fields.

Owing to the changes which have been made in the Bank Act which called for certain changes in the form of presenting the statement, a comparison of all accounts is not possible, but the statement as submitted during the past half year has been centered principally on keeping the position of the bank so strong that it would be able to cope with any possible developments that might arise throughout the world.

The outstanding features of the statement are the unusually large percentages of liquid assets to liabilities to the public, and the substantial increases made in total assets and deposits.

The general statement shows that assets have reached the high level of $262,956,419, as compared with $254,435,044.83 at the end of the corresponding period last year, an increase of $8,521,375.

The gain in total deposits amounted to $4,430,146.86. Of this amount deposits not bearing interest represented a total of $50,457,523.33, as compared with $45,599,747.90 last year, an increase of $4,857,775.43. Deposits bearing interest at the end of April stood at $157,725,510.83, as compared with $160,868,957.75, a decrease of $3,143,446.92. The deposits made by and balances due to other banks amounted to $2,802,449.16, bringing the total deposits up to $210,982,483.32, as compared with $206,552,336.46 at the end of the corresponding period of last year a gain, as indicated above, of close to four and a half million dollars.

The part of the statement that will likely be most appreciated by the financial community generally is that which deals with the liquid position in which the bank has maintained its assets. At the end of April the liquid assets reached a total of $139,579,557.72, as compared with $120,512,081.44, and this was the equivalent of the unusual percentage of 60.87 per cent. of the total liabilities to the public. The actual cash on hand was equivalent to 10.45 per cent. of liabilities. The current loans amounted to $117,116,405.76, as against $129,719,323.42 at the end of April last year.

The profit and loss account shows a balance to be carried forward of $1,098,968.40. The statement with comparisons with the previous year is as follows:

| | Oct. 31, 1913 | Oct. 31, 1914 |
|---|---|---|
| Balance profit and loss br't forward from previous year | $802,814.94 | $1,046,217.80 |
| Profits for half year after deducting charges of management and making full provision for all bad and doubtful debts . . . | 1,299,646.42 | 1,212,750.60 |
| | $2,102,461.36 | $2,258,968.40 |
| Deduct two quarterly dividends of 2½ p.c. or $400,000 each: a bonus of 1 p.c. or $160,000 . . . . . | 960,000.00 | 960,000.00 |
| | $1,142,461.36 | $1,298,968.40 |
| Provision for Bank Premises . . . . . | 250,000.00 | 200,000.00 |
| Balance of profit and loss carried forward . . . . | $892,461.35 | $1,098,968.40 |

SUGGESTED CHANGES TO ANGLICAN PRAYER BOOK

Provision is Made for Services Over the Graves of Suicides

The suggested changes to the Anglican Prayer Book which the General Synod will deal with at the meeting in Vancouver in September, provides for a service over the graves of suicides. This has never been permitted to be read over the graves of suicides or of the unbaptized but in future the reading of the Lord's Prayer and of suitable collects will be authorized on such occasions.

A slight change has also been made in the marriage service. The sentence expressing in the frank language of the fifteenth century the main objects of wedlock has been phrased more delicately and one or two other minor alterations on the same principle follow. Thus the words "with my body I thee worship" have been changed to read "with my body I thee honour."

Change in the direction of greater tolerance is noted in the third of the Good Friday collects, which constitutes the prayers for "Jews, Turks, infidels and heretics." It now concludes, "Have mercy upon the Jews, thine ancient people, and upon all who deny and reject Thy name." This, after some discussion, seemed to meet the views of the members of the committee.

The confirmation service has been enriched by special lessons and special psalms and children's lessons have been added to the burial service to provide for the case of a child's funeral. Further prayers and lessons suitable for use by surviving relatives are also suggested.

An interesting addition to the thanksgiving prayer service was made at the request of the Maritime Province delegates and deals with the fishing industry. Other alterations and additions suitable to Canadian conditions may also be noted.

MOTORISTS HEAR PRESIDENT OF ONTARIO MOTOR LEAGUE

Dr. Doolittle Tells Local Association to Get Together and go to it— The Need for Effort on Behalf of Good Roads

Urging co-operation, enthusiasm, and advancing the slogan for them to "get together and go to it," Dr. Doolittle, President of Ontario Motor League, in a valuable address to the local Automobile Association last evening in the Bank of Montreal Chambers, pointed out the great advantages in standing together and getting their rights. He outlined the need of pushing the good roads matter. It was a case of strike when the iron was hot.

The entire talk by the speaker was full of witticisms and the speaker won the entire confidence of the members, who evinced keen interest in the short programme outlined to them. Although the gathering was rather small, everyone was a red-hot motorist. Dr. Doolittle paid a high honor to the Association when he spoke of the enjoyable time he spent with them on the jaunt to South Beach last year with the County Council and Pathmasters. Entertainment was part of the battle for motorists. It warmed into the hearts of the citizens. With a progress such as in the past year the local club undoubtedly would stand as a banner club in the province.

Reviewing the good roads question he went back to the origin of the construction of roads. Back about fifty years ago they used the so-called pathmaster system. This system was to have a new pathmaster each year. The result was that the apointed pathmaster repaired his road in front of his farm. The others were left alone. Naturally this resulted in patchy roads. It was not a matter of knowledge of how to construct roads then. He himself had worked in the capacity of assisting the construction of roads.

They must made a concerted attack to get good roads. He described how they obtained sufficient money to start a good roads campaign in one day's collecting. Other various means were spoken of. The first campaign was put into effect by a bicycle club at Toronto about 25 years ago. They collected fully $500 in a short time. It was a case of having good roads then with their high bone-shakers. The old Grimsby road, constructed twenty-five years ago, was one of the finest roads in the Province. The County of Wentworth had spent $200,000 on the good roads cause. In one year these farms along the newly constructed roads had increased one hundred per cent. in value. Now, the land was worth or rather would bring twice that amount. This was all due to the labor and few dollars spent wisely.

He was also a strong advocate of the interchange of licenses between this province and the United States. There was an interchange of licenses everywhere but in Ontario.

A prize of $100.00 was offered for the man who put up the most signs.

Dr. Sutton, chairman of the Membership Committee, outlined a short programme they had for their coming campaign. He advocated the placing of sign posts every place possible and necessary.

Chairman of the Entertainment Committee, Mr. Keyes, said it was their intention to have a trip to South Beach this year. A County Council and Pathmasters' trip would be held to Hastings in June. Several other outings were being arranged for.

Dr. Amys expressed his views on the good roads question.

Mr. E. A. Peck, M.L.A., remarked that he was willing to assist as much as possible. The idea was good and the Provincial Government would render every assistance. He referred to the legislation passed some time ago in favor of the autoists.

A vote of thanks on motion of Dr. Sutton and Mr Doble, was tendered Mr. Peck and Dr. Doolittle.

PRESENTATIONS TO REV. JAS. WALLACE

The curlers of Lindsay presented Rev. Jas. Willace with a gold headed cane. Rev. Mr. Wallace has been a member of the club for eleven years. He is leaving for British Columbia to do survey work for the Presbyterian Board of Missions.

On behalf of the 45th Regiment, Col. Hopkins presented Mr. Wallace with a leather club bag.

BAND CONCERT.

The Temple Band will play in Victoria Park Thursday night.

No Letter Received.

The Review is informed that no letter was received by the reception committee from Canon Davidson asking that the Duke of Connaught visit St. John's Church during his stay in the city. Only an incidental suggestion was made to a member of the committee to the effect that if in passing the vice-regal party should wish to visit the church, suitable arrangements would be made.

Retail Grocers.

A meeting of the Retail Grocers is called for to-night at the Y. M. C. A. at 8 o'clock.

A wise precaution before administering or taking medicine is to look twice at the label and the dose, once before pouring it out and once afterward. This is a sort of double security against mistakes.

Touchy.

In the little town of H— lived a young man who was not likely to "set the river afire," not over bright, to put it plainly and truthfully.

He had been telling of his engagement to a belle of the town, but no one took his announcement seriously. One day he gave out that he had broken his engagement.

"So you really broke the enagement, Henry?" he was asked.

"That's what I did," he boasted.

"Dear me, tell us why you were so cruel?" one of his hearers begged.

"Well, it's like this," explained Henry, "Hattie told me she wouldn't marry me and I ain't going to be engaged to any girl what won't marry me!"—Lippincott's.

Susie Wants to Know.

A Sunday school teacher, after conducting a lesson on the story of "Jacob's ladder," concluded by saying, "Now, is there any little girl or boy who would like to ask a question about the lesson?"

Little Susie looked puzzled for a moment and then raised her hand.

"A question, Susie?" asked the teacher.

"I would like to know," said Susie, "if the angels have wings, why did they have to climb up the ladder?"

The teacher thought for some moments and then, looking about the class, asked, "Is there any little boy who would like to answer Susie's question?"—Everybody's.

Oil Gusher at Calgary.

CALGARY, May 20.—At noon yesterday the oil spurted out from the Discovery oil well 90 feet in the air. This is the most forceful gusher since oil was struck and lasted a longer time. The bailers spent four hours bailing out 900 gallons of oil. They found the oil as high in the well after they had concluded bailing as when they started, namely, 2,000 feet. This is the best test that has been made of the supply.

American Delegates at Falls.

NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y., May 20.—Justice J. R. Lamar and Fred. W. Lehman, American delegates to the mediation conference, and their secretarial adviser, H. P. Dodge, arrived here shortly before midnight, from Washington. They were met by Robert F. Rose, State Department representative, and taken to the hotel on this, the American side of the border, where they will make their headquarters during the conference.

Death Was Accidental.

GUELPH, May 20.—The jury who enquired into the deaths of Wilfrid McRae and Alfred Brake, who were killed here in a cave-in of a trench dug by the waterworks employes, returned a verdict of accidental death. It was recommended that when excavations were being made, the sides of the trench be shored for protection.

PAVEMENT TO BE FLUSHED IN MORNING BY FIREMEN

Will Help to Stop the Dust Nuisance — Sunday Street Watering Service Cannot be Extended as the Funds Are Low

At last some step has been taken to overcome the dust nuisance which has so often been featured on the main streets during the past few weeks. At the Board of Works meeting last night Alderman Stratton brought up the question. Alderman Green, chairman of the Fire, Water and Light Committee, consented to having the firemen flush the streets early each morning, thus doing away with the mud and dirt which during the heat of the day is instrumental in causing dust.

Street Cleaning Carts.

Chairman Alderman Duncan brought the matter of purchasing four street cleaning carts and the necessary cans, which in all would cost $84.00. On motion of Alderman Green, seconded by Alderman McIntyre, Ald. Duncan and the City Engineer were given power to make the purchase. They were also authorised to purchase two dump wagons, costing $150 each. These wagons were very badly needed this spring, and in fact similar ones had to be borrowed from the paving contractors in order to remove the winter's refuse from the paved section of the city.

Street Watering.

City Engineer Parsons, was instructed to try and make arrangements for the watering of the following streets:

Antrim from George to G.T.R.
London from Aylmer to G.T.R.
Harvey from George to Smith.
Wolfe from Stewart to G.T.R.
Hunter from Roger to Concession.

Sunday Service.

Alderman Green wanted to know if it wouldn't be possible to have a little more Sunday street watering, as last Sabbath, George Street north, was a fright. His idea was lost sight of when the Chairman spoke of how low the funds were dropping.

Locate Hydrants.

Henceforth the City Engineer will have the locating of new hydrants among his other numerous duties, thus the resolution that all hydrants must not be closer than 4 inches to the curb will be more easily carried out.

Ald. Johnston's List.

Alderman Johnston presented a list of places in the north ward which needed repairs, and these were referred to the City Engineer. Mayor Buller is particularly desirous of repairing the bad spots in the roads all over the city, so with His Worship agitating along that line, it is anticipated that the various districts now complaining, will have satisfaction meted out to them.

Sidewalks Wanted.

Mr. W. H. Baker petitioned the Board for sidewalks on new streets he had laid out on property the north side of Patterson Street. This work was left over, and will figure on the next list.

STANLEY HARTLEY MUST DO BETTER

His Case is Enlarged to Give Him a Chance

At Police Court this morning the case of Stanley Hartley, a sixteen-year-old boy was enlarged for two weeks to give him another chance to go to work.

"Say, permit me to say a word in behalf of that boy," shouted a man from the back of the court. He immediately rushed to the front of the bench and announced in loud terms that he was the guardian of the boy.

"Where is your legal authority?" asked the Chief.

Mr. Cochrane and a Toronto man appointed me, declared the man, whose name is Grisdale.

The Chief and Adjutant McElhiney then informed His Worship that they had warned this man from harboring the boy around the power house, where the former works. He refused to comply with these warnings.

"Why, he is as bad as the boy," stated the Adjutant.

The man who evinced such interest in the youngster was warned to leave the boy alone in the future.

CENTRAL PRISON FOR SIX MONTHS

Sixteen Year Old Lad May Also Get Whipping

Fred Cassan, a sixteen-year-old boy, was sentenced to six months in Central Prison by Magistrate Dumble this morning on the charge of vagrancy.

Cassan has appeared on numerous charges of theft. His mother is a widow.

"Have you anything to say?" asked the Magistrate.

"You have the running of this affair and go ahead," remarked the youth in sullen tones.

The sentence was also accompanied by a recommendation for a whipping.

J.J. Howden Meets With Painful Mishap

J. J. Howden, Otonabee, met with a very painful accident at his home on Tuesday afternoon. He was about to sit down on a chair, when the chair slipped, and Mr. Howden, losing his balance fell upon it. His side struck one of the chair legs, with the result that one of his ribs was fractured and his side badly bruised. Dr. Eastwood was summoned and attended him. Mr. Howden is resting comfortably to-day.

EARL GREY ON HIS WAY EAST

Was Wheeled From Hotel to His Train

Canadian Press Despatch.

Winnipeg, May 21.—Earl Grey left here for the east last night against the advice of the house physician at Royal Alexandra Hotel. He was indisposed owing to a chill caught on the journey from Vancouver here, but pressing engagements called him east and he was wheeled from the hotel to the train in an invalid's chair. Conntess Grey and Lady Sybil Grey are with him and the party sail Thursday from Montreal.

GROCERS FAVOR TAGGING THE FARMERS' BASKETS

Considerable discussion took place at the Grocers' meeting last night, on the new market regulations.

The meeting favored that part of the by-law which compels the farmers to put a tag on their baskets with their names on, as it made it much easier to know with whom people were doing business, and it would also be a convenience, when the farmers leave their baskets in the grocery stores. Often mistakes are made by putting goods in the wrong baskets.

The regulation calling for the weighing of fowl was not so easily decided.

The meeting was decidedly in favor of the principle of weighing, but if it was going to be the means of keeping the farmers away from the city it would be better to rescind that part of the by-law. A recommendation was made to that effect.

MURDERER TAKES TO WOODS AFTER KILLING TWO PERSONS

Tragedy Reveals Terrible State of Affairs, In Which Murderer is Charged With Crimes Against His Daughter.

GRAVENHURST, May 21.—One of the worst murders in the history of Ontario was perpetrated yesterday morning in the wild bush country in the Township of Ryde, 12 miles from Bracebridge, when William Ruttan shot and killed Mrs. Alfred Coutermanche, his daughter, and Geo. Coutermanche, and wounded Mrs. Geo. Coutermanche. Ruttan is a fugitive from justice, having fled to the forest, taking his gun with him, after having failed in an attempt to kill Alfred Coutermanche, at whom he fired four shots.

George Coutermanche was shot as he stood in the yard of the home, and fell dead at the feet of his wife, who was assisting him to clean fish. The bullet went through his heart and he died instantly. Mrs. Alfred Coutermanche was struck in the neck by a bullet fired through the door of a bedroom, whither she had gone for refuge, and expired in the arms of her husband.

Ruttan followed his victims relentlessly, firing a shot at them when in sight, and putting the gun up to the door and firing into the rooms they occupied. His first attack was made without warning. The horrible tragedy occupied about half an hour, during which Ruttan fired about fifteen shots, and must have reloaded the gun at least once. Apparently mad with anger, he did not quit shooting until the two remaining persons had gone from his reach. He then took to the woods.

The double murder discloses a terrible state of family affairs, and incidentally the probable cause of Ruttan's terrible deed. Alfred Coutermanche, who married Ruttan's daughter Nina, one of the murdered a month ago, went to Bracebridge a few days ago to lay a charge of incest against his wife's father. The charge was referred to the district officials, who are at Honey Harbor in connection with the preliminary in the Hayde murder case. Had they been here, it is probable that Ruttan would have been under arrest before the murder was committed. There seems no doubt but this action enraged Ruttan so much that he was determined to do away with the entire family. Ruttan's two sons have also been in trouble, and recently were convicted of a charge of cruelty to a cow. They were taken from Bracebridge yesterday morning by Constable McConnell.

Dr. McLeay, Gravenhurst, opened an inquiry yesterday afternoon at Housey Rapids, the scene of the murder, and heard the evidence of Alfred Coutermanche and Mrs. George Coutermanche. Dr. McLeay said last night that the shooting was done with a combination double-barrel shotgun and rifle. Ruttan used the rifle side.

Ruttan is a small man of 60 years, and on account of his dark complexion and hair is known as "Black Billy." He has a farm, but has spent the greater part of his time in the woods as a hunter. He is known as one of the best shots in the district. Because of his excellent shooting the residents of the district fear to search for him. A number of settlers have been sworn in as special constables, and will form a posse.

The district around Housey Rapids is rough and wild. Communication and means of transportation are bad, and the district but sparsely settled. The entire neighborhood is very excited, and many fear to venture into the woods because Ruttan is still at large. Those who know him say he will put up a fight before surrendering.

ACTIVE LIFE CLOSES WITH DEATH OF CHARLES COLLINS

Was One of the Leading Men in Wentworth and Held Many Positions With Credit—Was Famous in His Early Days as Professional Ball Player

Dundas, May 21.—Charles Collins, Reeve of the Town of Dundas, and member of the Council of the County of Wentworth, died at his home in Dundas at 11.30 last night. The funeral will take place on Saturday at 9.30 a.m.

The late Charles Collins was one of the leading men of Wentworth County, having been long intimately connected with politics there. For a good many years he was deeply interested in municipal affairs, and represented his native town perhaps better than any man that had the privilege of being elected. Almost every office from Mayor down, he had at some time occupied, with credit to himself and benefit to the municipality. A few years ago he ran as an independent candidate in the Provincial election, but was defeated. That was the time when Mackenzie and Mann were negotiating with the Whitney Government, and Mr. Collins disapproved, though a Conservative, of the Canadian Northern's plans then. His predictions have been strikingly fulfilled. He declared Mackenzie and Mann would not be able to finish the road, and that it would be a serious drain on the finances of the country. How true his statements were, the present negotiations at Ottawa are a witness.

He was always enthusiastic over sport. In his early days he was a professional ball player, having toured the United States and Canada with the champion Dundas team, and later managed the Hamilton team in the old International League. Of late years he was interested in bowling and curling, and built with his brother, the late Frank Collins, the fine curling rink in Dundas.

He was a fluent and vigorous speaker and possessed a knowledge of municipal affairs that few highly trained men possess. Dundas has lost a good citizen, and the County of Wentworth one of its ablest men.

JUMPED OFF EXPRESS AND MET DEATH

Kingston Man Fell Under the Wheels

Canadian Press Despatch.

Brockville, May 21.—Fred McCormack, of Kingston, jumped from an eastbound G.T.R. express on which he was stealing a ride, as it came to a stop at the depot here this morning and fell under the wheels. One arm and leg were severed, and he received other serious injuries, and died four hours later in hospital.

WARD MEETINGS TO APPOINT DELEGATES

Ward meetings were arranged by the Conservative Association at a meeting last night as follows: Ward No. 1 at Burnham and Ruddy's Offices, Tuesday, May 26, at 8 p.m.; Ward No. 2, Wednesday night; Ward No. 3, Thursday night; Ward No. 4, Friday night, and Ward No. 5 on Wednesday night at the Young Men's club rooms, in East City.

The ward chairmen are: No. 1, John Edgar; No. 2, W. Fisher; No. 3, Jos. Mills; No. 4, W. Will; No. 5, J. D. Craig. The object of the meetings is to appoint delegates to the convention to be held June 1.

Knox Choir.

Knox Church choir will practice to-night at 8 o'clock.

DUCHESS WILL BE WITH PARTY

Minister of Militia Will Also Visit City

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Connaught, will accompany the Duke and Princess on their visit to this city on June 1. Word to this effect was received by A. H. Stratton, chairman of the reception committee this morning. The duchess has not been enjoying the best of health but has sufficiently improved to accompany the party on the balance of the Ontario tour.

The Royal party will consist of His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, the Duchess of Connaught, Princess Patricia, Miss Yorke, lady-in-waiting to the Duchess, Hon. Katharine Villiers, lady-in-waiting to Princess Patricia, Lieut.-Col. Farquhar, D.S.O., Captain Hon. G. Voscawen, Captain A. Graham, A.D.C., Major Sir Edward Worthington, M.V.O., and Arthur F. Sladin, C.M.G., the Duke's secretary.

Col. the Hon. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia and Defence, will be here on invitation of the reception committee.

Gospel Song Service.

The open air Gospel song services at Central Park will commence Sunday night at 8 o'clock, and will continue each Sunday throughout the summer months.

BAND REHEARSAL.

A rehearsal by the 57th band will be held to-night in preparation for the visit of the 15th Regimental band of Belleville.

HON. GEO. H. PERLEY MAY ACT AT LONDON

Ottawa, May 21.—Hon. George H. Perley, who is going abroad shortly after the session concludes, has as the primary object of his trip, attendance at the Interparliamentary Union Convention at Stockholm, to which he and Hon. Dr. Beland are the Canadian delegates.

The cables for some weeks have been mentioning Mr. Perley for the post of High Commissioner in succession to Lord Strathcona, but it is doubted here if he would care to accept that position, at least, in permanency. From what can be learned in Government circles no appointment to the position is probable for some months.

There is a very widely entertained view that, whoever may fill the high post temporarily, it is more than likely to go eventually to Hon. Robert Rogers.

INSPECTION OF CADETS

Made Good Showing This Afternoon

The Collegiate Cadets paraded for the annual inspection by Major Gillespie, of Kingston, this afternoon at 3.30 at the campus in front of the Armouries.

The instructor, C. E. Jamieson, assumed charge of the cadets, with Battalion Commander Cann assisting. The corps marched and proved efficient in battalion drill and skirmishing. The march past, which took place later in the afternoon, was exceedingly well executed.

The commanders of the different units acquitted themselves well.

The officers are:

Battalion Commander—L. Cann.
Senior Major—R. Stratton.
Adjutant—S. Mills.
Quartermaster—R. Rogers.
Signalling Officer—C. Richardson.
Bandmaster—C. Devey.
Q. M. S.—W. Ryan.
Sgt. Bugler—A. Lord.

A. Co.

Company Leader—M. Peever.
Half Company Leader—L. Stuart. W. Carruthers.

B. Co.

Company Leader—A. Horsefield.
Half Company Leader—H. Knapman, M. Powell.

C. Co.

Company Leader—F. Hooper.
Half Company Leader—C. McKee, H. Adams.

D. Co.

Half Company Leader—W. Adams.
Instructor—Hon. Capt. C. E. Jamieson.
Inspecting Officer—Major G. H. Gillespie, I. and O. G. C.

Among the spectators were: Lt.-Col. Clegg, 57th Regt.; Lt.Col. Dr. Young, 10th Brigade, C. F. A.; Major S. T. Medd, Prince of Wales Dragoons; Major J. Mills, 57th Regt.; Major Rev. Canon Davidson.

Representatives of the Daughters of the Empire were also present.

The winners of the medals will be presented with the same at the conclusion of the inspection.

NIGHT SHIFT TO HUSTLE THE WORK

In an effort to hurry along the work of the street car tracks and pavement on George Street, the four lights at the corner of George and Charlotte Streets will be turned on all night and a night shift put to work. To-night the men will work till twelve, but commencing to-morrow night, they will work right through.

Delayed Resentment.

A man went to a judge, and asked whether he could bring suit for slander against a man who had called him a rhinoceros.

"Why, certainly," said the judge. "When did he call you that?"

"About three years ago."

"Three years ago! And you only start suit today!"

"But, your honor, yesterday I saw a rhinoceros for the first time."—(Berliner Illustrite Zeitung.

WIDOW'S HOME AND OUT BUILDINGS ARE DESTROYED

Mrs. John Armstrong Lost Practically Everything When Fire Fiend Made Visit During Her Absence

To have almost everything she owned in the world blotted out by the fire fiend was the sad misfortune of Mrs. John Armstrong, a widow, who resides on the River Road, about half a mile above Auburn. The fire, which started at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, swept before it the house, practically all of its contents, and all the outer buildings on the little three-acre home. The origin of the fire is a mystery. An eleven-year-old son of Mrs. Armstrong was about the house with a neighbor's child when the fire started, the mother having come to the city about 4.30. The lads were either too frightened or did not realize the seriousness of the affair, as they did not sound an alarm.

Sanitary Inspector Spence was one of the first on the job and with other men succeeded in saving the chickens and a few pieces of furniture, the latter being removed from the front room. The fire evidently originated in the kitchen or the wood shed, for when help arrived the rear portion of the house was a complete wreck.

Mrs. Armstrong arrived home after the fire fiend had completed its work. Her suffering and sorrow were unmistakeable when she gazed upon all that was left of her home—her chickens, a few pieces of furniture and a mass of charred wood. The disaster was complete, and not even the beams or scantlings of the building were left standing, the remains resembling a smouldering bonfire.

Mrs. Armstrong has a brother on Smith Street, and she went to his home last evening.

DID NOT CHEER

Socialists Declined Customary Demonstration

BERLIN, May 21.—Scenes of great confusion and uproar marked the closing session of the German Imperial Parliament yesterday. The members of the Socialist party, instead of retiring from the Chamber immediately before the usual cheers for the Emperor were called for, remained and kept their seats, from which they refused to rise.

Speaker Johannes Kaempf immediately called attention to this breach of respect to the Emperor, upon which the Socialists shouted: "That is our affair!" and tried to drown the cheers with hoots and hisses. These were answered by tumultuous applause from the other parties.

The Government's petroleum monopoly bill was not brought up for debate and therefore falls through.

WOMAN POLICE?

At this morning's Police Court session a local lady was fined $1 for assaulting a local man. The assault consisted of a slap on the face.

ANOTHER COP HAS RESIGNED

Dissatisfaction Reported from the Police Station

P. C. Burnham, of the police force, tendered his resignation as police constable last evening, the same to take effect immediately. Steps to fill this position will be taken at once. A meeting of the Police Commissioners is being called for next week.

There is some talk of dissatisfaction among the officers of the force.

CONFESSION IS BARRED

Alleged Statement by Dago Frank Shut Out

END CASE THIS WEEK

NEW YORK, May 21. — Charles Becker will not be benefited by the confession alleged to have been made by "Dago Frank" Cirofici shortly before the gunman was executed in the electric chair at Sing Sing Prison for the part he played in carrying out the plot to murder Herman Rosenthal. "Dago Frank," in the so-called confession, was quoted as saying he had never heard the name of Becker mentioned in connection with the conspiracy that resulted in the killing of the gambler. Justice Seabury refused to admit testimony concerning the alleged confession into the record, and his ruling was a great disappointment to both Becker and his counsel.

There are but two more witnesses to testify for the defence. They will have told their stories and been excused from the stand before the conclusion of the proceedings to-day. The case undobutedly will be completed before the end of the week.

It has not been decided whether or not Becker will go on the stand after the last witnesses to-day.

Canadian Press Despatch.

New York, May 21.—The hearing of evidence in the Becker case was concluded before noon to-day, and the court adjourned until 2 o'clock. Becker's counsel will occupy the afternoon in addressing the jury and District Attorney Whitman will take up the evening. The Court then adjourns until ten-thirty to-morrow, when Judge Zeabury will deliver his charge to the jury.

JOLLY GATHERING AT F. CO. ANNUAL DINNER

Captain McLean and His Men Show Their Ability as Entertainers

With military pomp, the fourth annual dinner of F. Co. of the 57th Regiment was celebrated last evening in a most becoming manner, when the garrison officers and commanding officer were guests of Capt. McLean and his company, who proved themselves excellent entertainers.

The principal feature of the evening was a presentation of a handsome thorn cane by the Company to the Commanding Officer, Lt. Col. Clegg. Col. Sergt. Dodds read an address to the Colonel. Private Vincent Eastwood made the presentation.

Col. Clegg in replying to the honor bestowed upon him said that he had always devoted as much time as possible to the interests of the regiment.

After the sumptuous repast prepared by Regimental caterer Hooper, Capt. McLean opened the toast list with the toast of The King. The toast was honored by the singing of the national anthem.

Commanding Officer.

The toast of The Commanding Officer was proposed by Lt. K. G. Leck. Col. Clegg, he said, had always kept a fatherly eye on the members of the regiment. "Three cheers," and "He's a Jolly Good Fellow," greeted the Commanding Officer, as he rose to respond.

"I am very thankful for the invitation to attend a dinner of this company," was the opening remark of Col. Clegg. It was always a great pleasure to attend any dinner or function held by Capt. McLean's Company. They were royal hosts. The Company was improving remarkably. "Your Captain," he said, "is a most effective officer, and is strongly supported by able officers and men under him."

The men were the best obtainable in the regiment. For several years they had won approval and special mention on inspection day. This year, however, three other companies were bucking down to work and the interest for the cup was keen. There was a very keen competition for the cup. It was a great pleasure to see keen competition. It was the life of the regiment. He would like to see proficiency in other branches of the work connected with the regiment. There was an excellent chance for shooting practice to go ahead. Until recently they had been without a rifle range. Now, they had one of the finest. It was up to the men to make good and make use of it. Shooting was one of the greatest necessities of military life. A soldier was of no use in the field unless he could shoot. They wanted men to shoot and shoot straight. There was the greatest opportunity in the world now to learn to be a good shot with the modern facilities here. "Go out and practice. Get interested, and when you get interested you will appreciate your interest. It is the best of sport."

"I am an old time member of the company," announced Staff Major Mills, as he acknowledged the glad hand of his old time friends. He thoroughly appreciated very much being present at any function held by the company.

He strongly urged more rifle practice. It was certainly a necessity. The prizes of fifty dollars were worth contending for. The company presented physique and appearance unparalleled in the regiment. He hoped to see much keener competition among the various companies. There

ARE UNIVERSITIES MAKING GOOD.

SOME TIME AGO we received a map and other documents from Toronto University showing the wide range from which it drew its large body of students. The obvious reason for sending the Review such data was apparently to show that the Whitney Government was justified in acceding to the financial necessities of Toronto University. As will be remembered, the Hon. I. B. Lucas did not favor granting all that the University asked, so that as a result it received merely sufficient funds to cover its immediate necessities. The Minister declared that he thought a commission ought to inquire into the whole question of university education and arrive at some conclusion or basis on which such institutions should receive Government assistance. The passage of time only makes such an inquiry more imperative, for daily, there arise serious questions regarding Ontario's Universities. Are they making good? Are they moving along the line of progress?

The universities claim to be raising the standard. Are they really increasing the efficiency of their students by what they call raising the standard? So far as Toronto University was concerned the main reason which led it to raise materially its standard a few years ago was not so much a desire for efficiency as an effort to curtail its attendance. Efficiency entered naturally into the changes instituted but not as a first principle. The universities have all tended to increase the cost of the courses to the students in various ways, such as raising the fees and lengthening the course. Regulations which necessitate all students being in attendance by a certain date, have cut down a student's earning powers in the holidays, but, at the same time no one has seriously questioned such a regulation. A higher examination standard has been coupled with a disproportionate extension of the curriculum, which has brought profit to the Universities in repeated years and supplemental examinations.

University progress seems to move against the man who is paying his own way. Some of the best men on the staffs of universities and in professional and commercial life have paid their own way through college, and such a class should not have artificial but sometimes effective barriers placed before them. Further, the Arts course is in itself a training for scarcely one definite occupation. Teaching, law, divinity, medicine, all require long expensive courses in addition. In view of that fact, and particularly that these years spent in study are unproductive and strenuous years, it is a grave question whether universities are giving a training commensurate with the time and money expended, and whether they are moving in a direction calculated to perform the greatest amount of service to the community.

THE HINTERLAND OF ALBERTA.

MUCH EXPLORATION WORK is expected to be accomplished this year in the hinterland of Alberta, particularly in the Mackenzie River basin. The work will be continued this season by officials of the Geological and Meteorological Services, the Fisheries Department and Topographical Surveys of the Dominion Government. Several parties are already in Edmonton to outfit for trips of from five to eight monts' duration in the Northern wilderness.

One of the parties is headed by John Pattison, of the Toronto Observatory, who is journeying to the Arctic Ocean in connection with international work in the study of air currents in the Eskimo region. He is accompanied by George Hall Ingram, who is studying the natural history of the far Northern areas with a view to placing his discoveries at the disposal of scientists. The outward trip will include a voyage of 1,000 miles by canoe on the Athabasca and Mackenzie Rivers.

A map of the unexplored mineral territory in the Mackenzie River basin will be made by Charles Camsell of the Geological Survey. The party will also endeavor to find the source and cause of Thelon River, which is supposed to rise in a chain of unknown lakes several hundred miles north of the Dubawnt River.

A party of three explorers under C. D. Melville will make an expedition to the east coasts of Hudson and James Bays. They have been commissioned by the Dominion Government to ascertain the actual commercial value of fish in these waters. The party will start north from Cochrane, Ont., early in June. They expect to cover 1,500 miles by canoe on the round trip. It is announced here that a second expedition will leave Montreal next month to investigate the fishery resources of the straits of Hudson Bay.

The large amount of money and energy expended in exploring the unknown tracts of land in the north shows that Canada does not consider her great areas as tractless wastes but rather as great stretches of territory the wealth of which will yield to scientific search. The hidden treasures of the north are found in the potential wealth of its resources, mineral, forest, fish, land, power, as the case may be. When it is remembered that wheat has been grown as far north as the Arctic Circle Canadians will see the wisdom of exploring these vast territories.

HISTORIC VALUE OF TWO INVENTIONS.

OF ALL THE COMMENTS on the death of Lillian Nordica that we have read, that of the Montreal Mail appears to be the best. The Mail points out that though the voice of the great Nordica is stilled forever, it has not been lost to the present age or to those of the future. This wonderful achievement has been accomplished by means of the gramaphone. Coupled with the invention of the gramaphone is another, equally important in the moving picture machine, while a third one is already invented in a combination of moving picture and talking machines, and which is undergoing a perfecting process. Regarding the important effect of the gramaphone and moving picture machine on the history of the present time, the Mail says:—

> "The phonograph and the moving picture are two achievements of modern inventors which will translate the life of this age to future generations more faithfully than the life of any past age has been translated to this one. No printed page can tell us the fire of eloquence with which the great orators of the past moved their audiences to enthusiasm; we can never hear the voice of Gladstone or Burke or Sheridan or Bright. It is a wonderful thing that the people of the future will be able to hear our great orators and great singers, to see our great actors moving about on the stage, and to hear their most famous speeches.
> So it is true that no great actor, no great orator of today can die. Modern ingenuity has furnished the means of keeping the most valued products of contemporary genius always fresh and vivid for the eyes and ears of the people of all time. Lovers of music, particularly, must regret that the phonograph was unknown in the days of Beethoven and Liszt and Mozart and Wagner and Bach, so that the masters of olden times could have enjoyed the privilege that modern genius enjoys in playing or singing or acting or dancing or speaking to future generations."

LIFE BOATS SHOULD HAVE SIGNALS.

THE TERRIBLE EXPERIENCES of the fifteen men of the burned steamer Columbian who were adrift on the Atlantic for fourteen days, prove that all life boats should be equipped with some signalling apparatus to draw the attention of passing steamers. Of the fifteen men in the boat eleven died when all might have been speedily saved had the life boats been properly equipped. Several steamers came close to them yet they were unable to attract their attention presumably because of the mist, rain, or fog. If wireless apparatus is not feasible for the life boats, bells and whistles are. At any rate, there are enough contrivances already invented that would prevent such terrible suffering as those men experienced while adrift on the Atlantic.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THAT CHAP who got two years in the penitentiary for smashing plate glass windows instead of a free deportation trip 'ome will have plenty of time for reflection on the vanity of human subterfuges.

MR. AMES said in the House of Commons in regard to the Government's proposal with Mackenzie and Mann that "he who sups with the devil should use a long spoon." Very good. Borden has a long spoon—long by forty millions of stock.

THE ONLY PERSONS who haven't gone crazy on gas and oil in Calgary are R. B. Bennett and the editor of the Eye Opener.

HAS THAT new gas well in Calgary any underground connection with the House of Commons? None except perhaps with Opposition.

THAT NEW GAS WELL in Calgary will likely be used to inflate the oil stock. Already prices rose from $12.50 to $200.00 per share.

SO CALGARY has struck a big oil and gas well. Well, Well.

Bernard Shaw's Luck.

Bernard Shaw's wife has just been left $150,000. Some men are born great; some achieve greatness, and some are just lucky in marriage.

Our Unenviable Position.

Dundas Star.

Canada always claims to be proud of her British connection, but when Canadian interests need protection in Mexico, she says to John Bull: "I shall look to you to protect our interests, and you can settle the bill, as usual." This is our unenviable position through the action of Laurier and the Senate.

Eccentricities of Genius.

Brantford Courier.

It is now denied that Sir James Barrie, the famous author and playwright is to marry Lady Scott, widow of the late Robt. F. Scott, the distinguished explorer, who two years ago perished in such heroic fashion after his successful trip to the South Pole.

The rumor recalls the extraordinary circumstances under which Barrie not long ago separated from his first wife. He found that she had bestowed her affections elsewhere and at once facilitated proceedings for a divorce. That obtained he gave the wedding couple a house in which to live, settled so much per annum upon his erstwhile spouse and remains on a most friendly footing with both herself and second husband.

A parallel case is to be found in that of John Ruskin, the most eloquent and original of all writers upon art, and who also beautifully illustrated some of his own works. After his marriage he got his great chum, Millais, afterwards Sir John Millais and President of the Royal Academy, to paint the portrait of his beautiful young wife. They also fell in love and Ruskin seeing the state of affairs, made a divorce easy and, submitted as the only stipulation that their marriage should not in any sense affect the friendship of the trio. He was a frequent visitor at Millais' home and a great favorite of the children by whom they were surrounded as the years rolled on.

Swift, the noted author and satirist, afforded another notable illustration of the queer course of genius with regard to matters matrimonial. For years he paid attention to a couple of women at the same time and when he finally married one of them the pair occupied separate portions of the one house and there was always a chaperone in attendance. Small wonder that one of the dictionary definitions of genius is "peculiar character."

THE PLUMBER

By Walt Mason

With stately stride the plumber comes, and stays around a while and plumbs. He gives the boiler sundry slaps, and tinkers with the pipes and taps and when he leaves my humble place a smile of gladness lights my face. For he has made a modern shack of my abode, which three weeks back, was such as people used to own along about the age of stone. For years I bought all kinds of pills to cure my relatives of ills. My poor old granny had the heaves, and swallowed tea of boneset leaves, year after year, and still felt punk, with daily spasms in her trunk. My aunt was foundered, and she knew green pains with every breath she drew, and though I bought her pails of dope, the poor old girl was shorn of hope. My Uncle Hiram's rheumatiz just kept him muttering, "Gee whiz!" And everyone around the shack had pink lumbago in the back. And then the Wise Man came along, and said, "You'll ne'er be well and strong, you'll always have the grievous gripes until you put in modern pipes." The plumber came, with lead and brass, and freed the place from sewer gas, and sprung some sanitation curves—and gets the praise that he deserves. Now granny has no fell disease; she's swinging on the high trapeze, my aunt can take a fall from Gotch in seven minutes by the watch, my Uncle Hiram, rid of aches, can whip Jack Johnsing in three shakes.

Birthdays of Note

THURSDAY, MAY TWENTY-FIRST

The Hon. Edward Gawler Prior, who held office as controller of inland revenue in the Bowell and Tupper ministries, was born in Yorkshire, England, sixty-one years ago to-day, the son of an Anglican clergyman. He took up the study of mining engineering and coming to Canada at the age of twenty was appointed engineer and surveyor for the Vancouver Coal Mining and Land Company, a position he held for five years. He then became a government inspector of mines for a short time and later went into the hardware business in Victoria, B.C. His interest in the militia brought him into some prominence and he rose to be the commanding officer of the British Columbia Brigade of Garrison Artillery, also acting as commandant of the Canadian Bisley Team in 1890. He entered the House of Commons in 1888 and held a seat there until 1904.

Also born to-day:—

Hon. J. H. Barry, puisne judge of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, born Maugerville, N.B., 1858.

His Honor T. T. Macbeth, county court judge of Middlesex, born London, Ont., 1853.

Thomas McDougall, former general manager of the Quebec Bank, born Three Rivers, 1843.

KEEPING THE SABBATH

WHEN I was a boy my dear old mother uster wash my face with yaller soap so that I could feel it crack when I grinned. Then she'd send me to the leetle church to Sunday school and fer two hours I had to set in a hard seat and larn what a bad boy I had been and arter that come the sermon and that meant an hour or so more agony.

And I got, at last, so's I dreaded to see Sunday come round and I'm not jest sure but that feelin' has stuck a leetle through all my life. Ye see

I got too much church, too much Sunday school!

Maybe if there hadn't been a troutstream runnin' 'cross our farm, maybe if I hadn't loved the sunshine and the birds and the big out of doors quite so well, I might not have minded so much. Whether er no I missed some bigger sermons than the old minister and the Sunday school teacher taught, there's no tellin'. Maybe if I'd got more outdoor sermons when I was a boy I'd hanker fer more indoor sermons to-day.

CHAPTER I.

The surprise which Gloria knew her unexpected arrival would occasion was even greater than she could imagine. Several things had happened in Belmont recently to disturb David Kerr, and he was in no frame of mind for further complications.

The stock-yards company was beginning to hint at certain favors it wished extended, and with an election coming on, Kerr was in no mood for such concessions. Worse still, the Belmont News had just changed ownership, and the new editor was not displaying that subservient fealty which had characterized all Belmont papers in the past. Already the News was snapping at his heels and asking questions which were extremely pointed. To have Gloria descend upon him at such a time was too much for even David Kerr. His mastery of the situation caused him to have no great fear for the stock-yard demands and the newspaper outcry, vexing problems though they were, but Gloria—Gloria in Belmont—was quite another proposition.

"Father, this is Gloria," explained David Kerr's daughter when she had established telephone connection with Locust Lawn

"Gloria!" he exclaimed. "Where are you?"

"Here, in Belmont, at the station. I just came."

"How did it happen? I wasn't looking for you."

"Aren't you glad to see me?"

"Glad to see you? Of course I am, but it's a surprise. When did you come? How do you happen to be here? Why didn't you let me know?"

"I wanted to surprise you," she laughed. "Annabel Hitchcock's aunt died, so we couldn't go to California. I had nothing else to do, so I came home. Wasn't that right?"

"Exactly, exactly. But it's a bad time to come to Belmont."

"I don't care, I'm so glad to be home. How do I get out to Locust Lawn?"

"You can't well wait there for me to come in for you. Take a carriage and tell the driver you want to go to the end of the Townsend Park car line. Wait for me in the drug store. I'll get there almost as soon as you do."

"Hurry, father, because I'm so anxious to see you. It's been an age since I saw you, and you know I don't know a thing about Belmont. I'm just dying to meet everybody, and then I'll ask some of the girls out to visit me."

"We'll talk that over after awhile," was his noncommittal response. "Wait for me at the drug store. Good-by."

The carriage drive through Belmont and Townsend Park, a suburb, was of educational value. It gave her an increasing respect for Belmont. Although there was no remarkable residence district, there were occasional homes which denoted refinement as well as comfortable circumstances. This was not in keeping with what David Kerr's daughter had been taught about her father's town. The number of automobiles also surprised her. By the time she reached the place appointed for her meeting with her father there was not so much of condescension in her attitude toward Belmont.

This changing viewpoint did not mean a diminution of enthusiasm. More than anything else it spurred her curiosity. She realized that the real Belmont was an advance over what she had been led to expect, just how much only a dip into the social whirl could reveal. The pleasurable part of it all was that Gloria was still queen by right of inheritance. If the kingdom was more extensive than she had thought, the court life would also be more brilliant.

Gloria had not long to wait for her father. An old-fashioned carriage covered with mud and drawn by fat bay horses drew up before the drug store. Out of the vehicle a somewhat ponderous individual pulled himself—a smooth-shaven man who appeared to be something over fifty, with heavy jaws and piercing eyes which looked clear through you from under beetling eyebrows. With a cry the girl flung herself upon him and smothered him with kisses.

"You old dear!" she exclaimed. "You haven't changed a bit. I'm so glad to be at home with you. Isn't it just dandy to be back in Belmont!"

The man smiled. Even if he had not changed, as she had sworn, he recognised that she had changed. In the two years since he had seen her, out of the chrysalis had come the butterfly; and this radiant girl was his daughter. For one brief instant he unlocked the neglected chamber of his heart which was the prison of the past, and thought of Gloria's mother. Then the present with its obligations and its stern realities recalled him to the life that was from the days that once had been.

"Welcome home, daughter," he said, making a peck in the general direction of her mouth do duty for an answering kiss. With David Kerr kissing had long ago become an obsolete custom. Then, too, no one had ever accused him of being unduly demonstrative.

Seeing the negro driver bowing and scraping, Gloria left her father to speak to him. She might have forgotten Locust Lawn, but she had not forgotten Locust Lawn's chief factotum. Old Tom, who had been in Kerr's employ for a generation, had been her constant companion when she had outgrown the continuous vigilance of her nurse.

"How d' you do, Tom," she said, extending her hand. "I don't believe you remember me. Now, do you?"

"Bless ye' heart, Miss Glory," grinned the old negro, "I'd sho'ly know you anywhares. An' it does me a pow'ful sight o' good to see you. Why, chile, when you went away you wus jes' a little gal. An' now look at you; you's a reg'lar growed-up woman. Ah reckins you'll want to git mahried soon. Hey?"

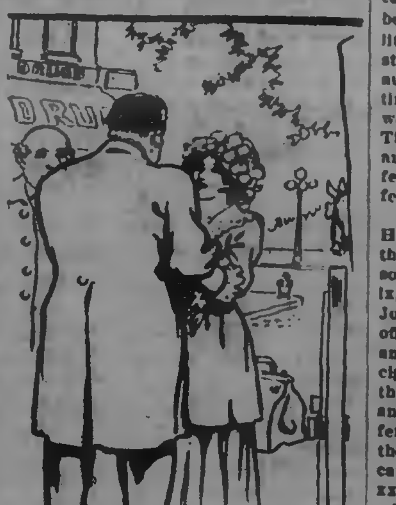
Gloria laughed; that same fresh, infectious laugh of hers which had warned many a wary suitor that he had not found the combination to her heart and had brought him to that plane of friendship on which he was always welcome. As well try to describe Patti's singing, in the days when her charm was greatest, as try to describe Gloria's laugh. There be those persons so presumptuous that on hearing it would aver she had never loved. Whether David Kerr was one of those his countenance did not betray. As he waited for her answer to the question put her by the old negro, a privileged servitor, his face was as impassive as ever it was on the night of an election.

"Why, Tom," she explained when she had ceased to laugh at the foolishness of the question, "I love everybody, of course, but nobody in the wide, wide world like that. I'm never going to marry any one; do you think so?"

"Miss Glory, you neveh do know what de Lord'll pervide. Look at me. Ah done say dat, too, when I wus young lak you; but Ah's had fo' wives already, an' mah time ain't come to die yit."

"All right, Tom. I don't know what the Lord will provide, but I'm not going out of my way to help Providence."

The words of this colloquy were neither more nor less than David Kerr had anticipated. It was from the spirit rather than from the wording of her reply that the father sought to ascertain the answer. It had been his one hope that somewhere on her travels she would meet a man worthy the love of a woman such as she, that she would marry him and never return to Belmont. Almost unconsciously, with that end vaguely in view, he had been diminishing his activities. He had money enough for Gloria's future, already she had her own income, and his age made even power irksome. He would move away from Belmont when Gloria married, and when she came to visit him it would be to some charming rural spot in the east she loved so well. Other men of his type had retired, why not he? One had even raised a horse which had won the greatest classic of the English turf. But for him, he had mused, there would be no such pursuits to bring him into the public eye. That he wished to avoid for Gloria's sake. And now all his plans seemed to be coming to naught—Gloria had come home, free of heart and anxious to mingle in Belmont society.



"You Old Dear!"

The drive to Locust Lawn was uneventful. Gloria watched for landmarks along the way, and commented on the changes twelve years had made. Locust Lawn seemed closer to town than in the old days. Most of her remarks about places they passed were addressed to Tom, because together, when she was a child, they had been over the road many times. David Kerr, never much of a conversationalist, was content to listen, hoping some chance speech might aid in clearing up the situation. Everything Gloria said, however, seemed only a confirmation of her determination to enter at once into Belmont's gayeties.

"Dar's de first sight o' Locust Lawn, Miss Glory."

They had just reached the top of a hill and Tom pointed with his whip to a house on the next eminence. Looking up Gloria saw, not the estate of her imagination but a square red brick house looking rather desolate through the bare branches of many trees. Locust Lawn at the end of winter was no enchanted fairy bower; but she was too clever a girl, and far too good at heart, to betray any disappointment. To her the place was home, and she was anxious to recognize it as such.

By Timely Use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Mrs. Sowers' Own Statement.

Hodgdon, Maine.—"I feel it a duty I owe to all suffering women to tell what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for me. One year ago I found myself a terrible sufferer. I had pains in both sides and such a soreness I could scarcely straighten up at times. My back ached, I had no appetite and was so nervous I could not sleep, then I would be so tired mornings that I could scarcely get around. It seemed almost impossible to move or do a bit of work and I thought I never would be any better until I submitted to an operation. I commenced taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and soon felt like a new woman. I had no pains, slept well, had good appetite and could do almost all my own work for a family of four. I shall always feel that I owe my good health to your medicine."—Mrs. HAYWARD SOWERS, Hodgdon, Maine.

If you are ill do not drag along until an operation is necessary, but at once take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

Lesson VIII.—Second Quarter, For May 24, 1914.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Luke xvii, 1-10. Memory Verses, 3, 4—Golden Text, I Cor. i, 31—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

There is no doubt a connection always between every part of the Scriptures and the context, that which goes before or after, but sometimes it is a little difficult to see it. In all our Bible study we must rely wholly upon the author, the Holy Spirit, but we are ofttimes slow to hear or see. How much we do need anointed eyes and ears! The unavoidable conflict between light and darkness will always cause offenses, so the Pharisees were often offended with Christ (Matt. xiii, 57).

It had been prophesied of Christ that He would be a rock of offense to both the houses of Israel (Isa. viii, 14), and so he proved to be according to Rom. ix, 33; I Cor. i, 23; I Pet. ii, 8. Even John the Baptist seems to have been offended with Christ (Luke vii, 19-23), and on that last night He told His disciples that even though He might allow them to be put out of the synagogues and to be killed they must not be offended (John xvi, 1-3). Yet he told them that they would be offended because of Him that very night (Matt. xxvi, 31).

There was a time when He said to Peter, "Get thee behind me, Satan; thou art an offense unto me, for thou savourest not the things that be of God, but those that be of man" (Matt. xvi, 23).

Perhaps we have here the key to at least a part of the whole matter of offenses; the things of God are an offense to men, and the things of men are an offense to God, or, as He said in the context of the last lesson, "That which is highly esteemed among men is an abomination in the sight of God."

In the first two verses of our lesson has He a reference to the rich man's being an offense or stumbling block to the poor beggar, and is the truth the same as when He said of Judas Iscariot, "It had been good for that man if he had not been born?" (Matt. xvi, 24.) If any of our members should cause us to stumble into hell fire it would be better for us not to have them (Matt. xviii, 8, 9; Mark ix, 43-48).

We must use all care not to be an offense to others, even in our eating and drinking (Rom. xiv, 13, 21; I Cor. viii, 13). If others offend us we must forgive them when they repent, even so often as seven times in a day (verses 3, 4). When Peter asked if he should forgive as many as seven times our Lord answered until seventy times seven (Matt. xviii, 21, 22), which I understand to mean till the kingdom comes, the complete fulfillment of the seventy sevens of Dan. ix, 24. We all need forgiveness so often that we cannot but continually forgive others. We can only freely and constantly forgive others and be kept from being an offense to others as we live in the power of the reality of the coming kingdom, when all that offends shall cease to be (Matt. xiii, 41). A living faith, for a grain of mustard seed suggests life, will accomplish great things (Matt. xvii, 20; xxi, 21, 22), but who is there who can show a fulfillment of the words, "All things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive?" What is our difficulty? Why do we not know more of the power of God and His kingdom in our lives? Is it because, like the elder brother, we are trying to do our duty, but not understanding our Father's love nor the abundance that is ours, saying to Him, "Thou never gavest me a kid that I might make merry with my friends," while He is saying to us, "Thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine?" (Luke xv, 29, 31.) As the riches of His grace and glory control us we shall be less apt to be offended, even as it is written, "Great peace have they who love the law, and nothing shall offend them" (Ps. cxix, 165).

We shall also in the same power be better able to yield to others, and "yielding pacifieth great offenses" (Eccl. x, 4). The love of God, which in Christ and by virtue of His great sacrifice makes us sure of a welcome such as the prodigal received and of bliss beyond this life such as the poor beggar entered into, should constrain us to have nothing but love for all, even for those who hate us, if such there be; the love that is kind, that suffers long, that seeketh not her own and is not provoked (II Cor. v, 14, 15; I Cor. xiii, 4-7).

The word duty, which is found in the last verse of our lesson, is not a word for the believer, for we read that when we have done our duty we are unprofitable servants, and no believer should be an unprofitable servant. Yet how often we hear the word in reference to our daily life, because love is not known. Imagine a man loving his wife, or a wife her husband, from a sense of duty. What kind of a home would that be? I once heard a sermon on duty, and it made me so tired that as soon as I went home I took my Concordance to see what was really written in the Bible about it, and the result was that I never use the word in reference to the Christian life.

May we so live in the love of God that all that is not love shall be crowded out of our lives, the life of Jesus made manifest in us, the righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit which are characteristics of the kingdom ever fill us (II Cor. iv, 10, 11; Rom. xiv, 17).

Score Healed By Prayer.

KINGSTON, May 21.—That a score or more Kingston people have been healed by prayer is the claim of Earl W. Clark, who is conducting a special service for members of the apostolic faith. The most conspicuous case is that of the five-year-old son of Mrs. E. E. Vallier. The lad's arm was paralysed until Sunday night. Mrs. J. Pound, suffering from varicose veins, was cured, and many others cured of rheumatism, it is claimed.

TUMOR IN THE STOMACH

Completely Removed When She Took "Fruit-a-tives"

NEWBURY, ONT., April 4th. 1913.

"Some years ago, I was sick in bed, and thought I was going to die. I had a growth in my stomach, which the doctors said was a Tumor and they said that the only thing to do was to go to the hospital and have the tumor cut out. I dreaded an operation although both doctors said it was the only cure. I said I would die before being operated on.

At this time, my mother in Alvinston sent me some "Fruit-a-tives" and induced me to try them as she had heard of another woman who had been cured of a similar growth in the stomach by taking "Fruit-a-tives".

To please my mother, I began to take "Fruit-a-tives" with the happy result that they cured me. I have not been to see a doctor since and my health is first class.

I recommend "Fruit-a-tives" every time I get a chance and I will be glad to have you publish this letter as some other woman may now be a sufferer from the same trouble and "Fruit-a-tives" will cure her" MRS. A. McDONALD.

PLANS COMPLETED FOR NAVAL RESERVE FORCE

Canada's First Volunteer Naval Organization Will Be Started in Victoria, B.C., and Will Include Three Departments, Atlantic, Pacific and Great Lakes—Vessels for Training to be Provided.

OTTAWA, May 21. — A volunteer naval reserve force for Canada will soon be an accomplished fact. An order in council has been passed by the Government and signed by the Duke of Connaught authorizing the establishment of such a force.

A sum will be placed in the supplementary estimates sufficient for this year's work and preparations for the organization of volunteers have already been made by the naval service department.

The first volunteer naval force to be established is at Victoria, B.C., where there has been an official organization for some time maintained by private individuals. This will receive official recognition. Admiral Kingsmill has left for Victoria to arrange details.

The Niobe and Rainbow will be utilized for the Atlantic and Pacific for training purposes, and in course of time other war vessels will be secured for training purposes on the great lakes.

Instructors from the British navy will be engaged.

The headquarters of the new force will be at Ottawa, but it will be divided into three divisions: the Atlantic, the great lakes and the Pacific. On the Atlantic coast the divisional headquarters will be Halifax, and the scope will be all along the St. Lawrence as far as Montreal.

Toronto will be the headquarters of the great lakes division, which will include the Ottawa river, the upper St. Lawrence, the great lakes and all waterways as far as the Rocky Mountains.

Esquimalt will be the headquarters of the Pacific division, which will have control of all the waters west of the Rockies. There will be three systems of training available for volunteers of all classes.

NORWOOD NEWS NOTES

Special Correspondence.

Norwood, May 21.—Mr. Henry Beavis, of Lakefield, visited his friends, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Laing, of town, over Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Twidy, Dr. Blizzard, Miss O. Slogatt, and Mr. Earl Slogett, all of Warkworth, motored to Norwood on Sunday evening and visited friends.

Norwood lacrosse team journeyed to Hastings on Friday night of last week to play Hastings a game. The game commenced at 6.30, and throughout the first half sides were evenly balanced, sides being able to score but one goal each. But in the second half Hastings, by their reinforcement of Brat Dodd, who had not shown up for first half, gave the Norwood bunch a hard chase and scored 4 more goals, giving Norwood fellows but little chance to score back. The game was called and the score remained at 5-1 in favor of Hastings. The return game will be played on the Norwood field on Wednesday evening, game commencing at 6.30. The grounds have been fixed up by Constable Puffer, the holes having been filled up and the small objects taken off the ground. The goal posts have also been put up and will be in use for the first time on Wednesday evening. The nets have also arrived. These two games will give the Norwood bunch good practice for their game on the 28th with the railroad town, Havelock.

Mr. Wm. Minore, of town, also Mr. Henry Nicholl, made a short trip to Havelock on Friday evening last to attend a meeting there.

A number of the Norwood young people attended the lacrosse club dance in Havelock on Monday evening last. A number also from Hastings motored through town, also on their way.

The Epworth League are endeavoring to organize a tennis club for the young people of the Methodist Church. Courts will be the two on the church premises.

Mr. Horace Calder, of town, visited friends in Campbellford on Sunday last.

Bush fires have been raging around the town on Tuesday of this week. The northern and south-eastern skies were heavily clouded with smoke of fires about three miles out in the country.

Dr. Stewart, of town, is again out in his car. This being the first of the season for him.

Mr. Wilbersmith has moved into Mr. Geo. Duffield's house next to E. P. Cuffe's dry goods store.

On Thursday of last week Misses Annie and Verna Dryden, Nellie Davidson, Eva Martin, and Cololla Abernethy, all of Campbellford, attended the Woman's Missionary Convention in the Methodist Church.

Mrs. Nelson Beavis and Miss Mae Beavis visited Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Laing on Thursday last.

Mr. Peter Gunn has rented another part of the Metcalfe Block to make his residence.

The Norwood Band is busily engaged in preparing new music for the celebration on the 25th.

A by-law has been passed by the Town Council forbidding the riding of bicycles on sidewalks and the playing of lacrosse and baseball, etc., in the streets. This by-law is being thoroughly enforced by Constable Puffer.

INDIAN RIVER

Indian River, May 21.—The Rev. P. H. Robert has assumed his duties as pastor of the Indian River Baptist Church. Mrs. Robert is with him.

Mr. Arthur Devlin lost a valuable mare and foal this week.

Mr. Jas. Dewart shipped a carload of cattle yesterday.

The C.P.R. has taken away the semaphores and will run without this protection in future.

Mr. Jno. Armstrong has purchased a fine new driver. It is a high stepper and will make the others take notice at the Fall Fairs this year.

Mr. James Fitzgerald is home for a rest. Mr. Jno. Sullivan also visited in the neighborhood.

NO EQUIPMENT FOR THE POLICE FORCE

Ald. Clarke, Chairman of Police Committee, has given instructions to Acting Chief of Police Short to purchase handcuffs, nippers and batons for the police force. It may be a surprise to our citizens to learn that the town has none of these articles in its possession.—Lindsay Post.

IS COMMITTED TO INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL

A juvenile, aged fourteen, charged with theft from T. B. Maniece's store in East City, was this morning committed to the Industrial School for a period not exceeding five years. The other youthful prisoner, aged twelve, was allowed out on suspended sentence.

Lad Has Disappeared.

The local Police Department have received a circular and message from Police Chief Vincent of Sault Ste Marie, regarding a boy named James Smith aged fifteen years who has disappeared. His left arm will probably be bandaged owing to recent injury. It is understood that the boy has relatives in this district.

In ironing fine silks and muslins, place a piece of fine cambric between the iron and the material.

Police Investigating.

Sanitary Inspector Spence states this morning that the complaints regarding the odors at the incinerator were greatly exaggerated. Investigation into the matter of some parties dumping refuse outside the incinerator is being made by the police.

Decorate for Visit.

The county buildings will be decorated appropriately for the visit of the Duke of Connaught. Warden Shaw and Reeve Walsh, of Douro, have been appointed to look after the matter and say that the decorations will be very elaborate.

CHILDREN'S EYESIGHT

It is astonishing the number of children who suffer from the effects of eyestrain, and many of them are unjustly blamed for being unambitious or mentally stupid. It has been shown by authentic investigation under municipal direction that from 20 to 30 per cent. of the children in public schools have defective vision and should wear glasses.

We make a specialty of examining children's sight by the most improved scientific methods, and if your child does not need glasses, we will tell you so frankly, and make no charge for the examination. But if your child should need glasses, we will guarantee that the glasses we fit are the proper correction, and will give perfect results. Our 10 years of successful optical business in this city is the guarantee we offer you.

We carry a special line of children's spectacle frames in heavy weight, in Gold Filled and Aluminum.

JOLLY GATHERING AT F. CO. ANNUAL DINNER

had not been sufficient men of No. 6 company out to the ranges so far this season. More men meant more shooting and that's what was greatly needed. The Saturday afternoons were opportune times for practice. A man will be sent from each company to the rifle shooting at Ottawa this year, and this regiment had to make its reputation. "Get shooting good and you will be an A1 Company," he concluded.

"Oh, we'll get the cup all right," remarked Capt. McLean.

A violin solo rendered by William Wilson captivated the gathering.

Quartermaster Eastwood commented on the fine appearance of the men. He congratulated Capt. McLean on the fine appearance of his company. They were very efficient. He also urged them to get into the shooting game. It was a popular, instructive and interesting sport. They could spend much valuable time at the excellent rifle ranges they possessed. It was great out door sport.

Major Davidson said the company possessed many distinguishing features. Capt. McLean was an excellent officer. He kept a very fatherly eye on his men. They were very fortunate to be in such good company. He, Major Davidson, as Chaplain of the Regiment, desired immensely to be in their hearts. He was a friend of the regiment. He sincerely hoped they would maintain their good reputation.

Capt. McLean expressed the sincere regrets of Major Walker, who was unable to attend owing to illness.

Capt. McPherson remarked on the admirable type of men in the company. He himself was another of the old time members of the company. They had good times in those days also. It makes everything easy in the regiment when things are in such a flourishing condition. He commented on their great work last year when they won at the annual inspection. He outlined the assistance the Sports Committee were willing to grant them. It was up to the men and they would have everything in that line arranged to their entire satisfaction. They were going to renovate the recreation room. A pool table, papers, books, magazines and other affairs would be arranged for the members of the regiment.

Asa Huycke sang "Sands of the Desert" in fine manner. Otto Gliddon also rendered a clarionet solo in talented manner.

Col. Miller, one of the veterans, stated he was most favorably impressed on the fine appearance of the men. A soldier was always to think of his command and duty. They were not to falter. Did the brave six hundred who went into the death valley falter? asked the speaker. He then brought down the house with a recitation.

"A man is a handicap to the Government if he can't shoot on the field," said Col. Miller, in speaking of shooting.

Sister Companies.

The toast of the Sister Companies was proposed by Lt. Campbell.

In responding to the toast, Col. Young, of the 19th Brigade, commented on the appearance of the men assembled around the festive board. The infantry and all were hand in hand with each other. It was impossible to succeed in field of battle without the assistance of each other.

Major Medd, of the 3rd Prince of Wales Dragoons, in responding to this toast, gave an interesting account of his first military experiences. He first became connected with the soldiers when sixteen years of age. He congratulated Capt. McLean on turning out such a fine lot of men.

Capt. Fee, of the 24th Field Battery C. F. A., also commented on the appearance of the men. He had been a military man for a number of years, having seen military service in Africa, and was proud to be assembled at the festive board with such a fine lot of men.

A duet by Messrs. Huycke and Seymour was greatly appreciated by the gathering.

Non-Commissioned Officers.

The honor of proposing the toast of The N.C.O.'s fell to Capt. McPherson, who spoke of their efficiency. This was half the battle in obtaining good results. They were the important parts of the regiment.

The toast was responded to by Col. Sergt. Dodds and Col.-Sergt. Howarth.

Among the officers present were Lt.-Col. Clegg, Capt. McLean, Lt.-Col. Miller, Major Mills, Major Davidson, Major Fee, Major Medd, Lt. Ackerman, Capt. Ackerman, Capt. McPherson, Quarter-master Eastwood, Lt. Leck, Lt. Campbell, Col. Young and others.

Huycke's orchestra supplied music for the occasion. After four hours' solid enjoyment the gathering broke up at midnight with the singing of the National Anthem.

The matter of attending divine service on Sunday was impressed on the members and a full turn out requested.

FELINES JOIN NEW CHORUS VIA INCINERATOR

Deadly War is Being Waged Against Cats

DOGS SUFFER TOO

Meow, meow. Did anybody see our cat? The cat mortality rate has increased in an astounding manner during the past few weeks, and Sanitary Inspector Spence believes there is a wholesale poisoning going on. He also says that the garbage men have been called upon pick up numerous dead dogs, while on Wolfe Street this week six dead chickens were found It is the opinion of the inspector that someone with a grudge against the cat family has decided to wipe out this element of vocal discord. The campaign for "no cats" seems to centre around William Street, where no less than six dead ones have been picked up and taken to the incinerator in the past few days. The inspector says he can understand to a certain extent why people poison cats, especially those who are fond of sleep and there is also cause for putting over the knock-out on the canines, but that chickens should be poisoned is more than he can understand. Six chickens were found in one day on Wolfe Street, and the name of the owner could not be ascertained.

Everytime the garbage men escort a dead cat or dog to the incinerator it costs the city fifty cents, so if any person desires to have his cat or dog shot into the echoless beyond, kindly take them to the incinerator, as fifty cents as fifty cents. Such is the inspector's advice.

PUGSLEY AGAIN AT HEAD OF OPPOSITION FORCES

Leader of Naval Bill Blockade of Last Year is Brought Into Play to Hold Up C.N.R. Guarantee Legislation, Although He Denies Any Intention of Delaying Committee

OTTAWA, May 21. — The House spent many hours yesterday upon the Canadian Northern resolutions. Little progress was made and the long, desultory discussion recalled the fortnight of continuous talking at the last session when the Liberals were fighting the naval aid bill. Hon. Dr. Pugsley yesterday morning began what looks like a campaign of obstruction, although more than once he protested that he did not desire to delay the committee. Both Solicitor-General Meighen and Finance Minister White were hard at work on the firing line throughout the debate dealing with unfair insinuations and taking sharp action with misleading statements.

Hon. Dr. Pugsley argued that Parliament was stultifying itself by declaring that the Canadian Northern had $100,000,000 of paid up capital stock. The company was probably bankrupt, but in any event no sane man in Canada would buy the stock at ten cents on the dollar. The equity of the company in its undertaking, after all debts were paid, was very small. He believed that the Government should take an option on the common stock of the company, exercisable at any time within five years, but in no event should the Government undertake to pay more than five, or, at the most, ten million dollars for the interests of Mackenzie and Mann in the undertaking.

Mr. German (Welland) said it would require one hundred and fifty million dollars to pay the debts of the Canadian Northern and complete the system. The proposed guarantee of $45,000,000 would not be sufficient.

Mr. Borden pointed out that the company had assets amounting to $58,000,000, which would become available if the pending legislation was passed by Parliament.

Mr. German: "I do not admit that, but even if it were the case, there would be a deficit of nearly $50,000,000. Will the Prime Minister say that no more money will be required if these resolutions are adopted?"

Mr. Borden said that all estimates of that kind were, in the nature of things, more or less unreliable. The Laurier Government had undertaken to build a road for $16,000,000, which cost $160,000,000.

Mr. E. M. Macdonald took Hon. Mr. White sharply to task for telling Parliament at the last session that the authorized capital of the Canadian Notrhern was $70,000,000 and that the Government was getting 10 per cent. of this in consideration of the subsidy granted. The Minister had misled the House.

Mr. White vigorously disputed this statement. He said that he could not characterize Mr Macdonald's assertion as he would like to without violating the rules of the House, but intimated he would frankly tell Mr. Macdonald what he thought of him if the latter would give him the opportunity outside of the chamber.

Mr. Macdonald replied that the Finance Minister's statement at the last session was true in fact but he did not charge that the Minister had intentionally misled Parliament.

Mr. White replied that he had understood the member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) to charge him with intentional deception. He was glad that Mr. Pugsley had resumed his seat, because there would now be one man on the Opposition side who could understand a legal proposition. He then went on to explain the distinction between authorized stock and issued stock.

Hon. Frank Oliver complained that the contract between the Government and the company did not provide for additional branch lines in the west or for extensions into the Peace River country.

BUSH FIRES ARE NEAR THE SOO

Farmers Fear Change of the Wind

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont., May 21.—Bush fires are raging fiercely northwest of this city to-day, causing much alarm to farmers in the Townships of Korah and Tarentorus and up to Bellevue, along the line of the Algoma Central Railway. All the buildings on the farm of William Robertson were completely destroyed as the owners of the farm are at present at Priceville, Ont. Residents in the fire zone say that if the wind should change from its present direction, turning inland, many farms will be in danger. On the fourth line of Korah there are between 30 and 40 men out fighting fires, and burning embers are said to be flying for miles owing to the high wind prevailing. The probabilities are that there will be rain soon, which is expected to result in putting the fires out.

Fires in Ottawa Valley.

OTTAWA, May 21.—Bush fires are raging with increasing strength throughout the Ottawa Valley and if rain does not come soon or a high wind should arise, some of the villages along the Pontiac line, above Hull, will be in danger of being wiped out.

Serious fires are raging in the bush six miles east, four miles north and eight miles west from the Grand Trunk's Highland Inn, Algonquin Park.

A thick pall of smoke from the fires in the district is hanging over Ottawa.

Rain Quenches Forest Fires.

DULUTH, Minn., May 21—Reports reaching Duluth yesterday from various sections menaced Tuesday by brush and forest fires, indicate that the fires have been controlled by men or the rainstorm. Smoke that rested on Lake Superior was driven away by the wind, and navigation is under normal conditions.

MANITOBA BARS "WILD CATTING"

WINNIPEG, May 21.—There will be no Calgary oil stocks of the speculative kind sold in Manitoba, Judge Robson, public utilities commissioner, has refused stockholders who rushed down from Calgary, permission to sell their stocks in this city or province. His sole aim is to protect the public.

No Calgary oil stock will be sold in Manitoba until the corporations who wish to place it on the market satisfy Judge Robson that the stock is for a bona fide well.

BRUSH FIRE AROUND CAMP

Outrage at Aldershot Attributed to Militants

ALDERSHOT, Eng., May 21. — A great brush fire, believed by the authorities to have been work of militant suffragettes, encircled, shortly after midnight, the royal pavilion in Long Valley, where King George and Queen Mary are in residence, in the centre of a great army of British troops. The entire camp was alarmed and several battalions of infantry and regiments of cavalry turned out to fight the flames.

Water is plentiful in the vicinity, but the swords of the cavalrymen proved a better means of extinguishing the fire, as with them the men cut down and beat out the blazing undergrowth.

Suffragettes have shown great activity since the King and Queen arrived here, and as Their Majesties left the royal pavilion yesterday two women dashed in front of their carriage waving a banner with the words "Votes for Women."

CATTLE MARKETS

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, May 20.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 52 cars, comprising 489 cattle, 1682 hogs, 346 sheep and lambs and 524 calves.

Butchers.

Choice steers, "loads," at $8 to $8.25; and one extra quality load $8.40; good to choice at $7.75 to $8; medium at $7.50 to $7.75; common at $7 to $7.40; choice cows at $7 to $7.50; good at $6.50 to $6.75; common cows at $5 to $5.75; canners and cutters at $3.50 to $4.50; choice bulls at $7 to $7.50; good at $6.50 to $6.75; common bulls at $6 to $6.25.

Stockers and Feeders.

The market for stockers and feeders held about steady. Choice steers, 800 to 900 lbs., sold at $7.35 to $7.50; steers, 600 to 700 lbs., sold at $7 to $7.25; stock heifers, $6.75 to $7.10; short-keep feeders, 900 to 1000 lbs. each, sold at $7.60 to $7.80.

Milkers and Springers.

Receipts of milkers and springers yesterday were light, not enough to supply the demand. Prices were very firm at $50 to $100, and one extra quality Shorthorn springer brought $125.

Veal Calves.

Receipts of veal calves were larger but prices were just as firm as at the commencement of the week. Choice calves sold at $9.50 to $10; good calves, $8 to $9; medium, $7 to $8, and common, $6.75 to $7.

Sheep and Lambs.

There were 346 sheep and lambs reported on sale. Prices were firm. Sheep, ewes, sold at $6.50 to $7.75; rams, $6 to $6.50; clipped yearling American wethers, $9.50; yearling natives, unclipped, $8.75 to $9.50; spring lambs, $7 to $10 each.

Hogs.

The hog market was firmer. Selects, fed and watered sold at $8.35 to $8.40, and $8 to $8.05 f.o.b., and $8.60 to $8.65 weighed off cars.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, May 20.—At the C.P.R. live stock market offerings were 800 cattle, 250 sheep and lambs, 1500 hogs and 900 calves. The trade in cattle was rather quiet, owing to the fact that some of the largest packers are operating direct with Toronto for their supplies, and therefore the demand was somewhat limited. The tone of the market was firm and prices were well maintained, with sales of good to choice steers at $8 to $8.75; fair at $7 to $7.50, and the lower grades at from $5.25 to $6.50, while choice butchers' cows sold at $7.50 to $7.75, and the lower grades from that down to $5.75, and bulls from $6 to $8.25 per 100 pounds.

A weaker feeling developed in the market for hogs again today and prices scored another decline of 10c to 15c per 100 pounds, owing to the fact the offerings were much larger than expected, especially from the Canadian Northwest.

(Formerly Windsor.)

Well painted, stained, varnished, or enameled woodwork in your house makes a great deal of difference in its appearance and cleanliness and makes housekeeping easier.

For instance, you can repaint the woodwork any color you desire with S-W Family Paint, a paint made especially for this purpose and put up in handy penny-lever cans. Just the thing for a painted finish on baseboards, wainscotting, doors, cupboards, shelves, flower boxes, kitchen furniture, etc.

White enamel today is very popular. S-W Enamel is ideal for the woodwork of bathrooms, bedrooms, and is very attractive when used in parlors, or sitting rooms, decorated in light tones.

On new woodwork, a stained and varnish finish is often preferred to a painted or enamel finish and for this purpose first apply a coat of S-W Oil Stain or S-W Handcraft Stain which can be applied to any kind of wood. Allow twenty-four hours for the stain to dry then follow with two coats of S-W Kopal, a durable, general purpose varnish.

On old woodwork where the original finish is not too worn, one coat of S-W Kopal Varnish will give you a satisfactory job. If you wish to change the color first apply one coat of S-W Floorlac, a combined stain and varnish that comes in Oak, Mahogany, Walnut, Rosewood, etc., and then follow with one coat of S-W Floorlac Clear or a coat of S-W Kopal.

We handle a full line of Sherwin-Williams Paints and Varnishes so are in a position to take care of your every need.

PEACE PARLEY IS OPENED

Main Issues to be Discussed To-day

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., May 21.—If ever the phrase "history in the making" was applicable, it is applicable at Niagara Falls, Ont., to-day. Mediation between the United States and Mexico has begun, and Ambassador Da Gama of Brazil made the opening speech of the conference which was suitably replied to by Justice Lamar of the United States and Senor Rabasa, chief of the Mexican delegates.

At three o'clock the mediators gathered in the solarium. A provincial policeman, of whom there are two in the hotel, was stationed outside the door.

It is understood that the main issues of the conference will be discussed to-day. The course of the mediation is being most keenly watched by Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, the British Ambassador at Washington, by reason of the fact that an immense amount of British capital is locked up in Mexico, which will be very much affected by the trend of mediation here. Britain is prepared when the moment arrives to ask for a large indemnity from the powers that be in Mexico for the ruthless murder of William Benton, and other things that have occurred.

It is understood that the British Foreign Office is keeping very closely in touch with the situation and all the latest developments.

The A. B. C. representatives have constituted themselves the hosts of the American delegates when the latter cross over to this side for the conferences, and every possible courtesy is extended to them. The Minister of the Argentine, Dr. Naon, has engaged a whole suite on the second floor, which he has placed in his name at the disposal of all the delegates.

There are more ways than one for a woman to have her way.

SENATORS FATTENED BATTING AVERAGES AT THE EXPENSE OF TRACEY AND BELTING

Wild and Wooly Encounter Goes to Shagmen by Score of 11-2

The rumble which was heard in the distance yesterday was not that of an earthquake, but the fireworks which were thrown in with the rumble rivalled Vesuvius. The disturbance was caused by a stampede of Senator feet, which was a near approach to the buffalo advance, as Shaughnessey and his men raced around the bases in merry-go-round style at Riverside Park, and vanquished the Petes by the score of 11-2. In crap game language the Senators rolled a natural and the Petes chucked a Little Joe. Yes, indeed, it was some reversal of form. The men from parliament hill leaned on the slants of Mistahs Tracey and Belting in cruel fashion and collected fifteen hits, while the associates of the said Mistahs Tracey and Belting had a trio of boots which hurt.

It was a weird game of baseball from a local point of view, but from the telescope of the other fellow it was very nice. Batting averages were fattened, while stolen bases to the number of eight, were added to the list of crimes committed by the Senators. In fact, the winners ran the paths like a flock of loose deer. Tracey's shoots were easy picking for the league leaders, and they poked out eight hits in four innings and scored an equal number of runs. Tracey cannot be blamed entirely for the slaughter, as his team mates had their three boots while he worked. He hit one and passed two during his stay on the mound.

Belting relieved Tracey in the fifth and he sailed along in good style until the eighth innings when the war clubs again got in some damaging work. In that inning four hits were collected and three runs scored.

There was another reason why the Petes did not win. A long chap named Peterson, who wore his hat on the side of his dome in "I should worry" fashion, did mound duty for the Senators. He was about as narrow in his ideas as to who should win, as he was in stature, and allowed the Petes five scattered hits. He issued three free tickets and scored two runs.

Every man on the Ottawa team had a hit or so. Rogers, Dolan, Nill, Powers and Lage having two, while His Royal Leanness the slabman, had three. "Shag" collected his first hit of the series in the eighth. For the locals Wilcox had two pokes, while King slammed one for two sacks.

Eight stolen bases are credited to the winners and of that number Rogers had four. Miller's hand was very bad. He was forced to play with the two middle fingers on the right hand bandaged together, and Ottawa took advantage of the handicap.

Brevity is the soul of wit, so 'tis said, so we will try to tell the funny story in as few words as possible. Dolan opened the second frame by drawing a pass. Powers sacrificed him along. Lage cracked one through second and Dolan counted. Lage pilfered second and then had the audacity to swipe third, while Chief Thompson sat in the stand right opposite the bag. Fried fanned, but long Mr. Peterson singled to right and Lage scored. Bullock was safe on first and Peterson on second when Fox heaved the pill over King's head. Along came Nill and just to show the people there is nothing in a name, clouted out a single which scored Peterson. Shag was hit, but Rogers flew to Wilcox. In the third the Senators continued the attack and Dolan opened with a double to centre. Powers single to left scored Cosy, and Powers scored on Lage's double. Swarts dropped Fried's fly, and Peterson doubled, scoring Lage. Bullock was an easy out and Fried scored, but Nill poked a long fly to Blount. Peterson was doubled on the play before he could get back to second. Another run came in the fourth on a pass to Rogers and Powers' triple. In the eighth Peterson, Nill, "Shag" and Dolan singled and three runs were scored.

The locals got their first run on Bullock's high throw over Dolan, which allowed Byrne to make second, and three infield outs. The other came in the eighth, when Fox singled and King doubled.

A carload of dynamite was unloaded at the park yesterday afternoon.

Three real knockers were in the grand stand. All they did was knock They were strangers, so 'tis said. Along about the eighth inning they got cold feet as Kelly and Byrne had intimated they would get the wolves, but the mouthy ones beat it before the game was over.

Both sides knicked about Umpire Evans' decisions on balls and strikes but he was fair. The locals were in the majority so far as kicking was concerned, but that was quite natural.

That Ottawa wrecking crew would have hit any pitching yesterday. There was no stopping them once they got under sail and the artillery portion of the brigade which had fallen down on its hitting in the series made up for lost time yesterday.

Lefty Rogers stole second and third in the fourth. In the sixth he stole second went to third on an out, and tried to pilfer home, but was nailed.

Nill, the Ottawa middle station man is about the class of the league in that position. He looks like the best in the league's history.

If Gorman were a hitter he would be a grand first sacker, but his hitting to date is weak. He is also inexperienced on the paths.

Wilcox went into third on a force play standing up, was called safe, but over-ran the bag and was tagged out before he could get back.

In the second frame every Ottawa player faced the pitcher.

The locals did not look good in their warm up. It was an off day.

The least said about it the better.

KING EDWARDS KEEP CLEAN SHEET

Made 18 Runs and Held Westerners Scoreless

The Junior Public School game last night between Queen Mary and King Edward schools resulted in a win for the latter by the large score of 18-0. The Queen Mary team used two twirlers, Williamson and Patterson, but they both looked alike to the boys from the south.

The batteries:

King Edward—Frost and Braund.

Queen Mary—Patterson, Williamson and Flowers.

Centrals Won.

The battle between Central and Queen Alexandra proved to be a very interesting game. Although the Centrals nosed out by 20-17, they had at no time during the seven innings a big enough lead to warrant a win.

The batteries:—

Central—Frost, Sharp and Gibson.

Queen Alexandra—Simpson, Head and Snelgrove.

The other conflict in which the King George and South Centrals clashed, was not featured with so high a score as the other games, but it was very one-sided, the boys from East City having it on their opponents like a circus tent. The final score read 13-4 in favor of King George.

Batteries:—

King George—Gillespie and Anderson.

South Central—Montgomery and Halley.

Umpires—Messrs. Steer and Colling.

LACROSSE SCHEDULE

Hastings Open at Peterboro May 30

The meeting of the convenors of this district of the O.A.L.A., Mr. T. P. Lancaster, Havelock, and Messrs. W. H. Rae of Campbellford, A. T. Armstrong of Havelock, A. Kemp of Norwood, C. Vernon of Hastings, and E. Dillon of the local club was held at Hastings and the following schedule for the intermediate series drawn up:

May 29—Campbellford at Norwood.

May 30—Hastings at Peterboro.

May 30—Havelock at Campbellford.

June 10—Peterboro at Hastings.

June 12—Norwood at Havelock.

June 17—Campbellford at Hastings.

June 19—Havelock at Peterboro.

June 26—Peterboro at Norwood.

June 26—Hastings at Campbellford.

July 3—Norwood at Peterboro.

July 8—Campbellford at Havelock.

July 15—Havelock at Hastings.

July 15—Peterboro at Campbellford.

July 22—Havelock at Norwood.

July 23—Campbellford at Peterboro.

July 27—Hastings at Havelock.

July 31—Norwood at Hastings.

Aug. 5—Peterboro at Havelock.

Aug. 5—Norwood at Campbellford.

Aug. 12—Hastings at Norwood.

The following official referees were appointed for this district: Norwood: A. Kemp and Dr. Sutton; Havelock, P. Lancaster and T. Dineen; Campbellford, W. H. Roe and C. H. Nadoo; Peterboro, L. McCoy and E. J. Dillon: Hastings, T. A. Coughlan and J. F. McCarthy.

The schedule does not give the locals a Saturday afternoon home game, thus they will not conflict with the Mercantile or Canadian Leaguers. The games will be played at six o'clock in the evening and on Riverside Park.

COMMENT

As You Like It

The local fans will seen new first-baseman in action when the Petes hit home again on Monday. The club officials announced to-day that Swertling, a Central League player, had come to terms with the club and would join the team in London on Saturday. The fans will also have a chance to look over a new outfielder who has practically some to terms with the locals. Gorman will be benched, when Swertling arrives. Gorman's fielding has been good, but his hitting and base running were below the standard. The club is also negotiating for a couple of other players, and the fans can rest assured that the directors will leave no stone unturned to produce a winner.

The local club turned down the opportunity to secure the services of Smykal, who Shaughnessy offered to loan the Petes until the new players arrive.

"Chub" Collins, who will be remembered by the old school as a star middle sacker and manager in the days of the old International, died at his home in Dundas last evening.

London won from the Hams yesterday, making a clean sweep of the series, while Brantford made it three straight from Erie. Knotty Lee's Beavers beat the Saints and will open a series in Hamilton to-day, Knotty's old town.

THE TRAPSTERS

First Shoot of Summer Prize Competition

The regular shoot of the Peterboro Gun Club will be held this evening at 6 o'clock sharp. This will be the first shoot of the Summer Prize Competition and all members intending to be in the competition must attend this shoot, and also the shoot on Thursday, May 28th. After this month the competition shoots will be on the first and third Thursday during June, July and August.

SCOTTISH GOLFERS WIN IN AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIPS

Canadian Press Despatch.

Sandwich, England, May 21.—In the British Amateur Golf Championships to-day, Harold Hilton, the present champion, was put out of the contest in the fourth round by Edward Blackwell, of St. Andrew's, Scotland, who beat him by two up and one to play. Charles Evans, Chicago, was beaten by C. B. Macfarlane, of Scotland, four up and two to play. Harold Weber, of Toledo, the last American survivor in the golf tournament, was to-day defeated by Capt. Hutchison, of St. Andrew's, six up and four to play.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES

Wr Canoe Being Made Ready for Season

The ball team will practice this evening at the Nicholls Oval. A full turnout of members is requested. The first game in the Church League will be played on Saturday afternoon.

The Tennis Club of the Y.M.C.A. will hold a meeting this evening when several important matters will be discussed and a schedule drawn up.

The war canoe is undergoing a coat of paint and will be ready for a trip for the first time this season next week. The crew this year promises to be a strong one.

Yesterday's free swimming lesson at the Y. M. C. A. surpassed all other records, when some 125 boys took their initial plunge.

A students' meeting is called for to-morrow when a tennis club will be organised. All students interested in tennis are requested to attend.

UNIONIST WINS OUT IN DERBY

LONDON, May 21.—The Unionists gained a seat in the House of Commons for Northeast Derby yesterday. The contest was a three-cornered one, the result being as follows: Maj. Bowden, Unionist, 6,469; J. P. Houghton, Liberal, 6,155; J. Martin, Laborite, 3,669. The election was necessitated by the death of W. E. Harvey, the Liberal-Labor member, who had occupied that seat since the bye-election of January 30, 1907. The seat had been Liberal for some years.

No Time Fixed For Vote.

WASHINGTON, May 21.—An attempt by Senator Kern, Democratic leader, to get unanimous consent for a vote May 27 on the Panama tolls repeal bill was defeated yesterday when Senator McCumbe, objected.

TY COBB OUT OF GAME FOR TEN DAYS

"Ty" Cobb

Canadian Press Despatch.

Detroit, May 21. — A despatch from Boston says Ty Cobb, who was out of the game yesterday with a lame side, will be unable to play for ten days, having received a slight fracture of the rib in the game on Monday, when he was struck by a pitched ball. This is the first time in the Georgian's career that injury has put him out of the line-up.

SENATORS FATTENED BATTING AVERAGES AT THE EXPENSE OF TRACEY AND BELTING

Wild and Wooly Encounter Goes to Shagmen by Score of 11-2

The rumble which was heard in the distance yesterday was not that of an earthquake, but the fireworks which were thrown in with the rumble rivalled Vesuvius. The disturbance was caused by a stampede of Senator feet, which was a near approach to the buffalo advance, as Shaughnessey and his men raced around the bases in merry-go-round style at Riverside Park, and vanquished the Petes by the score of 11-2. In crap game language the Senators rolled a natural and the Petes chucked a Little Joe. Yes, indeed, it was some reversal of form. The men from parliament hill leaned on the slants of Mistahs Tracey and Belting in cruel fashion and collected fifteen hits, while the associates of the said Mistahs Tracey and Belting had a trio of boots which hurt.

It was a weird game of baseball from a local point of view, but from the telescope of the other fellow it was very nice. Batting averages were fattened, while stolen bases to the number of eight, were added to the list of crimes committed by the Senators. In fact, the winners ran the paths like a flock of loose deer. Tracey's shoots were easy picking for the league leaders, and they poked out eight hits in four innings and scored an equal number of runs. Tracey cannot be blamed entirely for the slaughter, as his team mates had their three boots while he worked. He hit one and passed two during his stay on the mound.

Belting relieved Tracey in the fifth and he sailed along in good style until the eighth innings when the war clubs again got in some damaging work. In that inning four hits were collected and three runs scored.

There was another reason why the Petes did not win. A long chap named Peterson, who wore his hat on the side of his dome in "I should worry" fashion, did mound duty for the Senators. He was about as narrow in his ideas as to who should win, as he was in stature, and allowed the Petes five scattered hits. He issued three free tickets and scored two runs.

Every man on the Ottawa team had a hit or so, Rogers, Dolan, Nill, Powers and Lage having two, while His Royal Leanness the slabman, had three. "Shag" collected his first bit of the series in the eighth. For the locals Wilcox had two pokes, while King slammed one for two sacks.

Eight stolen bases are credited to the winners and of that number Rogers had four. Miller's hand was very bad. He was forced to play with the two middle fingers on the right hand bandaged together, and Ottawa took advantage of the handicap.

Bravity is the soul of wit, so 'tis said, so we will try to tell the funny story in as few words as possible. Dolan opened the second frame by drawing a pass. Powers sacrificed him along. Lage cracked one through second and Dolan counted. Lage pilfered second and then had the audacity to swipe third, while Chief Thompson sat in the stand right opposite the bag. Fried fanned, but long Mr. Peterson singled to right and Lage scored. Bullock was safe on first and Peterson on second when Fox heaved the pill over King's head. Along came Nill and just to show the people there is nothing in a name clouted out a single which scored Peterson. Shag was hit, but Rogers flew to Wilcox. In the third the Senators continued the attack and Dolan opened with a double to centre. Powers single to left scored Coay, and Powers scored on Lage's double. Swarts dropped Fried's fly, and Peterson doubled, scoring Lage. Bullock was an easy out and Fried scored, but Nill poked a long fly to Blount. Peterson was doubled on the play before he could get back to second. Another run came in the fourth on a pass to Rogers and Powers' triple. In the eighth Peterson, Nill, "Shag" and Dolan singled and three runs were scored.

The locals got their first run on Bullock's high throw over Dolan, which allowed Byrne to make second, and three infield outs. The other came in the eighth, when Fox singled and King doubled.

The Shagville Merry-go-round was a feature at yesterday's performance.

A carload of dynamite was unloaded at the park yesterday afternoon.

Three real knockers were in the grand stand. All they did was knock They were strangers, so 'tis said. Along about the eighth inning they got cold feet as Kelly and Byrne had intimated they would get the wolves, but the mouthy ones beat it before the game was over.

Both sides knicked about Umpire Evans' decisions on balls and strikes but he was fair. The locals were in the majority so far as kicking was concerned, but that was quite natural.

That Ottawa wrecking crew would have hit any pitching yesterday. There was no stopping them once they got under sail and the artillery portion of the brigade which had fallen down on its hitting in the series made up for lost time yesterday.

Lefty Rogers stole second and third in the fourth. In the sixth he stole second went to third on an out, and tried to pilfer home, but was nailed.

Nill, the Ottawa middle station man is about the class of the league in that position. He looks like the best in the league's history.

If Gorman were a hitter he would be a grand first sacker, but his hitting to date is weak. He is also inexperienced on the paths.

Wilcox went into third on a force play standing up, was called safe, but over-ran the bag and was tagged out before he could get back.

In the second frame every Ottawa player faced the pitcher.

The locals did not look good in their warm up. It was an off day.

The least said about it the better.

The meeting of the convenors of this district of the O.A.L.A., Mr. T. P. Lancaster, Havelock, and Messrs. W. H. Rae of Campbellford, A. T. Armstrong of Havelock, A. Kemp of Norwood, C. Vernon of Hastings, and E. Dillon of the local club was held at Hastings and the following schedule for the intermediate series drawn up:

May 29—Campbellford at Norwood.
May 30—Hastings at Peterboro.
May 30—Havelock at Campbellford.
June 10—Peterboro at Hastings.
June 12—Norwood at Havelock.
June 17—Campbellford at Hastings.
June 19—Havelock at Peterboro.
June 26—Peterboro at Norwood.
June 26—Hastings at Campbellford.
July 3—Norwood at Peterboro.
July 8—Campbellford at Havelock.
July 15—Havelock at Hastings.
July 15—Peterboro at Campbellford.
July 22—Havelock at Norwood.
July 23—Campbellford at Peterboro.
July 27—Hastings at Havelock.
July 31—Norwood at Hastings.
Aug. 5—Peterboro at Havelock.
Aug. 5—Norwood at Campbellford.
Aug. 12—Hastings at Norwood.

The following official referees were appointed for this district: Norwood: A. Kemp and Dr. Sutton; Havelock, P. Lancaster and T. Dineen; Campbellford, W. H. Roe and C. H. Nadoo; Peterboro, L. McCoy and E. J. Dillon; Hastings, T. A. Coughlan and J. F. McCarthy.

The schedule does not give the locals a Saturday afternoon home game, thus they will not conflict with the Mercantile or Canadian Leaguers. The games will be played at six o'clock in the evening and on Riverside Park.

COMMENT

As You Like It

The local fans will seea new first-baseman in action when the Petes hit home again on Monday. The club officials announced to-day that Swertling, a Central League player, had come to terms with the club and would join the team in London on Saturday. The fans will also have a chance to look over a new outfielder who has practically some to terms with the locals. Gorman will be benched, when Swertling arrives. Gorman's fielding has been good, but his hitting and base running were below the standard. The club is also negotiating for a couple of other players, and the fans can rest assured that the directors will leave no stone unturned to produce a winner.

The local club turned down the opportunity to secure the services of Smykal, who Shaughnessy offered to loan the Petes until the new players arrive.

"Chub" Collins, who will be remembered by the old school as a star middle sacker and manager in the days of the old International, died at his home in Dundas last evening.

London won from the Hams yesterday, making a clean sweep of the series, while Brantford made it three straight from Erie. Knotty Lee's Beavers beat the Saints and will open a series in Hamilton to-day, Knotty's old town.

THE TRAPSTERS

First Shoot of Summer Prize Competition

The regular shoot of the Peterboro Gun Club will be held this evening at 6 o'clock sharp. This will be the first shoot of the Summer Prize Competition and all members intending to be in the competition must attend this shoot, and also the shoot on Thursday, May 28th. After this month the competition shoots will be on the first and third Thursday during June, July and August.

SCOTTISH GOLFERS WIN IN AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIPS

Canadian Press Despatch.

Sandwich, England, May 21.—In the British Amateur Golf Championships to-day, Harold Hilton, the present champion, was put out of the contest in the fourth round by Edward Blackwell, of St. Andrew's, Scotland, who beat him by two up and one to play. Charles Evans, Chicago, was beaten by C. B. Macfarlane, of Scotland, four up and two to play. Harold Weber, of Toledo, the last American survivor in the golf tournament, was to-day defeated by Capt. Hutchison, of St. Andrew's, six up and four to play.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES

Wr Canoe Being Made Ready for Season

The ball team will practice this evening at the Nicholls Oval. A full turnout of members is requested. The first game in the Church League will be played on Saturday afternoon.

The Tennis Club of the Y.M.C.A. will hold a meeting this evening when several important matters will be discussed and a schedule drawn up.

The war canoe is undergoing a coat of paint and will be ready for a trip for the first time this season next week. The crew this year promises to be a strong one.

Yesterday's free swimming lesson at the Y. M. C. A. surpassed all other records, when some 125 boys took their initial plunge.

A students' meeting is called for to-morrow when a tennis club will be organised. All students interested in tennis are requested to attend.

UNIONIST WINS OUT IN DERBY

LONDON, May 21.—The Unionists gained a seat in the House of Commons for Northeast Derby yesterday. The contest was a three-cornered one, the result being as follows: Maj. Bowden, Unionist, 6,469; J. P. Houghton, Liberal, 6,155; J. Martin, Laborite, 3,669. The election was necessitated by the death of W. E. Harvey, the Liberal-Labor member, who had occupied that seat since the bye-election of January 30, 1907. The seat had been Liberal for some years.

No Time Fixed For Vote.

WASHINGTON, May 21.—An attempt by Senator Kern, Democratic leader, to get unanimous consent for a vote May 27 on the Panama tolls repeal bill was defeated yesterday when Senator McCumber objected.

TY COBB OUT OF GAME FOR TEN DAYS

"Ty" Cobb

Canadian Press Despatch.

Detroit, May 21.—A despatch from Boston says Ty Cobb, who was out of the game yesterday with a lame side, will be unable to play for ten days, having received a slight fracture of the rib in the game on Monday, when he was struck by a pitched ball. This is the first time in the Georgian's career that injury has put him out of the line-up.

CITY WILL BUY STRIP OF LAND

Will Pay $150 and Give Fixed Assessment

The law firm of Dumble and Johnston, on behalf of the Overend Estate, submitted a proposition to the Board of Works last evening, and its acceptance will mean that the efforts of Mayor Buller will bear fruit. Some time ago the city endeavored to purchase a strip of land 16 feet wide and 350 feet in length on the north side of Prince Street, between George and Aylmer. It was needed to widen out the streets to the uniform width of 66 feet, but when the executors of the Overend Estate were approached they wanted $750.00.

Last night a letter was read by the chairman, offering the property for $150.00, on condition that the remainder of the Overend property lying between Prince and Princess Street, which is now assessed for $2,000, be given a fixed assessment of the same amount for four years. If, however, any portion of it is sold, the fixed assessment arrangement will cease.

After considerable discussion, during which it was pointed out that the executors of the Overend Estate were very desirous of selling the property, and thus the four years' fixed assessment may not hold good for over a year, it was moved by Alderman Johnston, seconded by Alderman Anderson that the proposition be accepted. When asked his opinion of the matter, the City Engineer remarked that it was the best thing imaginable for the southern section of the city.

Another question of purchasing property was that of a strip ten feet wide, and about 40 feet long on the lot belonging to Mrs. Scott, corner of Maria and Mark Streets. Since the C.P.R. installed a siding to the Vermont Marble Company, that corner was made exceedingly dangerous and this strip, ten feet wide, is to enable the city to give pedestrians more protection. Mrs. Scott wanted $200, but Mayor Buller put forth a motion by which she would receive $150.00, and the city would fix up the fence and also the drain, thus improving the remainder of Mrs. Scott's property. The motion was seconded by Alderman Johnston and carried.

Move Siding.

A letter was read from Superintendent Coyle of the G.T.R., which stated that that company intended moving the siding on Bethune Street at the Simcoe Street crossing as requested by the Board some time ago. On motion of Aldermen Johnston and Green the G.T.R. will be requested to notify the City Engineer before they commence the work.

A MENACE TO THE WESTERN CONTINENT

Mr. J. H. Burnham has given the following notice of motion to the House:

1. Has the attention of the Government been called to an article in The American Economist of May 1, 1914, which referred at length to and quoted from a statement by James S. Cowan, to the effect that a menace to Western Civilization was to be found in Oriental industrial competition; and who illustrated the danger thereof by quoting a statement of a Japanese shoe manufacturer who asserted that he was engaging the best shoemakers in America to return with him to Japan to teach his people the trade; and further stating that Japanese workmen received from 40 to 50 cents a day, while women were paid from 20 to 40 cents per day?

2. If so, does the Government propose to take any action in the matter?

OBITUARY

THE LATE MISS IRWIN

Miss Eliza A. Irwin, aged 62 years, passed away last evening at her home at 508 College Street. The funeral will take place to-morrow afternoon to the Little Lake Cemetery.

DIED AT ROCHESTER.

Word has been received in the city announcing the death of Mrs. Richard Corcoran, of Rochester, N.Y., a sister of Mr. P. Hogan, proprietor of the Albion Hotel. Deceased was in her 65th year and had been ill for some time. She left this section of the country about 25 years ago, and had resided in Rochester till her death. Her husband predeceased her some nine years. She leaves two daughters and one son, all at home, to mourn her loss.

The funeral will take place tomorrow in Rochester.

Save the lead covering from your next packet of "SALADA" Tea, then when you can get one of the new aluminum packets they art commencing to use, weigh the lead against the aluminum covering. You will be surprised to find the lead eight times the heavier. The weight in the two packets will, of course, be identical.

GOT OFF BECAUSE HE WAS DRUNK

BRANTFORD, May 21. — Michael Driscoll, late of Hamilton, appeared in the police court yesterday morning on two charges, one of disorderly conduct, and the other of attempting to stab Jessie Strickland, a servant, who refused to give him a sandwich after giving him some bread. On the first charge, he was allowed to go, he pleading that "it was whisky that did it." Magistrate Livingston held that as the man was drunk he was not responsible.

WOULD KEEP THE INVENTION SECRET

LONDON, May 21. — It is stated that the Government wishes to maintain the secret of the new safety aeroplane which is the property of the War Department. While this would give a great advantage to the British army aerial service, it is pointed out by some that it would be against the interests of humanity in the conquest of the air. The King is enthusiastic over the new machine. After witnessing a flight at Aldershot be exclaimed, "Why haven't you a hundred of these in the army."

Drowned From Canoe.

NORTH BAY, May 21.—Felix Langlois, an employe of the Spanish River Pulp & Paper Co. at Kenney's Siding, on the T. & N. O. Railway, was drowned in Martin river. Langlois went out for a canoe ride after supper and the canoe was upset. He comes from Chiswick, near Bonfield. The body is being searched for.

NEWFOUNDLAND'S SEALING IS AN IMPORTANT INDUSTRY

Many Dangers Beset the Sealers—Storm in the Ice Fields.

Of all those that go down to the sea in ships none is more brave, none more daring, none more hardy than the Newfoundland sealer.

Born to a life of rugged hardship, a ceaseless battle with nature and nature's elements for the means of life, as was his father before him; in his veins the blood of the dauntless Devon or Brittany fishers, who settled this "new found land" of the elder Cabot, It is not to be wondered at that those who each year visit the ice fields to gather the seal harvest are men to whom fear is a thing unknown, and dangers but the ordinary routine of life.

The dangers of sealing are many and grave, as has been proved by the deplorable disaster which has just visited the sealing fleet, and which has sent many good men to their doom.

Blizzards come up suddenly, fogs rise, cutting the men off from the ships. Sometimes they are blown out to sea on a floe, to starve or freeze, unless rescued by another steamer. Many have been frozen to death while lost in fogs, and others have gone down on their ships, which have been crushed in the rafting ice.

One can well imagine the pathetic scene at St. John's the other day waiting the arrival of the "Bellaventure," with the rescued and the dead of the disaster to the "Newfoundland." Wife waiting for husband, dead or alive, mother for son, child for father. What a contrast to the send off those loved ones had received but a few weeks before on leaving for the sealing grounds!

Sailing day is a great day for Newfoundland. For five days the city of St. John's has been a-bustle. Its streets, ordinary quiet and restful, are filled with men clad in sweaters and great seal leather boots, with caps that cover the ears and all but hide the face; men tanned by sun and gale and sea, with clear grey eyes that glisten from under great shaggy brows.

The day before the departure the Governor of the Colony generally visits the ships, which are dressed in honor of the occasion. It is a time of merry-making, of goodwill to men, if not to their defenceless victims. All is expectancy and hope.

Now, every one not going to sail is ordered ashore. Some cling to the dock to say goodbye to brother, friend, or husband. Others file in a black winding line around the shore of the harbor, to line the cliffs that guard the city's bay.

As the great clock on the cathedral on the hill strikes, lines are cast off and signals are given to waiting engineers. Slowly at first the fleet starts toward the narrow entrance of the harbor, great clouds of black, suffocating smoke belching from the funnels, telling of striving firemen below.

One at a time—for the channel is too narrow for more—the ships pass out, the last "locking the gate," and prows are turned toward the sealing grounds—that may mean plenty, that may mean death!

The Newfoundland seals are not those whose fur provides milady with winter warmth. That seal is from Alaska. The Newfoundland seal is not hunted for its fur, but for his skin and for his fat, the former being used in the manufacture of fine leather and the latter to make the finest lubricating oil, cold creams and perfumes. The seals are of four kinds, but of those only two are hunted—the harp and the hood. The bay seal, which inhabits the shores of the island destroys thousands of fish annually, is eagerly killed, but no use is made of its carcass. The square flipper, the fourth kind, is a rare visitor from Greenland.

A storm in the ice fields is a scene of terrible grandeur. The howling wind, the snow, driven in horizontal lines before it, the heaving swells of the open water outside hurling the floes against one another with crashes like the thunder of artillery. Now and then an iceberg driven before the gale plows it way through the field. The ten-foot thick ice is crumpled up like paper and piled fifty feet high.

Sometimes the pressure becomes so great that the bottom of the ship is cut off as with a giant's scissors. One of the most harrowing of these disasters was the loss of the Greenland, on March 23, 1907, when forty-eight men perished. The men were out on the ice when a terrible storm arose, and they lost their way and froze to death. The ship, crushed by the ice, was abandoned by Capt. Barbour, and the bodies of the dead were found later on the ice and taken in other ships to St. John's.

The ships themselves have become famous in other fields than sealing. There was the Nimrod, which served as a relief ship for Lieutenant Shackleton on his last trip to the Antarctic. The Terra Nova, which accompanied her on this expedition, was the relief ship for Fiala after he lost the American in the north, the American having been formerly the Esquimaux. The Terra Nova was used by Capt. Scott's last South Polar trip. The Kite and the Erik have been used by Commander Peary on his expeditions in the past. Paul Rainey used the Beothic. The Neptune, the Algerine, the Viking, and the Southern Cross, which is now reported lost, have all figured in Polar exploration. The Diana and the Erik figured in the Crocker Land expedition which started last summer.

That the oil seal is doomed to extinction, unless steps are taken soon to prevent it, is the opinion of those who have followed this great Newfoundland industry.

Many Skins Seized.

FORT WILLIAM, Ont., May 21.—When the provincial police searched the Hudson Bay Co.'s post at Long Lake, about 100 miles north of Jackfish, on the C.P.R., last Sunday, 424 beaver, 86 otter and 1,324 muskrat skins were found. William Thompson, the manager, when brought before the magistrate at Nepigon pleaded guilty and asked to have his case remanded. His request was granted, and the case will come up for trial in a few days. The entire number of pelts are valued at $10,000, and figuring the penalty for each skin, the maximum fine would amount to $117,000.

A SEASON OF MATERIAL COMBINATIONS AND LONG TUNICS

The vogue of material combinations is at its height, and there is hardly a garment that does not show at least two fabrics strikingly combined to make a very effective ensemble. A striped material with a plain in the same color scheme, is most frequently employed for these garments. A plain green mandarin crepe makes the skirt, the sleeves, and the long Russian tunic which is the newest thing in fashions, while a striped crepe in blue and green makes the coat, the shorter peplum and the flare. The right touch of sheerness is found in the collar and the vest of organdy.

LIQUOR HAUL IN SIX MONTHS

Provincial Police Confiscated Much Wet Goods

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Whiskey | 5,180 | bottles |
| High Wines | 64 | gallons |
| Beer | 96 | barrels |
| Gin | 80 | bottles |
| Whiskey | 14 | gallons |
| Stout | 24 | bottles |
| Beer | 546 | bottles |
| Brandy | 12 | bottles |

The above is the tabulation of the seizures of liquor made during the half year ending April 30, by the Provincial Police in the unorganized districts. The statistics are embodied in Superintendent Rogers' half yearly report to the Attorney-General.

An outstanding feature of the report relates to the winter's work of the police in preventing undesirables from gaining entrance to the province. The police handed over 143 persons to the Dominion Immigration Department for deportation during the half year ending April 30, 1913. The figures for the corresponding period this year show an increase of 274. The total undesirables excluded numbering 417.

An interesting calculation was made which showed that if the amount of damage that would have been done by each of these individuals was estimated at $50, a conservative figure, the province was saved in the neighborhood of $25,000 by their exclusion.

Not An Abnormal Increase.

The number of cases handled by the police totalled 789. In connection with which there were 527 convictions, and 136 were discharged. At the end of the half year, 106 were awaiting trial. Six of these cases were dealt with at the request of other police departments. The comparisons with the same period last year shows an increase of 279 cases and 166 convictions. The superintendant points out that the increase in the number of cases does not really indicate any abnormal condition, for during a considerable period in the preceding year a number of officers were withdrawn from their districts owing to the labor difficulty which arose in the Porcupine district.

Under the License Act 152 prosecutions were made showing an increase of 54 and 114 convictions, an increase of 31.

Under the Game Act there were 74 prosecutions, more than doubling the figures of last year, though the convictions only showed an increase of 16.

The number of undesirables who tried to gain entrance to the province last year was extraordinary, and the work of the police in this department is increasing at an alarming rate. Last week alone 44 deportations were made from Niagara Falls, Ont.

SPRING IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

I think if some wild blind men went astray
Through all the world at winter's end, and last,
Braving the great peaks and their bitter blast,
Down through these western valleys felt his way
To the sea's edge, then, though the death of day
Held earth and stars, and heaven herself bound fast
In darkness, would he cry aloud, borne past
His blindness by the sweets of Spring's array!

For here, where Nature holds high court of all
The sweetest smells that blow 'twixt earth and skies—
Incense of cottonwood, and cedar tall,
And flowers that prick the sense with sweet surprise—
The saddest blind grow careless of their pall . . .
With heaven in every breath, what need for eyes?

—Muriel F. Watson.

A BOTTOMLESS LAKE.

Queer Superstition Found Among Rocky Mountain Indians.

In the heart of the snow-clad Rockies, hundreds of miles west of Edmonton, lies a lake whose waters are always troubled, into which a large river flows but out of which there is no visible exist. The leader of a forest survey party sent out by the Dominion Forestry Branch to examine the forests in this wild region states that the Indians shun this lake as the abode of evil spirits, and, to give credence to this superstition, from time to time deep rumblings may be heard where far below the surface the water swirls through the hidden outlet. The river that enters the lake rushed from a subterranean cave many miles down the valley, the portal of which no man has ever yet passed.

Last summer the Dominion Forestry Branch sent eight survey parties into the forests of the far west, and the story of their experiences reads like fiction. One party spent the summer in the wild region of northern Manitoba; three parties were in the hill country of Saskatchewan north of Prince Albert; one party was in the Rockies all summer; another was cut off from civilization for several months in the low-lying muskeg region of northern Alberta near Lesser Slave Lake, and two parties explored the remote upland plateaus of the railway belt in British Columbia. As one of the party chiefs writes: "A forester needs to be here, besides all other professional titles, a real bushman, an axe-man and a jumper."

The total area examined last summer was 11,000,000 acres, yet this is but one branch of the Dominion Forestry Branch's work of segregating and securing, for the proper use of the present generation and posterity, the vast areas of mature timber, young reproduction and fire-scarred brule lying between the prairies and the barren lands in the great northwest.

THE VOICE OF THE FALLEN.

When nations turn in wrath from studied lies,
And meet in that last argument of thrones,
Where sounds War's horrid voice in thunder tones,
As burst the shell death-dealing as it dies,
Where on a trampled hill Grim Battle plies
His ghastly trade in slaughtered men and brutes,
As some made charge, half won, a chance transmutes
To awful fate told in those lifeless eyes,
There, prone on War's red fields, when ends the day,
Each over each lie those of either host.
And Death, exulting, hears one body say
To its dead foe: "Ah, we may bootless boast,
My lips of clay against your cold dead ear,
Your lord and mine fell out, and we are here."

—William A. Creelman, in The Canadian Magazine.

TO FIGHT SOCIAL EVIL.

"No Toleration; No Regulation; No Recognition" Is Presbyterian Slogan

CHICAGO, May 21.—"No toleration; no regulation; no recognition." This is the suggested slogan of the Presbyterian Church to be presented to the 126th General Assembly which convenes here to-day, in the report of the special committee on white slave traffic.

The report estimates that there are 100,000 prostitutes in the United States and a far greater number are unchaste. Contributing factors in this condition are the fashions, dances, the theatre, literature and ignorance. The principal remedy suggested is the enlightened training of the young.

The report concludes with a set of resolutions calling upon pastors to guard children against all factors of life which conduce to immorality; commending those pastors who have taken up the subject frankly with fathers and mothers, and calling upon others to do so; recognizing the work of juvenile courts; demanding the punishment of men as well as women offenders against morality, and approving all legislation looking to the eradication of prostitution.

HAMEL FIXES AUGUST.

He Will Then Make Effort to Fly Across the Atlantic.

LONDON, May 21.—August of this year has been chosen by Gustave Hamel, the British aviator, to make his attempt to fly across the Atlatnic in the event of favorable winds prevailing, according to an announcement made yesterday.

The aeroplane in which the flight is to be made is now under construction. It is to be driven by an engine of 200 horsepower, which will develop a speed of eighty miles an hour. The aeroplane is to carry 320 gallons of petrol and 150 gallons of oil.

Hamel is to be accompanied by an assistant and will probably start from the American side.

Tidal Wave Submerges Island.

Iniskeeragh, a small island lying off Arranmore, on the Donegal coast, and having a population of about 90 persons, has been almost entirely submerged by a tidal wave.

Roused by the roar of the waters, the residents were able to escape with their lives, but suffered severe loss of property, chiefly in regard to their stocks of seaweed stacked ready for kelp-making. The tidal wave reached Arranmore also, but the conformation of the land there protected the neighborhood from the ravages of the waters.

One Way to Cure a Toothache.

There are some old superstitions still alive in England as a cure for toothache. Mr. E. A. Rawlence told the Dorset Antiquarian Field club at Dorchester recently a Dorset farmer two or three years ago recommended a friend to put his arms round a young oak tree, mark the place where his fingers met and there make a slit in the bark; then with his left hand he was to pull some hair from behind his right ear and put it in the slit in the bark.

An Original of "Scots Wha Hae."

A manuscript found in the possession of a resident of Whangarei, in New Zealand, has been proved by the curator of the Burns Museum at Ayr to be either the original or a copy of the poet's own handwriting of the famous poem "Scots Wha Hae." Some years ago the Ayr Museum purchased a copy of the original manuscript, of which Burns is known to have made several, for $1,500.

Paper Merger Complete.

MONTREAL, May 21.—Announcement of the completion of reorganization plans in connection with the recently merged Herald and Telegraph and the publication of the names of well-known Liberals who will henceforth act as its directors, were made yesterday. Its directors will be Hon. G. P. Graham, M.P., at one time editor and proprietor of The Brockville Recorder; Hon. P. G. S. McKenzie, treasurer of the Province of Quebec, and a member of the Gouin Government, and R. C. Smith, K.C., Montreal.

"Under the guidance of the reorganized board, The Herald will be the exponent of Liberal principles, and an advocate of what it believes to be in the best interests of the people of Canada," says that paper.

DEBATE ON C.N.R.

Part of the debate on the C.N.R. aid bill, which is taken from Hansard will be interesting to Review readers.

Mr. J. H. Burnham (West Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the enthusiastic reception accorded me by my fellow members when I rose, I do not intend to go into this matter at any length. I would like, however, to say a few words upon what might be called the more general features of this question. The problem that presents itself at the present juncture to this Parliament and to the people of Canada is one not only fraught with very serious difficulty, but, with the natural fruition of errors committed in the past, which are gradually developing and coming to the surface, and which in course of time have been dealt with and dismissed from the public mind.

The whole system of Government, like the solar system, is proceeding towards the polar star of control. Hereafter there will be no such record on the part of the people of this country as there has been in the past of handing over the natural resources and the hard-earned savings of the people to financial buccaneers of any type whatever, that choose to foist themselves upon the Canadian people. One of the great privileges of belonging to the Conservative party and of serving under the distinguished Prime Minister, of the present day is that of being able, nay, of being invited, to express one's opinions freely. The only necessary qualification known in conservatism is that people shall speak their opinions with sincerity, having given the matter in question some thought, and with a sincere desire to serve the state. It was therefore with pleasure that we all listened to the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Bennett) and the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle). These gentlemen have given the very best that was in them to the service of the State, and they are thanked accordingly by the people and by this House. There can be no question that they have given a vast deal of thought to this question and that they have done admirably in that service. I am sure, whilst they may not be able to see eye to eye with us all, nevertheless, realizing the necessities of the situation and having made their protest, they will agree that in order to fulfill the purposes of party Government, it is necessary to fall in line at some time or other.

It is not by any means an admirable thing that an opposition or any other body of men should have so few ideas that they can be all knocked together in a few minutes and dismissed as casually. It would be better for the Opposition, I fancy, if they differed more on this question, so vital to the interests of the country. Then we would have something worth considering in the way of an amendment instead of one simply to give the matter a six months' hoist. It must surely be a very severe criticism upon the functions of an opposition that, after having debated this question for nearly a week, the only way they can see out of the difficulty is to give it a boost into eternity. That I am sure will not commend itself to the people of the country who admire a brave oposition rather than a cowardly one.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Burnham: When I say 'cowardly,' I do not mean that they funk the job; I mean that, instead of setting their face one way, they have set it in another and an unusual way. But the people of the country, however, think, as I know the Government know and realise, that Mackenzie and Mann have been allowed too much rope, and that there was very great danger at one time that they would be allowed a little more for the express purpose of hanging themselves with it, if necessary, and there would have been no general regret had they done so.

As the distinguished Prime Minister said on one occassion, the Government were not sent here by the people for the purpose of sidestepping their difficulties; they were sent here by the people for the purpose of transacting the business of the people, and therefore they must boldly face the problem and boldly solve it. They have unquestionably done their best; and while I presume they do not think that their best may necessarily be perfect, yet it lacks amendment on the part of the Opposition, and we can at least lay that flattering unction to our own souls. We may safely say that the people have got tired of being deprived of their just rights, of being made to pay the piper. They no longer intend to do any such thing; and I venture to say that, if Mackenzie and Mann or the

RURAL FINANCIAL CONDITIONS

From the Report of Hon. J. S. Duff, Minister of Agriculture

"In regard to rural finance, a letter was addressed to the district Representatives, of whom we have now thirty-seven located in thirty-seven different centres in the Province, asking them to secure what information they could on this subject, especially with reference to the following points:

"1. The percentage of farms mortgaged and per cent. of mortgage on value of farms, and whether increasing or decreasing.

"2. The extent of deposits by farmers in savings banks.

"3. The extent of the demand on the part of farmers for loans.

"4. Rate of interest paid both on long and short time loans.

"5. Whether the loans are on the purchasing of land only or for financing farm operations.

"In gathering this information they conferred with bankers, business men, lawyers, registry office officials and prominent farmers. As is well known, men of this type are usually in close touch with the conditions of their communities, both by reason of their position and by reason of the fact that they have lived a long time in the district. The information which has thus been secured should, therefore, be reasonably reliable.

"Answers to the first question pertaining to mortgages elicited the fact that about 45 per cent. of the farms of the Province are mortgaged to some extent, and that one-third would be a fair estimate of the amount which the mortgage represents to the total value of the property. This means that mortgages against farm property in the Province represent only about 15 per cent. of the total value of farm property, which must be taken as a very encouraging sign. Moreover, a considerable percentage of these mortgages are held by farmers. Opinions were also unanimous that mortgages are steadily decreasing. Practically every county reported that payments were being kept up very promptly and a large number of mortgages were being wiped off each year. In many cases it was pointed out that mortgages, while they are frequently taken as a barometer of prosperity, are not altogether an unhealthy sign, as many are placed in order secure money to extend the land holdings, erect buildings, plant out orchards, put in under drainage, or effect other improvements which were in the nature of investment. In a few cases, unfortunately, it was reported that mortgages had been placed on farms in order to raise money for speculation in western real estate, and that there are too many indications that a great deal of money of Ontario farmers has been used for this purpose and has not brought the returns anticipated.

"In the matter of deposits of farmers there was also a unanimity of opinion that these had increased materially in recent years. In one county the bankers estimated that the deposits had increased from 20 per cent. to 30 per cent. in the last few years. In another county it was estimated that 70 per cent. to 90 per cent. of the money deposited in local banks was deposited by the farmers. Another county estimated that 75 per cent. of the farmers had savings running from $700 to $12,000 each. As to the total amount of deposits of farmers' money, only a general estimate can, of course, be given. One county estimated that between three and four million dollars of farmers' money was deposited in the local branch banks, while other estimates ranged from two to five million dollars. Under these circumstances it would seem safe to estimate the total amount of farmers' deposits in rural Ontario at one hundred million dollars for the entire Province. While this may appear to be a very large figure, it should be remembered that the aggregate farm wealth of Ontario, including land, buildings, implements and live stock, is placed at $1,405,950,940 by the Bureau of Industries Report, and that a very large amount is required as a working capital in conducting the farm operations on a plant which represents such a large investment. This would only mean an average of about $600 per farm, but, of course, at the same time it is recognized that all the surplus money of the farmers is not deposited in the banks, although unquestionably a considerable proportion of it is.

"As to the demand on the part of farmers for loans, the consensus of opinion appeared to be that the demand was not very heavy, representing only a small portion of the total deposits. The banks, of course, do not loan money for the purchase of land, but the opinion is general that no farmer who enjoyed a good reputation and could give reasonable security, had any difficulty in securing money needed to finance his farm operations, which was the chief purpose for which loans were sought. The rate of interest charged varied from 5½ per cent. on long-time loans to 7 per cent. on short-time loans, with occasionally rates of 8 per cent. and 10 per cent. in some of the newer districts. These figures were collected at the time when the money stringency was at its height, and money generally was scarce, so that they would not represent normal conditions. In every instance it appeared that the farmers were able to secure financial accommodation on the same terms and basis as those engaged in other occupations.

"These facts would indicate that the financial conditions of the Province are sound, and that the outlook is healthful."

The DAUGHTER of DAVID KERR

By Harry King Tootle

The interior of the house was no more inviting. As soon as possible Gloria wandered from room to room, her inspection making her give silent thanks that she had not asked any of her friends to join her in her descent on Belmont. The wall paper with big yellow flowers, the carpets with big red flowers, the rocking chairs with the crocheted tidies, and the marble-topped table in the parlor with the inevitable plush album upon it, were no less distressing than the wax flowers under the glass case, the steel engraving of the Scotch Covenanters worshiping in a mountain glen, and the tin bathtub. She even gave thanks that she had not brought a maid.

"Mistah K.," said a negro mammy, putting her head in the door of the living room after Kerr and his daughter had finished going over the house, "Tom wants to knew ef you is goin' to town dis mawnin'."

"No, Lily, I ain't going to town today. Tell Tom to send Yellow Sam with the spring wagon for Gloria's trunks.

"Dey's ben telephonin' you from town. Dey say it's pow'ful impo'tant business. Miss Glory, she done willin' to stay wif me, jes' lak she use' to. Ain't you, honey?"

To this Gloria gave laughing assent, but her father shook his head.

"I'm not going to town today. And tell the telephone operator not to connect any one with Locust Lawn all day. I ain't going to be disturbed. D' you understand?"

Aunt Lily, who probably was given that name by some ante-bellum joker because of her ebon hue, nodded her acknowledgment of the order and withdrew.

The reasons David Kerr had for not wishing to get into communication with any one in Belmont were several, but the most potent was his desire to be uninterrupted while engaged in studying his daughter and evolving some plan whereby she could be taken from Belmont before her slightest suspicion had been aroused.

One episode in their tour of the house had given him much comfort. Gloria had paused in the old-fashioned parlor and gazed long at his life-sized portrait, done in oils, over the marble mantel. Then she had looked about the room, and not finding what she sought, had asked:

"Where is one of my mother?"

"There is none," he confessed, and added quickly, "but I'm going to have one painted for you. That was given me recently by the First Ward club."

"What's the First Ward club?"

"A political organization."

"Politics! Do you know anything about politics?"

David Kerr almost smiled.

"I don't know whether the president is a Democrat or a Republican," she added.

"Don't bother about it."

"Oh, I'm not going to. I don't want to be a suffragette and march in a parade and be put in jail on bread and water. I don't even read about it."

Her absolute ignorance of politics, nothing remarkable in a girl of her years and training, was no small grain of comfort to her father.

It was not until after luncheon that Gloria disclosed the subject nearest her heart. Her father, like a wise general, permitted her to open the engagement. He had never been a man to exert more strength than was necessary for the discomfiture of the enemy. He wanted all her batteries unmasked, all her forces engaged, before he brought his own side into action.

For some time they sat in silence in the living room, gazing into the open wood fire. More than once Kerr thought his daughter was about to speak, but each time she seemed to think better of it or else lose her courage. He knew that something weighed on her mind, for she was much quieter than was her wont.

"I know I'm going to like Belmont very much," she ventured at last. "And I want Belmont to like me. My coming home is different from that of other girls I know. At Annabel's or Jane Leigh's or any of the girls' homes we haven't been in the house ten minutes before the telephone begins to ring. In half an hour there are enough engagements to last a week. In Belmont I don't know any one yet."

This was not said in any tone of complaint. She could not dream of such a thing, because her father's position was such that her lack of friends was only a temporary embarrassment. She knew that well enough. As for David Kerr, he made no comment, desirous of hearing her at greater length.

"If I had known that I was coming home I would have brought some of the girls with me." She did not allow him to know that the house had not come up to her expectations. "I'm glad I didn't because I don't know any one here yet, and although we'd all be received at once I couldn't make it as pleasant for them as I can after I have had an intimate knowledge of things. After you once introduce me I think I can begin to plan for the girls. I'm under obligations to every single girl I know. I don't mean single—unmarried. But I might as well, because married girls don't go visiting around the country."

"I thought you entertained in the east."

"I did, but girls like to get to a new place. They're not looking for anybody, but the wider your territory the more certain it is that lightning will strike you."

"You've had a pretty wide territory," was her father's dry rejoinder.

"But I always ran for cover when I saw a storm coming."

"I thought you'd come home engaged to a duke or a count at the least. Didn't you see any men you liked?"

"I liked them all, father, but I haven't seen a foreigner I'd marry. They're nice enough to talk to and dance with and to bring an ice at a ball, but no more than that. But nothing worries me; I'm going to stay here and keep house for you."

"It ain't much of a house, Gloria. You see, I ain't ever had any women folk around here, and the place 'bout runs itself, 'cept what the niggers do. You won't like it, I'm afraid."

"I'll like it well enough. You don't know how I've envied other girls their homes."

"I tell you what you do. Go on to California now—I'll go with you, if you say so, and stay till you git settled with some of your friends. Then I'll come back and have the house fixed up so's when you come again it'll be just what you want."

Kerr felt that if he could get her away he could see to it that she did not return, even at the cost of his leaving Belmont a year or two sooner than he had planned. To this suggestion Gloria did not accede. There was her curiosity about Belmont and her desire, something one who felt there was no depth to her nature could not understand, for a home.

"What! go away and miss all the fun of fixing up the house!" she exclaimed. "No, sir, daddy. I'm going to stay right here and make pies in the morning, have teas in the afternoons and go to the theaters at night. And you're going with me." Kerr made a deprecating gesture, but she quickly overruled him. "Don't say a word. You're going, and tonight's the night we start. We're going to the theater tonight."

Then Gloria told of a girl she had seen on the train who had come to Belmont to a theater party. She explained to her father that no occasion would give her a better opportunity to see the Belmont of which she was to be a part than that offered that evening. In all likelihood she would meet a number of persons between the acts. From her point of view she suggested so many good reasons that her father was afraid to interpose any objection at the time.

The arrival of Gloria's trunks put an end to further conversation, as she went to superintend their unpacking. Long after she had gone, David Kerr sat gazing into the fire. Many a time he had sat in that room and planned each move of a political campaign from its inception to final victory and had seen those plans carried out to the letter. But here was a campaign, if he should undertake it, which would be different. He would not be fighting on his own ground where he was sure of himself; and into it would enter those unknown, unstable factors—women.

Kerr was proud of his daughter. He recognized that she deserved to associate with the best families. If she was to remain in Belmont he would see to it that she had a social position which would be above cavil. This much decided, there came the question of how it could be brought to pass. The fire had burned low in the grate before he had considered all sides of the question. When he rose from his chair and went to the telephone he had determined upon the only course which would have as its result the launching of Gloria as a debutante in Belmont's exclusive circles.

Great was the surprise in the box office of the Belmont opera house when there came from David Kerr a request for a box. He telephoned to set it aside for him, that he did not know whether or not he would use it, but that he would send a check for the amount in the morning. The much flustered treasurer stammered that he would be most happy to put the box at Mr. Kerr's disposal and have him as a guest of the theater, but Mr. Kerr inquired the price of the box and closed the conversation by repeating that he would send a check for the amount in the morning.

And great was the surprise of the servants when at dinner the master of Locust Lawn appeared in evening clothes.

CHAPTER II.

The English surpass Americans in at least one respect; they have learned as a nation far better than has this newer country the possibilities of a dinner party. Perhaps it is their higher developed social system, more likely it is the general interest which is taken in governmental questions, which gives the dinner table an important, if unofficial, place in political life. A brilliant hostess, with heart and soul wrapped up in her husband's advancement, can do much to aid him as he toils up the ladder of political preferment by gathering at her board the leaders of her husband's party and also prominent men of the opposition. One need have only a superficial knowledge of American politics and American leaders to understand why this is not generally possible here. But there be some here, taking a leaf from England's book, who make the dinner party serve purposes not apparent to all the guests. Judge Amos Gilbert was one of these.

Fond, ambitious mothers held up to their sons as an example the rise of Amos Gilbert from an humble home in a frontier village to a position as the leading corporation lawyer of Belmont. He represented the electric light company, the street railway company, the water company and the stock-yards company. A person with an analytical turn of mind, after studying a list of his clients, might remark that each and every one, individual, partnership or corporation, could be favored by some political turn or damaged by some political machination. They found it better to employ Judge Gilbert than to trust to luck that all would go well.

All day Judge Gilbert had been trying to get in touch with David Kerr by telephone. Kendall, who represented the Chicago packers, had been called back to that city and was anxious to see Kerr before he left that night. Failing in this, Gilbert could make no definite promise as to Mr. Kerr's attitude on certain propositions set forth by the astute Chicago lawyer. On his own authority he did say, however, that the master of Locust Lawn was interested in watching the Belmont News develop its new policy under the new owner and editor who had managed to secure control of the sheet without Kerr's knowledge. That Kendall might see for himself and meet on friendly ground the new and disturbing factor in Belmont politics, Judge Gilbert invited Joe Wright, the new owner of the paper, to dinner. It was just by accident, apparently, that Mr. Kendall had been picked up at almost the last minute.

The only others present were Dr. and Mrs. Hayes. Sam Hayes, a rising young physician and surgeon, was coroner of Belmont county, an office which his society friends joked him about, but one which Hayes recognized and accepted as a political stepping stone. Then, too, it gave him opportunities to repay his political friends. David Kerr liked to have such young men hold office.

Dinner over, Gilbert and Kendall withdrew to the library for a final conference over the stock-yards situation. Again they tried to telephone David Kerr, only to receive the information that he was not at home.

"You really think the Belmont News having been bought by this outsider," queried Kendall, "puts a different aspect on the present situation?"

Woman's World

Mrs. Jacobs Wants Votes For Women in Alabama.

MRS. PATTIE RUFFNER JACOBS.

Mrs. Pattie Ruffner Jacobs, one of the brightest and most progressive women in the south and president of the Alabama Equal Suffrage association, is leading a votes for women campaign in that state. Its object is to win the franchise for Alabama women. With a great deal of skill Mrs. Jacobs has marshaled her forces. Not only are the progressive women of Alabama with her, but suffrage organizations and suffrage leaders all over the country will lend their assistance in trying to make an equal suffrage state of Alabama.

A conference to perfect plans was recently held at Birmingham, Ala. This was attended by Mrs. Medill McCormick and Mrs. Antoinette Funk of Chicago, together with other suffragists of national reputation.

It is felt that it would be now good policy to win a southern state for equal suffrage, and so the national organization is expected to co-operate with the state suffrage organization in the campaign. Alabama is considered to be a very promising field for work.

Mrs. Jacobs is not only a bright and talented young woman, but she is exceedingly attractive in appearance.

That she is a diplomat may be judged from her dictum in regard to the campaign:

"Our definite goal is the enfranchisement of Alabama women. In our ranks are no social lines drawn and no religious distinctions. We have no political faith, all parties being admitted. Nor do we confine ourselves to women, for this great movement, of which we are a part, is not a woman's movement, but a human one."

EASTER GIFT BASKETS.

They Are Just the Things In Which to Arrange Flowers or Fruits.

At the Easter season fancy baskets are exceedingly useful. In them the children's eggs may be arranged on a layer of cotton, excelsior or straw that suggests a nest.

The baskets are indispensable as receptacles for potted plants when these are intended as gifts. The woman who has taste may arrange in them fruit or a few choice cut flowers as a token for the invalid friend. In fact, their use is legion at this time.

For holding flowerpots there are most artistic looking receptacles of dark rattan, Japanese woven and tin lined so that water shall not soak through.

Flowerpots also fit into many of the pail shaped, brilliantly dyed northwestern Indian baskets, as well as the queerly decorated and oddly shaped ones made by the Mexicans and the Alaskans.

Some of the baskets from the far north are ideal for scrap holders, and others, flat at two sides and rounding at the ends, may be suspended from the wall and used as newspaper racks.

Of workbaskets in queer weaves and attractive colors there is an endless variety, but the best are bowl shaped, very capacious and always perfectly balanced on flat bottoms. So bright are their colorings that to trim them is like carrying coals to Newcastle, but it is a good scheme to line them with soft plain silk.

Comparatively few of the less expensive Indian baskets have lids, but one may easily be made by covering a pasteboard circle with plain silk and attaching it by a single hinge of ribbon.

Use For Broken China.

Do you keep poultry? If so here is an excellent way of using up your broken crockery. Give it to the chickens. With two large stones break it up finely for them, and they will crowd around you in their eagerness for this curious digestive, for it is a digestive and improves their health and looks, besides making eggs more plentiful.

If you have the misfortune to break any china the fact that the fowls will enjoy it may help to console you for the loss.

Chenille Trimmed Parasols.

Chenille is used somewhat lavishly on the new parasols. One effective model is made of dark blue taffeta silk, with a five inch border of light green. Over this border there is a network of laced chenille threads in dark blue, and the result is charming.

The long distance phone makes the heart throb faster.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

There is here and there a person who makes a dazzling success as a failure.

Philosophy is the output of a man who isn't personally interested.

Being able and willing is a combination that is hard to beat.

The emotional temperament is too apt to require liquid inspiration to be entirely dependable.

Being able to see it first is what has put many a man to the front.

The man behind the gun may be all right, but it is the push behind the man that really counts.

Getting used to a thing is energizing and exciting anyway.

Summer styles in earthquakes are not so extreme and strenuous as summer styles in millinery.

Nothing like a pull to push things along.

A timely check on a bank frequently prevents an untimely check to a young man's career.

Neglected.

All eyes are fixed upon the one
 Who wears the dress of fluffy white.
Admiring friends arise to say
 In every way that she's all right,
But who has smiles or cheering words
 Or hopes for him a future great,
Who boosts along in any way—
 The poor, forlorn boy graduate?

They come with posies in a bunch
 To shower upon the favored lass
Who boldly down the platform walks,
 Admired and envied by her class.
Her brother, though his head be full,
 Is hardly in the social swim.
The audience forgets to bring
 A lemon even round to him.

Fame may be waiting for the lad,
 Be loafing just around the way,
The world may have rewards for him,
 But that is not his special day.
The essay that he reads may make
 The whiskers of the trusts to curl,
But no one has a thought for him.
 All eyes are on the pretty girl.

Neglected in the bunch he sits,
 A thorn with roses all around.
He ventures not to move a limb,
 Nor would he dare to make a sound.
For him it is a torture day,
 For them a long remembered date,
For no one pauses to console
 The poor, forlorn boy graduate.

No Pay.

"Well, sir," brusquely inquired the girl's father, "what can I do for you?"

"Why—er—I called, sir," stammered the timid suitor, "to see if—er—you would give assent to my marriage to your daughter."

"Not a cent, sir; not a cent. Good day."

Partially Unanimous.

"Gentlemen, have you agreed on a verdict?"

"We have," said the foreman.

"We have not," protested one.

"Our verdict," said the foreman, "is that the disagreeing member of the jury be hanged with the prisoner."

Old to Us.

A Londoner was bragging of his underground railroad.

"Pretty fine," yawned the American.

"Something new," exclaimed the Britisher.

"Yes; we had them in our country before the war."

Have You a Cold? Try FOSSAL BALM!

There is nothing slow or roundabout in the way Fossal Balm gets after a cold in the head, nasal catarrh or irritation in the nasal passages.

The action of its antiseptic, healing ingredients is made more certain and effective by the handy way of applying it. The collapsible tube containing the Fossal Balm ends in a little nozzle about half an inch long, which fits into the nostrils and applies the ointment well up in the passages.

Here it works almost like magic, killing the disease germs, checking the inflammation, relieving that burning irritation, clearing the passages for easy breathing, and restoring normal, healthy conditions.

Use Fossal Balm at the first sign of a cold in the head—it will not only save you from all the miserable discomfort of it, but in doing so will protect you from the more serious diseases which follow neglected colds. Get a 50c. tube from your Druggist, or if he cannot supply you, we will mail a tube prepaid on receipt of the 50c. National Drug & Chemical Co. of Canada, Limited. 3

OUR COUNTRY UNVARNISHED

The tragic side of Canadian life is put without varnish in "The City of Hope," by C. Fox Smith, a new English novel.

"'You'll hear people talk—haven't I heard it?—a lot of clap-trap about the free, open life, and the lack of temptations to lead a young fellow astray, and the wonderful opportunities there are for anyone that is 't afraid to work,' says a melancholy settler who has 'worried though.' 'My God! I'd like to see some of those folks try it! I'd like to see some of 'em work, as English lads fresh from the public schools are doing year after year in this country—work at the kind of jobs people are expected to go into hysterics about, when Siberian convicts are doing them, and not their own kin!

"'You remember that boy that worked beside you in the sewer? And what he said about his mother? . . . Can't you fancy her. Can't you just hear her telling people about her boy in Canada, and how brightly he writes home, and how he is enjoying roughing it—"he always loved camping, and being out-of-doors—and, of course, in Canada nobody thinks any the worse of you, don't you know, for working with your hands!" . . . And it's the boys with grit that suffer; the rotters don't stop long enough for that. . . . The good plucked 'uns keep it to themselves. . . . break their health and their hearts before they'll whimper. . . and write fairy tales home.

"'Oh, don't I know it? Haven't I seen 'em coming out, with their skates, and perhaps a gun, and most likely their dress clothes in a grip, because they've heard about all the winter jollifications in Canada? . . . It's a fine joke, for Johnny Canuck to hold his sides about, laughing; but . . . I don't know . . . I never could see the funny side of it myself. I don't suppose that boy's mother saw it, either, when she got the cablegram from the hospital."

"'But lots of fellows do well out here, after all,' Mark said, 'and I don't see that hardships need hurt anybody.' 'Oh, yes, lots make good,' Crawford admitted, 'and, what's more, if anyone ever deserved success, they deserve it! Tell me of any profession, any occupation under the sun, that you could pitch a lad into in England, without capital, without experience, without training, and expect him to advance himself. Yet that's what people are doing here, all the time. Why, man, the nice English boys that come out here aren't as well equipped in anything, but pluck, as the Barnado gutter-snipes that have had a few months in the carpenter's shop. . . .'"

Eelgrass Is Expensive.

Every year a cargo of eel-grass goes south from Yarmouth, N.S., and probably not one person in a thousand knows what it is used for. A whole lot of people who spend a few weeks at some seacoast place in the summer months, and have tried to do some swimming where the tall, rough eel-grass abounds, have figured out that it isn't good for much of anything, except to be cussed.

It seems, however, that eel-grass is of some use; indeed, of so much use that last year Boston people paid $2,392 for a single cargo of it. It is used by the big Chelsea paint concern in the manufacture of lampblack.

The grass could be gathered somewhat nearer home than Yarmouth, N.S., but the best quality of the grass is more easily to be secured off the Nova Scotia coast.

As a rule one cargo of the grass is enough to furnish the paint manufacturers for a year, and the gathering of the grass cannot be especially profitable. Exceptionally low tides are taken advantage of by the reapers of the grass, who, with scythes, cut acres in a short time.

Do not be annoyed by a squeaky hinge; use a little butter, lard or kerosene, and have the unpleasant noise disappear.

NARROW ESCAPES

Hudson Maxim Has Figured In Some Perilous Incidents.

LUCKY AT CHEATING DEATH.

On One Gun Testing Occasion a Sudden Impulse to Run, Which He Obeyed, Was the Means of Saving His Life—A Magazine That Got Its Second Wind.

One of the most thrilling adventures in my experience took place at the government proving grounds at Sandy Hook, N. J., when the United States government was testing maximite before adopting it.

Near a light frame building in which I was filling shells with maximite, a ten inch gun was being tested. A number of shots had been fired from the big gun. Just as I had concluded my work and started for the wharf to take the government tug for New York, the signal was sounded for another shot. I was walking along a stretch of railway track directly behind the gun.

At that instant I remembered that several years before, when one of these guns was being tested, the breechblock had blown out, passed through the bombproof and killed six officers and men, but I argued with myself that the chance was infinitely remote that the breechblock would be blown out of the present gun on this discharge at the very instant I was in range, but upon a sudden impulse I ran with all my might.

The gun was discharged. I looked round just in time to see the huge breechblock pass through a building near the one in which I had been at work. It came up the track, striking and breaking one of the rails over which I had passed. It ricocheted against the top of the old granite fort and glanced high into the air. A shower of stones and debris fell over a wide area and many fragments struck the ground close to me.

I walked back to the scene of the accident and found that the windows in the little building where I had been filling maximite shells were completely riddled with partly burned cylinders of smokeless powder that had been blown from the gun.

I once had another curious experience at Sandy Hook during some trials of the Maxim automatic machine gun.

Among the severe tests to which the gun was subjected was one intended to simulate what might occur in making a landing upon the seashore, where the mechanism of the gun might get filled with sand. The test is known as the "sand test."

The gun being tested at the time was of the kind using black gunpowder cartridges, for it was before the introduction of smokeless powder. There was so much energy in the recoil of the barrel that a great deal of sand could be thrown into the mechanism without interfering with the working of the gun.

The commanding officer did not arrive to see the gun fired until after the board in charge had completed the test. He then appeared and demanded that the firing should be continued for his benefit. The chairman of the experimental board demurred, saying that the gun had passed through the test admirably and that it was too bad to fire it more than was absolutely necessary, with its mechanism filled with sand. But the commander insisted.

A schooner was approaching near the line of fire. The commander said he only wanted to see a few rounds fired and that the firing would be completed before the schooner would come within range. Accordingly a belt of 333 rounds was inserted, and the firing begun. After perhaps fifty rounds were fired the command was given "Cease firing," but the gun kept right on. It afterward proved that the trigger was blocked by sand, so that it was impossible to stop the gun. The schooner came into range, and the bullets flew over and around her.

My assistant, who was firing the gun, did his best to work the trigger and stop it. It did not occur to him on the instant to unlimber the gun and swing it round so as to bring the schooner out of range. As the gun fired at the rate of 750 shots a minute the firing was all over inside half a minute.

Fortunately no damage was done. When the same gun was undergoing a sand test at Annapolis, Md., I came very near being killed by it.

The gun had passed successfully through a severe sand test, but the officer in charge wanted to see whether he could put enough sand into the gun to stop it. So he had the gun box filled full. The gun fired about 150 rounds and then stopped. My assistant threw down the safe—that is to say, locked the trigger, so that it could not be pulled—and began clearing the gun box.

Thinking that the gun was safe, I was just about to step round in front of it. Suddenly it fired a dozen or more shots so close to me that my clothes were seared by the powder gases.

One of the tests made at Annapolis was to fire a Maxim gun vertically into the air. We had fired a couple of hundred shots in this manner, when something struck very near us. It then occurred to the officer in charge that what goes up must necessarily come down. Firing ceased, and we sought cover for a few minutes to avoid the leaden rain.—Hudson Maxim in Youth's Companion.

The best remedy for wrongs done us is to forget them.—Syrus.

PET AVERSION.

I can't help looking at the hats
  The summer girls are wearing,
And as I look I cannot blame
  A man for softly swearing.
What inartistic rage possessed
  The mind which this creation
So hideous and ill advised
  Inflicted on the nation?

They surely must have been conceived,
  With neither judge nor jury,
By one who as he brought them forth
  Was in a nightmare fury
Or by some person crossed in love,
  Unlucky in his wooing
And took this method just to spite
  The girls for his undoing.

He must have spent a month or more
  In fiendish cogitating
Before he framed the shape for which
  The people were not waiting.
And when the month was at an end,
  To make the ugly stronger
And much less pleasing to the eye,
  He put in two weeks longer.

We first endure, then pity comes,
  Swift followed by embracing.
The proverb says, and that may be
  The thing that we are facing.
But let us hope we never will
  With all our hearts adore them,
But keep our heads and speak our minds
  While we have breath to score them.

CHAIR FILLERS.

Rotundas of Toronto Hotels Filled With Non-Paying "Guests."

Those who infest the comfortable chairs and other seats in the rotundas of down town Toronto hotels, while they are not registered guests and have no particular business there, are causing premature grey hairs and wrinkles to appear on the brows of the respective managers. One of their chief worries, they claim, emanates from this source.

The manager of one of the biggest hotels in Toronto, which is a favorite resting place for these men, says that nearly all those who fill the chairs morning, afternoon and night, have business interests and rights there that are practically nil. In fact, there seems to be an inexhaustible supply of this class, quite a separate and distinct one, he thinks.

Amid the hustle, bustle and hum of the hotel life they sit quietly absorbed in their own thoughts or in a newspaper, oblivious of all that is going on around them. "They think that they have fallen heir to the seats they occupy and have an inalienable right," complained a well-known hotel manager very bitterly the other day.

"It is like an enlarged edition of a country store," he said. "They all make themselves quite at home, as if they were invited. There are old men and young men, prosperous looking fellows and seedy looking individuals. How they live and where they get the money to permit them to loaf and what the attraction is that draws them here is beyond me. It isn't the bar, for they seldom visit that part of the building.

"There is one man," said the same manager in discussing his troubles, "who comes in at 7 o'clock in the morning and stays until 8 o'clock in the evening. This morning I thought he was late, and spoke to the bellboy about it, but he told me I was hasty and that according to his watch the fellow had five minutes yet.

The trouble is that a large percentage of our paying guests are deprived of the accommodation that is due them. What is more, most of these 'friends,' who make this their home, smoke such old, stinky, strong pipes that the smoke which fills the room almost drives one out of doors."

"But you could eject them."

"That would keep one man busy from early morning until late at night."

Moose and Elk.

The difference between the Canadian moose and elk is very great and easily understood; but there is a confusion in the names. The moose is the largest of all deer, and a circumpolar species.—that is, it is found throughout northern Europe and Asia, and in prehistoric times wandered over all Europe as far south as the mountains. It's great size, loose, pendulous muzzle, and the huge, flat shovel-like antlers, all the lines of which are connected by a web of bone, distinguish it from all other deer. In this country it is found all over Canada, Alaska, and formerly in the northern parts of the United States. Originally in Europe, this great deer was named 'elk'; but in this country the Indians of Quebec called it 'moosewa,' and hence it is known in Canada as the 'moose.' Early explorers of what is now Ontario, became acquainted, first near Niagara Falls, with another large deer, which they carelessly styled 'elk.' This is the great deer of the West, better known by the Indian name 'wapiti,' which has wide-spread antlers that are round in all their parts, and when complete have seven sharp tines. It is not so large as the moose, and resembles in its clean, graceful form, the common deer. Our moose, then, is the same as the European elk; but our so-called 'elk' is a true, round-horned deer, and should be called wapiti.—E. J. in Montreal Family Herald.

MRS. CAMPBELL WEDS GEORGE CORNWALLIS-WEST

All London is Set Talking by Kaleidoscopic Change in Relationships.

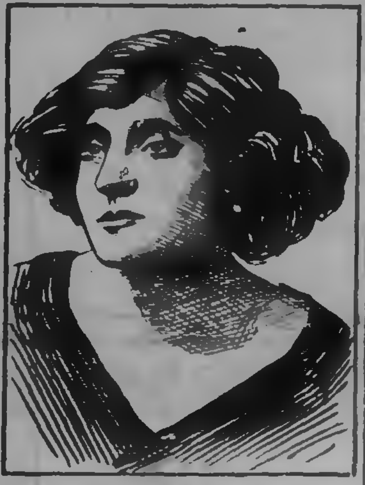
The decree of divorce granted to Mrs. George Cornwallis-West, formerly Lady Randolph Churchill, was made absolute by the Divorce Court in London, Eng., recently, the requisite period having elapsed since the first decree. The grounds were statutory desertion and misconduct. Mrs. Cornwallis-West will in future be known as Lady Randolph Churchill.

A few hours after the divorce had been pronounced absolute, George Cornwallis-West married Mrs. Patrick Campbell, the English actress.

Lady Randolph Churchill was first married in 1874 to Rt. Hon. Lord Randolph Henry Spencer Churchill. Winston Churchill is a son.

The marriage of Lady Churchill to George Cornwallis-West, in 1900, some time after the death of her first husband, caused much comment, owing to the great disparity in the ages. Lady Randolph was then fifty-three years old and Lieutenant West was twenty-six. They had met at Cowes, the fashionable watering place.



MRS. CORNWALLIS-WEST

It was freely said at the time that the then King Edward was highly opposed to the union and took no pains to conceal the fact. West was the brother of the Princess of Pless and the Duchess of Westminster. The marriage was also bitterly fought by the parents of the young lieutenant.

West went to Africa with his regiment, the Scots Guards, on the outbreak of the Boer war, and it was hoped by his family that this would end the love affair. This did not prove to be the case, and on July 28, 1900, the marriage was performed in St. Paul's Church, London.

As the owner of vast estates, including the famous Ruthin Castle, it is incumbent upon Cornwallis-West to have an heir, otherwise the property passes by law to a distant branch of the family.

Mrs. Patrick Campbell was widowed in 1900, when her husband was killed in the South African war. She has been on the stage since 1886 and is well known to Canadian theatregoers. She is regarded as one of the leading English actresses.

An Old Stone Weapon.

A remarable stone weapon, extremely heavy and shaped like a "mere"—a small and effective Maori club—but fitted with a long handle, was recently found by a New Zealander in a cave in the Waikaremoana district. It was so heavy that it required two hands to lift it, and it is not therefore, likely to have been a weapon carried in battle. Some of the Maoris themselves suppose it was merely used for despatching prisoners taken in war, others that it was left in the cave by Te Kooti in his historic trek from Kaikaremoana. The probability is that it is very much older and belonged to the Tuhoe or Urewera people, who fought in earlier days all over that district.

Their Garments Should Be Neat, Attractive and Durable.

SOME HINTS IN THE SHOPS.

Suggestions That May Be of Use in Replenishing Juvenile Wardrobes. For the Wee Chaps Many Simple Suits Can Be Made at Home.

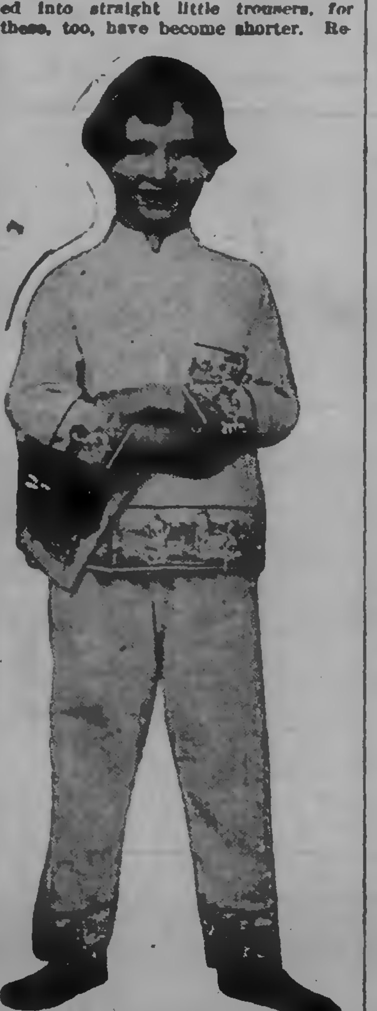
It is easy enough for most mothers to dress their little girls, and the problem of attiring their small boys is not a difficult one until they reach the trousers stage. By very small boys knickerbockers or trousers may be worn. When making suits of all white with a touch of color it is wise for mothers to make an extra pair or two of trousers.

As the boy becomes older these knickerbockers can be made straight trousers, and proud will he be of them. The regulation sailor suit so long the standby of the growing boy is hard to replace.

One very clever mother had a suit made for her small son by a well known tailor for boys. She says she never regretted the initial price, for it served her as a model for his suits for many days. And this is how she managed. When the suit arrived from the tailor she carefully—very carefully—cut paper patterns for each section and marked each line of stitching, each arrow head and the exact place of each buttonhole. Then she made five other suits like it of various other color combinations. She also enlarged the pattern from year to year.

Old suits of this variety can be made to last for another season's wear for the morning at least. Cut off the cuff and the stitched tucks above and hem the sleeves, adding new cuffs at the elbow. The boy will like them best "rolled up." Then insert rubber webbing in the hem of the straight little sailor shirt, which has gradually become shorter and shorter, and you will have a very good looking blouse. The knickerbockers, too, can be transformed into straight little trousers, for these, too, have become shorter. Remove the rubber and take them in until they fit loosely. It is best to fit them from the inside seam.



BOY'S PAJAMAS.

When making a number of suits do all the cutting out at once, the basting, fitting and the stitching, saving the handwork for sunny days on the porch.

For the wee one the first "hat" is a stitched linen one, with scalloped edge. Then comes the regular sailor variety made of linen. This is easily made and fits much better when done at home, for the band that should fit snugly is fashioned of the linen with a piece of buckram or cardboard slipped in the band to give the required stiffness. As he grows older the problem of hats waxes worse and worse. There seems to be nothing between the cap with the visor and the round hat until he wears the regular mannish affairs.

Coats for the wee one are best made of white corduroy, which launders so beautifully. A white brilliantine or a heavy white voile would be attractive and practical. Then, too, these can be worn even in cold weather with the warm lining coat, which at this stage of his manhood is a separate garment. As he grows older the sweater outfits for colder weather are admirable. They not only are becoming and warm, but have the added advantage of being washable.

For the small boy's bedtime suit the fancy pajamas illustrated here should be popular with him. The nursery rime border printed upon the soft flannel or linen will appeal to his sense of humor. Pajamas of this kind are sold in the shops at moderate price.

"I hear that Brown's family are in hard financial straits."

"Oh, no; he has provided for them very nicely."

"Made a ten strike?"

"N-no; you'd hardly call it that."

"What then?"

"Captured pneumonia, and it kindly proved effectual."

Still Bitter.

"She says she was dying to speak to you yesterday when she saw you," remarked the peacemaker.

"Well," replied the belligerent girl, "why doesn't she, then?"

"You mean you'd be glad to have her speak to you?"

"No; die."

Financial Expert.

"I hear the doctor is high priced."

"Well, I always cross the street when I come to his office."

"What for?"

"If he saw me he would charge me a dollar for going by."

Most Obliging.

"Have you anything for a moneyless man?"

"Certainly."

"Oh, thank you so much! How much? I mean what?"

"Work."

Sure to Remarry.

"There is no use in Jones getting a divorce."

"Why not?"

"It won't take."

Meaning No Reflection.

"He has just got over from England."

"How does he like it?"

"He'll be all right as soon as he learns the English language."

Bright.

"I know how to get what I want."

"Would you kindly elucidate?"

"It is very simple. I induce myself to want nothing and get it right along."

Sour Grapes.

Simply Fierce.

"They say Jenks is an awful drinker."

"Awful is no name for it. He lets the other fellows do all the treating."

If you don't want people to like you, criticise what they do.

A Versatile Applicant.

Andrew Broder, the Federal member for Dundas, who is said to be slated for the Board of Railway Commissioners, on the retirement of Dr. Mills, has many patronage troubles, owing to a section of the St. Lawrence canals running through his riding. The number of applicants for positions of lock masters and lock laborers is an ever-present worry to Broder, and he tries to mete out justice with an even hand to the faithful. Recently one of his supporters applied for a position on the locks and Andy had him up to look him over.

"Why, Jim," he said, "you only have one arm. How do you think you could do the work?"

"Look here, Mr. Broder," put in the hopeful, "I can do the work all right. Why, if I had a couple of drinks in me I could preach."

And Broder gave him the job.—Toronto Saturday Night.

Diamonds In Ontario.

The Ontario Bureau of Mines considers the discovery of diamonds in the province as of unusual interest.

While the variety has practically no economic value it is felt that the chrome ore in which the stones are found will prove a valuable addition to the provincial mineral trade. British Columbia enjoyed the same discovery several years ago, but no valuable stones were found, a fact, however, which is not discouraging to mining experts in Ontario.

Warman's Title.

The late Cy Warman was one of the most active men in the publicity section of the Grand Trunk, but his title of "General Assistant" he took jocularly. When he first received it he told his newspaper friends:

"Boys, I've got a title at last."

"What is it?" he was asked.

"General Assistant."

"To what and to whom?" enquired his friends.

"I don't know, I'm just a 'General Assistant'," replied Cy.

Cookery Notes

Fish For Lent.

With the advent of Lent the housewife again faced the problem of how best to incorporate fish into the family diet. If she approaches the subject open mindedly she will find that its advantages are surprisingly numerous. "The equal of beef as a source of energy in the diet," as a government food expert puts it, it costs about half as much, furnishes variety and has a particular advantage in that it is possible to purchase practically the exact amount required for a single meal.

Every housekeeper knows that in order to have a good juicy roast she must nine times out of ten buy a larger one than she really needs and that the only steak worthy of a place on her table is a thick cut having a heartrending amount of waste. Finally fish is an invaluable meat substitute for sufferers from rheumatism, neuralgia and other uric acid complaints.

It is too bad to have to confess it, but the abuse of the frying pan has probably done more to bring fish into disfavor than any one cause. Perhaps the reformers will in time get around to a "down with the frying pan" slogan, and a lessening of the amount of our national disease, dyspepsia, will result.

Fish Economy.

A number of economical recipes for made dishes are furnished, and in any one of them the humble codfish, which is always to be had, may be satisfactorily substituted for cold cooked fish. It will be noticed that the ingredients of these dishes are very similar and that a white sauce is frequently necessary for their success. Lemon and parsley add to both flavor and appearance of any fish dish, and among the many condiments that may be occasionally used for the sake of variety are cayenne and paprika. Chili and Worcestershire sauces, sweet herbs and—in discreet quantities—onion juice, tarragon vinegar and crushed clove. Appetising sauces which may be appropriately served with fish are tartare, anchovy, bechamel, piquant, caper and tomato.

When Baking Fish.

Fish may be baked—incidentally sending less odor through the house than when cooked in any other way—broiled and boiled, and an astonishing number of palatable and tempting dishes may even be prepared from the occasional leftovers of a fish dinner.

If the objection to boiling is that no special fish kettle is owned one may be improvised by the use of a perforated pie plate as a drainer. Again, if the only variety of fish available is considered too tender to boil, strips of clean cheesecloth or old muslin may be bound around it to prevent its breaking into unsightly pieces.

Fish Rissoles.

Prepare these as follows: To a plate of cold fish add one-third as much breadcrumbs, one finely minced boiled onion, the yolks of two eggs and one tablespoonful of butter. Season to taste.

Make a rich puff paste and cut it into two-inch squares. Place a tablespoonful of the fish mixture on each square and fold over with the pastry. Wet the edges with well beaten egg and fry the triangles in boiling fat. Garnish with pastry and slices of lemon.

Coquilles of Fish.

Free a pint of cold boiled fish from skin and bones and break into small pieces with a silver fork. Put the shredded fish into a saucepan with half a cupful of boiling water, a tablespoonful of thick cream, a teaspoonful of butter rolled in flour and salt and pepper to taste. Stir over the fire until the mixture is thoroughly heated, then fill shells with ramekins, cover with crumbs and bits of butter and set in the oven until nicely browned.

Fish With Mashed Potato.

Butter a baking dish. Line the bottom and sides thickly with well seasoned mashed potato, preferably beaten light with an egg. To flake fish add half its quantity of breadcrumbs and enough white sauce to make it quite moist and beat well. Season highly. Fill the space left in the potato with this mixture and bake in a hot oven. Fold a napkin neatly around the baking dish and serve.

Scalloped Fish.

Into a well buttered baking dish put a layer of cold baked fish, a layer of the dressing with which the fish was originally stuffed and then one of buttered bread or cracker crumbs moistened with a white sauce, sweet cream or milk. Season well and repeat these alternate layers until the dish is filled. Cover the top with well buttered crumbs and bake until an appetizing brown.

---

Heat your plate before putting hot pies on them when first taken from the oven. The hot pies on cool plates cause a sweat that makes soggy undercrust.

EQUESTRIENNE GARB.

Chic and Convenient New Riding Outfit.

RIDING HABIT.

Spring is abroad in the land and the horsewoman with it. Garments for horseback riding follow accepted lines. There are the usual riding breeches, worn with a long coat, like the one shown in the picture. Much latitude is permitted in the choice of a hat, many fair equestriennes liking a rough and ready effect, like the one illustrated here.

THREE EMPIRES.

Monarchies That Practically Sprang Into Being Overnight.

Prior to Jan. 18, 1871, the German empire, as we know it today, had no existence. Instead it was a jumble of kingdoms, states, duchies, grand duchies and principalities, all joined together by a like language and common political aspirations, it is true, but otherwise quite separate and distinct.

Then came the historic ceremony in the Hall of Mirrors at Versailles. Paris had just been captured by King William of Prussia, and it was held to be a fitting time and place to proclaim him the first German emperor. Never since the dawn of history was an empire born more dramatically.

By a strange irony of fate, too, its birth took place amid the ruins of the French empire, itself the creation of a day, or, rather, to be strictly accurate, of a night. France went to bed on the evening of Dec. 1, 1851, a republic. When it awoke next morning it was an empire. During the hours of darkness Paris had been occupied by troops, and the prince-president had become Napoleon III.

Equally sudden and almost as sensational in its way was the birth of the modern Greek empire. After the yoke of the Turks had been thrown off in the war of independence the country became a republic. But the people soon tired of that democratic form of government and promptly proceeded to assassinate their first and only president. Then they met together, elected a king and settled themselves down to be ruled by him in a quite orderly and contented fashion.

QUEER STYLES IN HATS.

The Kokoschnik of Russia and Winged Headdress of Alsace.

In Russia the maiden who is fancy free may dress her locks as she wishes. But not so the wife. She must hide her hair. So, as a recompense for this sacrifice, she dons a hat which may well be called weird. In shape it is not unlike a bishop's miter, and it is adorned as the fancy or the purse of the wearer dictates. Gold, silver and even precious stones have been used in decorating this kokoschnik, as it is called.

In certain parts of Spain a hat similar to the Russian style is worn. Particularly is this popular with the dancers among the Toledo peasantry, although it must be very hot and uncomfortable for this purpose.

The Dutch maiden of Amsterdam pins her faith—and her head—to a hat which resembles in shape an inverted flowerpot. It may not be the style most suited to her round, placid face, but she would not change it for the latest "thing" in millinery.

On the island of Marken, in the Zuyder Zee, the fashionable hat is again of the miter shape, but with the addition of wide, flapping wings. Farther north, in Norway, a maiden on her bridal day dons a traditional erection which can best be likened to an eccentric castle.

In the province of Alsace-Lorraine the women wear huge winged headdresses. The wonderful thing about the Alsatian hat is—how is it supported? Are there concealed wires? And how does it "stop on" in a high wind?—London Answers.

THE HUMAN SKIN.

Its Evolution Forecasts the Coming of an Ultra White Race.

Professor Daniel Berthelot, eminent French specialist, declares that the skin of the human race has undergone great changes since our primitive ancestors. He finds notably that, while the whitest of modern skins reflect almost all the colors of the spectrum, the skins of the more primitive races absorb the colors of higher and finer vibrations and only reflect the stronger colors at the spectrum's lower end.

For instance, the skins of the primitive negro races reflected practically no colors at all. The red skinned races reflected only the reds at the lower end of the spectrum and the so called yellow races only as far as the yellow in its center. The white skins of the races of today are able to reflect not only the blues, but also the violets at the top of the visible spectrum, although the strength and clearness of the reflection vary with each individual skin.

But no skin has been found so far capable of reflecting the ultra violet rays, which, although present in almost all light, vibrate at a rate too high to be visible to the human eye.

It is therefore believed that the past evolution of the human skin foreshadows the existence in the distant future of an ultra white race, which, in addition to its other capacities, will have a skin capable of reflecting the invisible ultra violet rays.—Indianapolis News.

Stories of Shaw.

One of Bernard Shaw's dramatic criticisms is the shortest on record. It was about a play called "Poor Jonathan," and Shaw's notice was simply "Poor Jonathan."

After the production of his first play, "Widowers' Houses," he met with so mixed a reception that he wrote, "I became infamous in a single night, and if the play did not achieve a success it created an uproar."

Foreign Relations.

"What does the committee on foreign relations have to do?"

"I can't exactly say. But if it has to keep track of the foreign relations that our rich girls acquire by marriage it has some responsibility!"—Washington Star.

Cold Feet.

"They say that a man who has cold feet is pretty sure to have an active brain."

"Yes, either that or a well filled purse."—Chicago Record Herald.

For the Children

Ralph L. Spotts, Jr., Champion Trap Shot.

While all boys love guns and shooting, few of them find the opportunity to gratify their desires in this respect. Many parents object to intrusting a boy with a gun, and this objection is usually based on the carelessness so common in young people. Country boys have more freedom in this matter than city lads, for there is more room to indulge in the sport, and the use of guns is much more common. Ralph L. Spotts, whose portrait is shown here, is a real expert with the gun. He is only thirteen years old, yet he recently captured the principal prize at a trap shooting match held by the Larchmont Yacht club of Larchmont, N. Y. The match was for the accumulation cup, a season prize, and by winning it Ralph won the cup outright, he having previously won two of the contests for it. Five men tied with Ralph with full scores of 50 each. On the shootoff young Spotts won, beating his competitors with another perfect score. The boy marksman is the son of Ralph L. Spotts, champion trap shooter of the east. Ralph's father was one of the contestants in the event that the boy won, but he did not even win a place in the shootoff.

The Most Famous Horse.

Probably the most famous horse that ever lived was Bucephalus, the beloved charger of Alexander the Great. He was a piebald animal (white clouded with large, deep bay spots) and was brought from the pastures of Pharsalia, whence came other brave and gentle horses.

Bucephalus, we are told, attached himself so entirely to his master that he would permit no other person to mount him. He shared the conqueror's toils and perils for many years.

When he was lost for a time in the country of the Axii, Alexander caused a proclamation to be made, commanding the immediate return of his horse and threatening that if he were not restored the whole country should be ravaged with fire and sword. This had the desired effect and Bucephalus reappeared without delay.

Bucephalus received his death wound at the battle of the Hydaspes. When he felt himself wounded the gallant creature instantly galloped out of the fight, brought his master to a place of safety, then knelt (as was his custom) for him to alight. Having thus discharged his duty to the end the faithful servant dropped and died.

An Ape's Kindly Act.

As a rule, animals are rather indifferent to each other's pain, hunger or misfortune. It rarely happens that one animal will give up part of its food for another unless they are pets living in a household where there is abundance for both.

A gentleman living abroad had in his garden a number of apes which were accustomed to come to him when called to be fed. One of them, a young one, fell from a tree one day and broke its wrist. Owing to this accident it was not able to come so readily for its food, but an old ape which was not in any way related to it took pity upon it and supplied it with food. As soon as this old ape received a supply of plantains she hurried off with the first of them to the little cripple, and not until he had begun to eat did she take any herself.

A Pain Killer.

Sammy (a brilliant youth)—Say, ma, don't it make your hands warm when you smack me?

His Mother — Why, yes, Sammy, it does.

Sammy—Then wouldn't it be just as well if you held them over the stove?

In Dark Ways.

Why are fixed stars like wicked old men?

Because they sin till late (scintillate).

School Time.

We stand, watching, by the gate,
Just my little doll and I.
Boys and girls with book and slate,
Crowds and crowds, they hurry by,
And I hear them laugh and cry:
"Hurry! Hurry! We'll be late!
There's the bell! It's half past eight!"
Afternoons at half past three
All the children homeward run.
Not one looks at little me
Standing there to watch the fun.

They seem glad the day is done.
For I hear them laugh and shout
"Hurrah!" because their school is out.
How I wish that they would wait
Every morning at my gate,
Saying: "Hurry! You'll be late!
There's the bell! It's half past eight!"
And how I would like to be
With them all at half past three,
Run with them and with them shout
"Hurrah!" because my school is out.

HANS DER COBBLER

He Decides That Location is a Consideration

By M. QUAD

[Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press.]

"YOU see how she vhas when I first opened my shop," said the German cobbler. "It vhas a Chinese laundry on one side und a saloon on der odder.

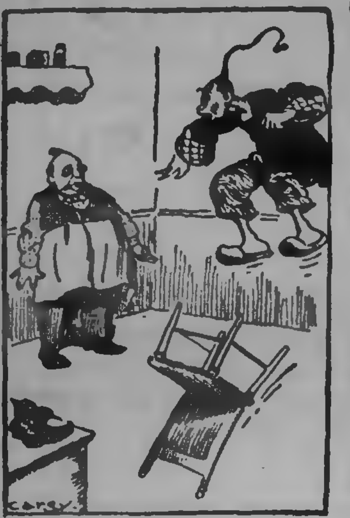
"I shust open my shop on der second day vhen a man comes in mit his hat on his ear und calls out:

"'Hello, Jimmy. Put oop dot glass of beer for me und be queek about her.'

"'I vhas no saloon place,' says I.

"'But vhy not!' he yells. 'Vhy you moof some saloon avhay and don't speak to me about it?'

"I speak softly to him und to explain dot I vhas some shoe shops, but he kicks my bench oafer and would like to knock me down. He goes avhay, and I just begin work again vhen a woman comes in. I belief she haf some shoes to mend, but she don't. She yells at me:



"DOT CHINAMAN HE COMES."

"I send you four shirts to wash and I get three back. You give oop dot odder shirt or dot pigtail of yours vhill come off mit a twist!"

"'Do you belief I vhas some Chinaman?' I asks.

"'Of course you vhas, und you bring out dot shirt!'

"'Vhell, you vhas mistook. I vhas a German cobbler. Please go by der next door on your left.'

"She goes out, but she vhas mad. She stop by der door to call me names because I vhas a German und not a Chinaman, und of course she never brings me any work to do. I goes by der little tailor for advice, und he says I shall put a sign on my door. Dot sign he reads, 'I vhas no saloon or laundry.' For one day he vhas all right. Den dot saloon man comes in und says:

"'Vhy you put oop dot sign, eh? Maybe you like to drife all der peesness off dis block? You take dot sign down, und if somebody comes for beer you shall tell him I vhas next door. If you don't I shall put oop some sign dot a cobbler shop vhas one mile avhay!'

"I make a new sign. He reads dot I vhas no laundry. He vhas all right for one day, und den dot Chinaman he comes und says I kill his peesness und he vhill haf some law suits on me. He goes out und tears der sign down, und dot makes eferyting like she vhas before. Purty queek a man comes in und says he makes $100 on some horse races und eaferbody shall drink mit him. I speak to him dot I vhas not der saloon, but der cobbler shop, but it don't do him no good.

"Den a young man comes in mit laundry und shucks it at my head.

"It vhas like dot for three weeks. One man he vhants dot saloon und one man he vhants dot Chinaman, und eaferbody vhas mad because I vhas a shoe shop. Some folks like to bring me shoes to fix. Dey vhas laughed at und don't come by me. Dot little tailor makes me a sign dot I vhas a cobbler, but I don't haf him oop one hour vhen a boliceman turns up.

"'So you vhas some shoe shops, eh?'

"'Yes, sir.'

"'Und you repair some shoes?'

"'I do.'

"'Vhell, dot sign vhas no good. Nobody vhas going to take dis shebang for a drug store.'

"I don't stand her no more. I moof out. I don't come to dis place, howeffer, until I make a fool of myself agin. It was der druggist vhat comes to me und says:

"'Hans, I know of der nicest little shop, und der rent vhas a mere trifle.'

"I goes by dot place, und I like it. I vhas all settled vhen I finds out dot I haf an undertaker on one side und a doctor on der odder!

"Pelief me, it vhas sometings awful. About ten times a day a man come rushing in to shout:

"'My wife she gets a ham bone in her throat.'

"It vhas shust as bad mit der undertaker.

"It vhas sooch day and night for four weeks. If you vhas going to open an amusement garden don't get between a graveyard und some coffin shops!"

AN IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT

Regarding Canadian Pacific Change of Time, May 31st

In connection with the opening change of time on the Canadian Pacific Railway, effective May 31st, many improvements in train service has been made, notable among these being the inauguration of solid de luxe trains, carrying compartment-library-observation car, electric-lighting standard sleepers, together with standard dining car service between Montreal-Toronto-Detroit, Chicago, via Canadian Pacific and Michigan Central Railroad, commencing westbound May 31st and eastbound June 1st.

These palatial trains will be known as No. 19 and No. 22, the former leaving Montreal 8.45 a.m. arriving Toronto 5.40 p.m. leaving Toronto 6.10 p.m. arriving London 9.15 p.m. leaving London 9.23 p.m. arriving Windsor 12.10 a.m. leaving Windsor 12.25 a.m. arriving Detroit 11.35 p.m. (central time), leaving Detroit 11.55 p.m. arriving Chicago 7.45 a.m.

Train No. 22 will leave Chicago 9.30 a.m. (central time) arrive Detroit 3.55 p.m. leave Detroit 5.05 p.m. (eastern time) arrive Windsor 5.15 p.m. leave Windsor 5.25 p.m. arrive London 8.10 p.m. leave London 8.18 p.m. arrive Toronto 11.20 p.m. leave Toronto 11.40 p.m. arrive Montreal 9.00 a.m. These two trains will be operated through the Michigan tunnel between Windsor and Detroit.

The new Toronto-Winnipeg-Vancouver service should be greatly appreciated by the travelling public. No. 3, now leaving Toronto 10.20 p.m. will leave at 5.40 p.m. running through solid to Winnipeg and Vancouver, carrying only the highest class equipment.

New train known as No. 7, will leave Toronto 10.50 p.m. running through solid to Winnipeg, carrying standard sleeping cars, dining car, tourist sleeping cars, colonist cars, first-class coaches, etc. Equally good service returning from the West. Particulars from Canadian Pacific Ticket Agents, or M. G. Murphy, district Passenger Agent, Toronto.

SCRIBES VICTORIOUS.

Press Gallery Ball Team Defeats Members of Commons.

OTTAWA, May 22. — Yesterday, Ascension Day, was a holiday in Parliament and in the Government service. The annual game between members of Parliament and of the press gallery took place yesterday morning, and was witnessed by several hundred enthusiastic fans, including Cabinet Ministers, members and Senators. The newspapermen won by 15 to 13. The teams lined up:

Members—Lamarche, Pardee, Sam Sharpe, Turcotte, Morphy, Martin, Boys, McCurdy and MacLeod.

Press men — Kelliher, Macormack, Paisley, Hannay, Anderson, Ford, O'Leary, Blacklock and Grange.

MOREAUS GO TO TRIAL.

They Were Seen and Recognized Near Scene of Murder.

HONEY HARBOR, May 22.—Peter and Andrew Moreau were yesterday committed for trial on the charge of murdering Robert Hayde, a Honey Harbor grocer, in March.

Evidence was produced to show that Peter Moreau was seen and recognized in the neighborhood where the crime was committed and also that he was known to have been spending money freely about that time, most of his money being in one-dollar bills.

Annie Boneau, a little girl who worked for the family at the time of the murder and before the body was found, said that some days after the disappearance of Hayde, Peter Moreau came home and said: "Well, I have stepped on the head of the old man."

Thomas Johnston acted as crown attorney, while the prisoners were defended by Edwin F. McDonald of Toronto.

Escaped the Highwaymen.

CHATHAM, May 22.—At the point of a revolver, W. J. Buchanan, a representative of The Toronto Mail and Empire, was held up in Chatham on Wednesday night near the Grand Trunk tracks in Queen street. He was accosted by two negroes and a white man in a dark spot. One of the men drew a revolver and another threw dust in Buchanan's face, but he took to his heels and escaped.

THE MARKETS

Latest Quotations in Grain, Dairy Products, Live Stock, etc.

CHICAGO, May 21.—Rain in Kansas and Nebraska, with a prospect of showers over the entire winter crop belt, dispelled today for the time being the fear that Hessian fly damage would become worse. The market closed heavy, 1⅛c to 1½c under last night. Corn lost ¼ to ⅜c net, and oats ⅛c to 1⅛c. In provisions, the outcome varied from 2½c decline to an advance of 7½c.

CATTLE MARKETS

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, May 21.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 48 cars, comprising 266 cattle, 2072 hogs, 154 sheep and lambs and 61 calves.

Butchers.

Choice loads of steers at $8 to $8.35, with a few odd cattle at $8.40 to $8.50; good to choice at $7.75 to $8; medium at $7.50 to $7.75; common at $7 to $7.40; choice cows at $7 to $7.50; good at $6.50 to $6.75; common cows at $5 to $5.75; canners and cutters at $3.50 to $4.50; choice bulls at $7 to $7.50; good at $6.50 to $6.75; common bulls at $6 to $6.25.

Stockers and Feeders.

The market for stockers and feeders was firmer, as the demand is much greater than the supply. Short-keep feeders sold at $7.80 to $8 in several instances; feeding steers 750 to 900 lbs. sold at $7.50 to $7.80; stockers, 500 to 600 lbs. at $6.50 to $7.

Milkers and Springers.

Milkers and springers have been scarce all week, with prices firmer on the average for choice forward springers and fresh milkers. Prices ranged from $50 to $100 each.

Veal Calves.

Receipts were light, only 61 all told, and as a consequence prices were very firm. Choice veals, $9.50 to $10.50; good calves, $8 to $9, medium, $7 to $8; common, $6 to $6.75.

Sheep and Lambs.

Receipts were light, 154 all told. Prices are still high, altho heavy fat sheep and spring lambs are lower on account of poor quality. Heavy ewes and rams, $4.50 to $5.50, light ewes, $6.50 to $7.25; spring lambs, $4 to $8.50.

Hogs.

Receipts being more liberal prices declined about five cents. Selects fed and watered sold at $8.35 to $8.40, and $8 f.o.b., and $8.60 to $8.65 off cars.

EAST BUFFALO LIVE STOCK.

Kingston Not Boycotted.

KINGSTON, May 22.—Sir William Mackenzie said in an interview in this city yesterday, that the Canadian Northern Railway, despite what had been said to the contrary, would continue to place orders with the Kingston Locomotive Works. He said that he entertained no resentment or petty anger against this city, and that all the trouble in connection with the railway company had been caused by shortness of money. He also said that the company would be running its trains in and out of Kingston in the near future.

Foreman Blown To Pieces.

DUNDAS, Ont., May 22. — George Niblock, 50, a foreman employed by the Canada Crushed Stone Corporation, was blown to pieces at the quarries here yesterday. Niblock dropped a piece of dynamite into a rock crevice. He tried to pick it out with a hammer and a terrific explosion followed.

Kingston Misses Grain Traffic.

KINGSTON, May 22.—There has been practically no grain discharged here for a couple of weeks. Nearly all the grain carriers coming down from Fort William have been sent on to Montreal. Heavy smoke on the river St. Lawrence has been interfering with traffic during past few days.

Fatally Hurt Stealing Ride.

BROCKVILLE, Ont., May 22.—In jumping from the eastbound Grand Trunk express, on which he was stealing a ride, Fred McCormack, a Kingston man, about 25 years of age, fell under the wheels. One arm and one leg were severed and he died four hours later.

DEBATE ON C.N.R.

Canadian Northern come back here next year seeking anything further, if they are not given the foreclosure but are given any further assistance, there will be not a riot but a revolution in this country.

Mr. Kyte: It is coming.

Mr. Burnham: Yes, it is coming, but it will take a long time if you give this matter a six months' hoist.

But this is thoroughly realized by the Conservative party: and apart altogether from the other financial considerations such as the great stringency of the financial world, we must consider the question directly and immediately at issue. That question is, whether or not, by a little successful financing, which will not in any way injure others or ourselves to any appreciable extent, we shall be able to tide this great undertaking over a serious difficulty and place the Canadian Northern Railway Company, not for their benefit but for ours, upon a sound footing. That is the question before us; and I am sure it is fitting for us to give it our serious consideration and to hasten to give the aid if possible, and we are so doing. It is, of course, gratifying to hear plenty of criticism. It is only in that way that the general knowledge of the country and of the opponents and critics of the resolution can possibly be made use of by the Government. That is desirable; and since we now know that the only thing that can be urged against this resolution is that it had better be postponed, we are thoroughly well satisfied to go on with it without delay. The people of this country, I fancy, do think in that way. They are absolutely tired of grafters, of being made use of, of being made hewers of wood and drawers of water for financial giants, men who, having acquired the distinction and the fortune which they have, put handles to their names in order to distinguish themselves from the common multitude. Are those titles put into this resolution? Are they security? I fancy not, because they do not furnish any security. They do not indicate the facts of the case, and therefore never should have been bestowed. I say, however, that in view of the fact that this great undertaking is at stake; that this great difficulty must be faced, the general proposition of aiding and assisting at this juncture is admitted. The right hon. leader of the Opposition, with that patriotism which characterizes him has himself said that aid should be given. Therefore the rest is merely a matter of detail. That is something for the lawyers to settle, or for those upon whom rests the responsibility of furnishing a measure which will escape the criticism of the judges—and if they do that, they will accomplish more than anybody else has ever accomplished yet. But that is a matter of detail and is not germane to the question that is now before us. We are, and have been, discussing the principles of the bill, and that principle has been endorsed from the first, the criticism that has been hurled at it by a large number of speakers being based upon an entire misconception. The principle of the bill has been endorsed even by the leader of the Opposition. Criticism of the principle from that on or by the hon. gentlemen's followers—is entirely unwarranted—let these hon. gentlemen dispute with their own leader and not with this Government. They have endorsed the principle. Very well, then, let us hasten the introduction of the bill and the discussion of the details, and then let them fight about the details as much as they like. But the fact is, we must help the Canadian Northern railway system out of the difficulty in which it is—we must do that for our own benefit; no one denies that. So, let us get out of this quarrel, let us be done with this furnishing of items for the newspapers and material for tremendous headlines. If there be a man in this House who does not endorse the principle, let him stand up and say: Not a dollar shall be spent to give this enterprise assistance. There is not a man in this House who will rise and say any such thing. We simply must decide whether we shall go into public ownership or whether we shall assist this enterprise at this juncture. I think it must be admitted that it is for us to accept the statement of those who are most intimately connected with the management of our finances; and that statement is that however desirable it might be for us to acquire this whole system—and very likely that may be proper in the future when we are in a position to do it—yet we are not able to do it now for the reason that we have too much else on hand. What else can we do except take the word of those who are managing our finances and bow to their judgment? Undoubtedly the time will come when we shall own all great public works, all means of transportation and communication; and possibly all means of production; and so, instead of having a system of free trade by which people can rush in and grab what they like, leaving the rest to take what they have left, we shall have established and demonstrated the true function of Government, the public control for the benefit of the people of all the country's resources. Therefore, I say that we ought to get out of the slough of despondency in which we are at the present time. Canadians are not the people to lose their nerve in face of impending catastrophe. I admit, and admit readily, that Mackenzie and Mann ought to put every dollar they have into this enterprise, and that if we could we ought to compel them to do it, and fight it on this principle. But now the only thing we can say is: Who allowed these men to start out on this voyage of discovery? Which has got us into this difficulty? Who allowed these men to bind down the provinces, and then having got them tied down, having got them firmly anchored for their own purposes, simply to laugh at us any say: Help us out of the difficulty or else you and yours will meet with misfortune. Who did that? The person who did that, the person who set them on their way, is the person who is guilty of bringing about this catastrophe without the least doubt. The difficulty could never have arisen if it had not been for the fact that the man—or woman—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Burnham—who started this enterprise, must have been exceedingly stupid not to have foreseen that financial men, or indeed, the common run of humanity would sooner or later get them into serious difficulty. Now, are any hon. gentlemen prepared to say that British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and the other provinces shall be thrown like bones to the dogs? Are we not to rescue them if possible by using our resources? Unquestionably. Therefore, I am sure I am speaking for the larger number of the people when I say: Get over this political bickering and discuss the principle whether we shall save our own credit and our own selves by helping this undertaking. If we should not do so, then let us tell these people to go hence and settle their difficulties among themselves. They have not done the chivalrous thing, and the decent thing of putting their own property into this enterprise by way of security. But let us aid them nevertheless, and then when the time comes we can foreclose and put the screws on them all the harder, for the reason that they deserve no mercy.

Sacrifice Was In Vain.

KINGSTON, May 22.—Wm. Manhard, B.Sc., of Fort William, formerly of Kingston, was married a year ago at Cobourg. A few weeks ago Mrs. Manhard was attacked with illness which rendered necessary a serious operation. Last week the doctors proposed transfusion of blood, and Mr. Manhard submitted. Twice his arms were tapped, and blood transfused to his wife, but on Friday she died. Her husband was then unconscious from loss of blood, and was not able to be at the obsequies of his wife.

May be as Dangerous as a Live One!

It is certainly more repulsive, and, if left, will breed far more disease than ever it did when alive.

It is not sufficient to kill the fly. You must destroy the germs as well. These, if allowed to multiply, will spread disease and death. Give up using the fly swatter and the unsanitary sticky fly paper.

Buy WILSON'S FLY PADS—the only really effective method of exterminating the death-dealing housefly. They kill all the flies in the house in a few hours. No dead flies left lying about.

WATER COMMISSIONERS NOT ALTOGETHER IN FAVOR OF LINKING ENGINEERING WORK

Chairman Favors Principle of Plan but Sees Breakers Ahead

Great Difficulty Would be Met in Getting Qualified Man

The Water Commissioners will take into serious consideration the suggestion of the City Council that the engineering department of the Utilities Commission be placed under the direction of the City Engineer.

Members of the Council feel that as the three departments mentioned above would be all using the streets of the city (for poles, mains, sewers, and underground wires, etc.), it would be well to have one engineer at the head of the three departments to have full authority in the matter of using the streets so that the street work of one department would neither conflict with or disrupt the street work of another department.

Last night at the meeting of the Water Commissioners the scheme was broached by a deputation from the City Council.

The plan as suggested last night was to put the Hydro-Electric, the Waterworks, and the work of the City Engineer's Department all under one executive head, he is to be responsible to whatever body or bodies that it was decided. Mayor Buller and Alderman Johnston were the chief spokesmen for the aldermen, although all the members of the Council present, except Alderman Anderson, were expressedly in favor of the proposed change.

The Water Commissioners, on the other hand, did not think the proposition a feasible one, but declared their willingness to give the plan every consideration.

What was said about experts from outside of the city, including Mr. Willis Chipman, of Toronto, by Mayor Buller and other aldermen, might have precipitated a free-for-all if the said experts had been within hearing and striking distance at the time. A good many of the faults in sewer and other construction work that have been made in the past years, were laid at the doors of visiting experts, and the Mayor contended that the plan proposed would save the expense and subsequent dissatisfaction of employing experts.

There were present to back up the programme suggested, Mayor Buller, and Aldermen Dobbin, Saunders, Stratton, Anderson, Green Duffus, and Langford. The question they introduced was explicitly that of having the Commission appoint the City Engineer head of the Water and Hydro departments so that he would have charge of them as well as the city's work.

Principle Favored.

Mr. Matthews favored the principle of the plan, but said that it would be almost impossible to get a man that would fill the requirements of such a position. The aldermen here expressed their confidence in Mr. Parsons, but the chairman said that while he thought Mr. Parsons was an extremely efficient City Engineer, that a man with more electrical knowledge and experience would be required.

Alderman Johnston — "Suppose, Mr. Chairman, the right man could be produced, are you agreeable to the principle of having one man at the head of both departments?"

Mr. Matthews—"Well, that is a question that cannot be answered off hand. It would depend on who the man was responsible to. The expense that has been occasioned in our street work, resulting in some having to be done over again, is greatly exaggerated. I can see nothing ahead but trouble if the plan you suggest were to be carried out."

Commissioners Moore and Hicks were of the same opinion. Finally, on the motion of Messrs. Stratton and Duffus, the Mayor, Alderman Anderson, Alderman Johnston, and Alderman Duncan were appointed a committee from the Council to confer with the Commissioners at some future date and decide or discuss the feasibility of the plan.

They will likely come together on Tuesday.

LAD KILLED BY FALLING INTO WELL

Youngster Struck His Head on Stone Wall

A sad accident took place at Lotus, a small hamlet in Manvers Township, when the little two-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Kerr was killed by falling into an open well.

Few particulars are to hand, but it appears that the young fellow when discovered was quite dead, with a gaping wound in the temple, and it is surmised that in falling he struck his head against the stone wall and was killed almost instantly.

The parents are grief stricken over their sad loss. Mr. and Mrs. Kerr have one other child.—Lindsay Warder.

LORD CHARLES BERESFORD.

In a speech at London he declared that the Army and Navy deeply resented the cry of "Army versus People." Neither branch of the service, he said, wished to have anything to do with politics.

"TINY" JOE WANDERED IN THESE PARTS

Made his Escape From the Toronto Authorities

Half starved and foot-weary, ten-year-old Joe Libowitch, of Toronto, sought refuge at the home of a well known Smith Township farmer a few days ago, and told his tale of woe to the tiller of the soil, who in turn communicated with the Toronto authorities. Yesterday an officer of the Children's Aid Society of the Queen City visited the farm, and when the 4.33 C.P.R. train pulled out for Toronto yesterday afternoon, tiny Joe was seated in a big plush backed seat on his way to his former city, where he will be taken care of by the society.

A few weeks ago Joe, who is known to the Toronto newsboys as "Tiny," was arrested on a charge of stealing newspapers. He was taken to the Juvenile Court, but while awaiting his trial he performed a Bill Miner stunt and got away. He boarded a train at the Union Station and told the conductor he was lost but that he had friends in Peterboro. He was let off here. He wandered about the country side, begging what he could to eat and bunking in hay mows, till two days ago he could not stand it any longer, and gave the Peterboro Township farmer an earful of his experiences. He will be looked after by the Children's Aid Society until he is able to go to work.

DWELLING IN DOURO RAZED

W. Ellis Loses Home and Contents

The fire fiend razed another home in this vicinity last evening, when the fine residence of W. Ellis, situated on the Cordova Road, about half way between this city and Douro post office, was completely wrecked. Only a small portion of the household effects were saved. The origin of the fire is unknown, and the damage is partly covered by insurance.

It was about 6 o'clock when members of the family noticed flames shooting through the roof of the kitchen. The fire spread with such rapidity that it was not long before the entire countryside was alarmed. Neighbors rushed to the scene with all the pails and buckets available, and although the volunteer brigade of bucket carriers worked like beavers, their heroic efforts were of no avail, as the blaze was master of the situation, and did not die out until it had licked up every piece of combustible material. The small lot of furniture was saved in the face of great danger, as the front rooms were filled with smoke when the effects were pulled out.

PAVILION IS MOVED.

Hickey's pavilion and boat livery, which was stationed at the Street Railway Wharf last summer, was moved from its winter quarters yesterday by the Steamer Beaver and placed on the west side of the wharf again. It is to be opened on Saturday.

THE WEATHER

No Rain of Any Account Since April 29th

Rain is getting nearer at the present time. The last rainfall of any account fell on April 29th, to a depth of about three-quarters of an inch. None whatever has falling during May as yet. During the winter, November and January were the only months that came up to the average in percipitation, and the outlook is for low water this summer, especially in view of the fact that the total for last year (24.11 inches) is the least for some 20 years. The previous year (1912) had the greatest amount since 1896. Almost 40 inches fell in 1912.—W.P.

NEARING THE END

Canadian Press Despatch.

New York, May 22.—Judge Seabury finished his charge to the jury in the Becker trial at half-past twelve to-day, having commenced immediately after court opened at ten o'clock.

TWO MADE ONE AT ARMY TEMPLE

Miss Annie Smith and Mr. Raeben Moore Are Wedded

A hallelujah wedding was celebrated at the Salvation Army Temple last night, when Adjutant McElhiney united in marriage Miss Annie Smith, of this city, and Mr. Reuben Moore, of Coboconk.

Mrs. McElhiney assisted the bride, and the groom was supported by Mr. J. Cunningham.

The band gave several selections and at the close of the ceremony the happy couple and their friends enjoyed a wedding repast at the Temple.

WILD TIME AT THEATRE

Suffragette Shrieks "You Russian Czar" at King

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, May 22.—King George and Queen Mary had to endure the infliction of suffragettes this afternoon. During a matinee at His Majesty's Theatre, a woman rose in the stalls and shrieked, "You Russian Czar." Before she got any further, attendants rushed in and got her out, after clipping chains with which she had fastened herself to the seat. In the meantime, other militants in different parts of the house began shouting at the King, and several in turn jumped on the stage and tried to address the audience. After all were finally thrown out, the police had difficulty in rescuing them from the crowd.

Near Leicester last night, suffragettes attempted to burn Stoughton Hall, but the incipient flame was discovered by a passing gamekeeper, who aroused the inmates in time. Scenes in Bow Street police court, when prisoners of yesterday's battle were arraigned surpassed in wildness all previous exhibitions. A male sympathizer had somehow found a seat on a rafter, where he played the "Marseillaise," and then sounded the charge, which was the signal for bags of flour and other missiles to be hurled at Sir John Dickinson on the bench. One woman hurled her shoe, but Sir John cleverly caught it. When the magistrate ordered the session suspended, there was a free fight. Subsequently the women were brought in again, and most of them bound over to keep the peace for six months. All refused to do so.

BARRIE WANTS MORE CARE IN HANDLING BREAD

Washable Gloves for Delivery Men is Suggested

Barrie, May 22.—At a meeting of the Board of Health a committee was appointed to interview the bakers with a view to having greater care exercised in the handling of bread by delivery men. Washable gloves were suggested and it may even result in an order compelling the wrapping of all bread delivered in town.

ARCHBISHOP BEGIN.

Of Quebec, who will on May 25th receive the Cardinal's red hat from the Pope.

ABSENCE OF THE SEAL DOES NOT EFFECT CASE

Otonabee's Local Option By-law is Valid

The fact that the officials of Otonabee Township failed to affix the corporate seal to the local option by-law passed in the municipality does not make a prosecution for violation of the by-law illegal, according to announcement from the Provincial License Department. The question arose during a case at Norwood a few days ago, where John Faux was made defendant in an action charging him with being intoxicated in a local option district. G. N. Gordon, who acted for the defendant, contended that as the township officials had neglected to place the seal on the by-law the prosecution was irregular.

R. Ruddy, K.C., of this city, acted for the Crown in the matter and contended that the failure of the officials to affix the seal did not alter the action. Mr. Ruddy's interpretation of the license law has been verified by the department at Toronto, which holds that Section 258 of the Municipal Act covers the officials' oversight. The section provides that where by oversight the seal has not been affixed, it may be affixed at any later date and shall be as valid and effectual as if it had been originally signed.

The two magistrates who tried the case will give their judgment in a week or so. They reserved it pending a reply from the License Department regarding the matter of seals.

SUICIDED AT GRAVE OF HUSBAND

Mrs. Daniel Dwyer Ended her Life With Carbolic Acid

Body Was Found in Cemetery Early This Morning

Grief, followed by despondency and melancholy, as a result of the death of her husband, Daniel Dwyer, his widow sought his grave in St. Peter's Cemetery some time during last night and ended her earthly cares by taking carbolic acid. During the night the dogs owned by John Mervin were exceedingly restless and barked almost continually from twelve o'clock till two in the morning. Mr. Mervin heard the noise but when he looked out of the window he could see nothing to warrant any person being around. Geo. Powell, who lives close to the cemetery, was out in his garden about 6.30 this morning, and seeing the form of a woman near a tombstone, he investigated. One glance was sufficient to convince him that the woman was dead.

Frank Brown, caretaker of the cemetery was immediately notified, and he in turn notified Coroner Dr. Green, who decided an inquest unnecessary. The remains were removed to Lane and Eano's undertaking establisment.

Resided on Stewart Street.

The unfortunate woman's maiden name was Margaret Boland, and her home was at Westwood, near Hastings. After her marriage she resided on Stewart Street, near the corner of McDonnel Street. Her husband died on January 15, 1906, and ever since she has been heart-broken. She was widely known, and her excellent qualities won sympathy for her among a legion of friends.

About eight months ago she left this city to reside in Toronto, and her actions at that time gave reason for the belief that her mind was affected.

After procuring the carbolic acid she came to the city last evening. The label on the bottle had been scratched off but the name Tamblyn, one of the leading drug firms in Toronto, was on the glass. Several residents of the South Ward saw her going down Aylmer Street, and out Romaine to the cemetery a few minutes after nine o'clock, so it is thought that she came to this city on the C. P. R. 7.57.

Whether she took the poison immediately after her arrival at the cemetery is not known, but her gloves, hat, purse and umbrella were placed in a row in front of the tombstone. The six-ounce bottle, about one-third emptied, and a paper cup were found at the fence about four yards from the body.

The late Mrs. Dwyer was about forty-two years of age, and is survived by her mother, two brothers and one sister, all of Westwood, who were notified. Her brothers are expected in the city this evening. Funeral arrangements will be announced later.

BURRELL EXTENDS GREETINGS ON BEHALF OF DOMINION

Reports Received by Constitutionalists Are to the Effect That Federal Forces Have Suddenly Evacuated Satlillo by Huerta's Orders.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., May 22.—On behalf of the Dominion Government Hon. Martin Burrell, Minister of Agriculture, gave a dinner to the mediators at the Clifton House last night. In rising to propose the toast of the King, the Minister said: "Your Excellencies and gentlemen: On behalf of the Dominion of Canada I have the honor to extend to you a heartfelt welcome to the country you have selected as the scene of your deliberations. His Royal Highness the Governor-General has asked me to convey his most cordial greeting to the members of the conference."

In conclusion, the Minister said it was not the duty of Canada to touch on the grave complications which led to the assembling of the mediators, but of privilege to hope that there would be a solution which would make for honorable settlement.

Ambassador Da Gama, in reply, said that when he left Washington he told the President of the United States that the only support he had was that of the President himself and Mr. Bryan, but that he now felt a growing public opinion was behind him. He wound up by proposing a toast to "Peace and a spirit of confraternity among all American nations." For fear of causing embarrassment to the American mediators the health of Presidents were omitted.

It is deemed probable that there will be no full conference to-day or until next Monday; as in accordance with the usual diplomatic rule the conference would adjourn from Friday to Saturday, the extra day being given, it is believed, so that the mediators may communicate with their Governments.

Federals Desert Saltillo.

EL PASO, Texas, May 22.—Saltillo is the provisional capital of Mexico last night if the official reports which were received by the Constitutionalist Junta, later verified by messages to the commandants in Juarez, and flashed to France by Gen. Felip Angeles to his family, are true. After five days of battles and skirmishes between Reata and Ramos Arizpe nine miles from Saltillo, the Federal garrison, in command of Generals Coss, De Maure, Maas, Santocoy and Romero, departed for the south to face 200 miles of the worst desert in Central Mexico. The supposed destination of the garrison of 8,500 surviving Federals is San Luis Potosi, although that town is surrounded by the forces of Gen. Carrera Torres and Santo Eulalio Guiterres, who have been besieging the town of San Luis from the north and east for the past two weeks.

The capitulation of Saltillo came as a surprise to the rebel commanders as much so as did Ojinaga and Torreon. Villa was preparing to renew the attack on the town proper after disposing of the Federal flankers and reinforcements from Monclova, who had harassed him around Paredon. He returned to Ramos Arizpe, and was making his plans for a general assault of the town, having sent his skirmish line ahead to begin the attack. At the first sound of firing the Federals left the town and started south.

The Constitutionalist Junta was not surprised at this unexpected move on the part of the Federals, as they have had confidential information from their agents in Mexico City that Huerta intends to concentrate all of his available forces in Mexico City and to offer no prolonged and hard-fought resistance to the rebels in their advance on the capital.

CADETS CONGRATULATED ON THEIR FINE SHOWING

Cup is Presented to No. 1 Company and Commander Cann Receives Medal

After congratulating the cadets on their fine appearance and general efficiency in drill, Inspecting Officer Major Gillespie of the I. and O.G.C. of Kingston pointed out the many distinguishing features of the local cadets at their annual inspection held yesterday in Central Park. Such boys as paraded before the lines were a credit to the school, he said. Cadet Instructor C. E. Jamieson was characterized by the speaker as one of the most efficient officers of the 3rd Division. The cadet officers under him were also of the best calibre that went into the make-up of a good military man.

The cup for the best company given by Capt. Cluxton and won won by 1 Company under Capt. Peever, was then presented to the company by Mrs. C. E. Jamieson amid cheers of the spectators.

The medal for the best shot, given by Capt. McPherson was won by Commander Lorne Cann who displayed great efficiency in his shooting. The presentation was made by Mr. Jamieson.

The medal for efficiency as an officer given by Mrs. C. E. Jamieson was won by Adjutant Mills, son of Major Mills.

Lt.-Col. Miller spoke of the great showing made by the cadets. They were certainly a credit to the Board of Education and he was sorry that more of the members were not present. He as usual urged the members to go in for shooting. One of their members, Commander Cann, had narrowly missed the trip to England with the rifle team owing to the overcrowding o fcadets on the team.

The Bugle Band were also congratulated on their remarkable showing, by the Inspecting Officer.

The ceremonies were brought to a close with three cheers for the Garrison officers, the Inspecting officer, the representatives of the Daughters of the Empire and for Cadet Instructor Jamieson who is very popular with the boys of the Collegiate.

"MATER" EXPRESSES OPINION ON CENSURE RESOLUTION OF THE WOMEN'S COUNCIL

Editor, Review:

Dear Sir,—Regarding the censure of the Police Commissioners by the Women's Council, kindly let me say to the Police Commissioners through The Review that they have the approval of a large number of Peterborough women as well as men, in their attitude toward the policewoman agitation. The appointment of a police matron is what was needed, and no more competent person could have been chosen than Mrs. McElhiney. She is already familiar with the work and is fitted by nature to perform the duties of the position. She has been working in co-operation with the Chief of Police, which is another qualification in her favor.

Just here let it be noted that the petition presented to the Commissioners by the Women's Council had the signatures of only a small number of the women voters of Peterborough. Not all the women who were asked signed that petition, and many who did sign it, when afterwards spoken to confessed that they had given the subject no consideration, but signed it upon the representation of the women who presented it, or to please their friends. There is little doubt that the situation was not clearly understood by the majority of women.

The members of the Women's Council may speak for themselves as they see fit; but let it be noted they have no authority to speak for the women of Peterborough. Their actions so far in regard to social questions have not the sympathy of women of intelligence and experience in these matters.

"All serious minded people will agree with the opinion of the police inspector of Scotland Yard who says, "After a long experience in dealing with the crime of the world we do not find women effective." He also states that a woman's efforts are more effective as a "mother confessor" than they are as a detective; herein we acknowledge the wisdom of our Police Commissioners in appointing Mrs. McElhiney as police matron.

It is known that some of the spokeswomen who approached the Commissioners had more than a year before been notified definitely of an open source of impurity in the city and requested to co-operate in its abolition They declined, no doubt on account of close connection with the church. They were loath to expose the "Inside of the Cup" perhaps.

Yours truly,
MATER.

REPORT SHOWS PROGRESS AT ST. JAMES' CHURCH

Work of the Year Reviewed at Gathering of the Congregation

The annual congregational meeting of the St. James Methodist Church was held on Wednesday evening. Mr. J. O. Fife of the finance committee outlined the new financial system, and reported the finances of the church to be in splendid condition. During the year the trustee board has purchased a new parsonage, as well as reducing the debt on the church considerably.

Mrs. T. Brown, secretary of the Ladies' Aid, reported realizing $760 during the past 12 months, which reflects great credit upon that branch of thechurch. Mrs. W. S. Robinson informed the meeting that the Junior Epworth League was in good condition and flourishing beyond expectations, notwithstanding the fact that they had lost the president, Mrs. Carlos Green, who moved to Toronto. The senior Epworth League report as read by Mr. J. O. Fife was very satisfactory.

Mr. W. S. Wright, of the Boys' Guild stated that they now had some 35 boys identified with the movement, which was meeting with great success. Mr. A. E. Prest, Superintendent of the Sunday School, reported equal success in the Sunday School, there being an increase of 100 members during the past year. The Sunday School is one of the two Sunday Schools in the Peterboro district that are credited with ten points of efficiency. The contributions of the Sunday School for the year amounted to $640. Mr. J. O. Fife was appointed to act as delegate to the Conference to be held in Napanee during the first week in June.

HON. MARTIN BURRELL.

Minister of Agriculture, who welcomes the "A.B.C." mediators at Niagara Falls.

The Value of a Comma.

Charles Dickens was particular about the placing of his comma, and one can understand such precision when recalling what a hash a misplaced point can make in an author's meaning. At a woman's dinner, recently, one of the toasts ran, "Woman! without her, man is a brute;" but the compositor set it up as "Woman without her man, is a brute."—(London Chronicle.)

TOOK LAW IN HIS OWN HANDS

Magistrate Upholds Man who Whipped Girl

The charge of assault against Jos. Fritz, preferred by Minnie Veamont, both of East City, was dismissed. The complainant claimed that she had been assaulted by the defendant, who horsewhipped her for climbing on his rig. The defendant admitted that he horsewhipped the little girl. She had proved herself to be a nuisance by bothering him and throwing stones.

Magistrate Dumble contended that the man had done right in administering the punishment and dismissed the case.

PUPILS OBSERVE EMPIRE DAY

Empire Day was observed by the school pupils this afternoon, when they marched to the Armouries and sang patriotic songs. They were also adressed. The day was fittingly observed at the Normal School.

RECEPTION COMMITTEE.

The reception committee will meet again this evening to further arrangements for the reception of the Duke of Connaught and party.

PETERBOROUGH, FRIDAY, MAY 22, 1914

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF VICTORIA DAY.

THE INAUGURATION of the 23rd of May, Empire Day, due to Mrs. Clementina Fessenden of Hamilton, was to bring forcibly before the public the reality, aims and purposes of the British Empire. When this commemoration day was first inaugurated the celebration took place principally in the schools of the Empire. When Queen Victoria died in 1901 it was considered advisable to continue the celebration of Victoria's Birthday, so long had that ruler presided over the destinies of the Empire, so long had her birthday been a day of recreation throughout her vast domains. As Empire day and Victoria Day came so close together it was decided to combine the two in the celebration of what had since been called Victoria Day. The 24th of May thus commemorates the great Empire in which Canada is second only to the United Kingdom and also the memory of the Monarch who reigned longest on the English throne.

To many, the British Empire, as an Empire, seems to be a modern conception of the countries under the Union Jack. In many respects, this idea is true, but if the reader will turn to the tales of the Elizabethan seamen, particularly to the old maps of the reign of Henry VIII, and of Elizabeth as well as to that series of books known as Hackluyt's Voyages he will see that even in those far off days, Englishmen were accustomed to regard the British Dominion as an Empire. True, the British Empire has witnessed a transformation unique in history, occasioned by the principle of autonomous sub-divisions. Nevertheless, people still talk of the British Empire, even though the conception of Empire has so greatly changed.

The man who did perhaps more than any to impress on the British people, the idea of Empire in the modern sense, was Benjamin Disraeli, afterwards Earl of Beaconsfield. Disraeli saw the trend of politics was towards democracy, and he wished to include a principle of democracy in his Imperialism, "All is race," said Disraeli, and, in his novel Sybil he emphasized "The people" in the democratic sense. Speaking at Manchester in 1872, he said "And yet, gentlemen it is not merely our fleets and armies, our powerful artillery, our accumulated capital and our unlimited credit, on which I so much depend as that unbroken spirit of her people which I believe was never prouder of the Imperial country to which they belong. . . . Proud of your confidence and encouraged by your sympathy, I now deliver to you as my last words, the cause of the Tory party, of the English Constitution and of the British Empire." It was the great Conservative Prime Minister Disraeli, who talked of the British Empire and made Imperialism a political question throughout its length and breadth. It was Disraeli who startled all Europe by purchasing the Suez Canal shares and who succeeded in having Victoria crowned Empress of India. When the British Parliament was debating on the vexed far eastern question, Disraeli gave expression to one of his most often quoted phrases when he said, "But gentlemen the heart of India is not Herat the heart of India is London."

Disraeli's two Premierships in 1868 and 1874 to 1880 did a good deal to give new encouragement to a right idea of the constitutional function of the Crown. Disraeli thought that the Queen ought to be a power in the State and she became so, for Victoria was a ruler of a new type. When she ascended the throne popular faith in Kings and Queens was on the decline She revived that faith, consolidated the throne, captivated the multitude and won the affections of thoughtful men. This she achieved by methods that would have appeared impracticable to a predecessor and which required no less shrewdness to discover than force of character and honesty of heart to do. Victoria was famous for her candour, and richly endowed with a saving common sense, but was not remarkable for the high development of any specialized intellectual force. Her whole life was an abiding lesson in the paramount importance of character. In 1887 she celebrated her Golden Jubilee and again in 1897 she celebrated her Diamond Jubilee, both of which impressed on the whole Empire the force of her character and a conception of the importance of her long reign.

The Empire over which Victoria presided for so long a period of time, stretches to every sea if not in actual land in real influence. It consists of as heterogeneous a combination of peoples and forms of Government as ever existed. It embraces men of all colours, religions and social customs from the Bushmen of South Africa and the natives of India to the people of Canada and the United Kingdom. The Government varies from one of direct Military Control to that of the self governing colonies. Its area and population are vast and the problems of the Empire are no less difficult of solution.

But the celebration of the two-fold object in Victoria Day, the British Empire and Victoria's reign, is not so much to impress on the people the bigness of the Empire, the strength of its great fleet nor the power of its vast wealth. It is not a day to swell up the chest and imagine that the British people have attained anything like completeness in its political fabric. There is a tremendous amount of work to be done, the civilizing effect of British institutions, customs and laws, have to be conveyed to people far down in the scale of human progress. Great questions of government are continually before the Mother of Parliaments. The extension of the Christian religion is another great problem. The protection of trade, the maintenance of fleets and armies are undertaken to keep up the integrity of the Empire as well as to assist in the general uplift of mankind. The purpose of the Empire is mainly to be a great factor in human progress and to hold in check those forces which would tend to make nations decadent or else keep them merely marking time.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

NOW IT IS announced that the Montreal Herald-Telegraph-Witness that caused Sir Hugh Graham of the Star to get a good deal of publicity is to be reorganized. Well-known Liberals who will henceforth act as its directors, will be Hon. Geo. P. Graham, M.P., at one time editor and proprietor of The Brockville Recorder; Hon. P. G. S. McKenzie, treasurer of the Province of Quebec, and a member of the Gouin government, and R. C. Smith, K.C., Montreal. The change becomes effective on June 15. Mr. Graham will be asked to become president. Thus another chapter in Montreal newspaper history will be shortly closed.

WELLAND CONSERVATIVES have nominated Major Donald Sharpe a candidate for the legislature at the largest political meeting ever held in the county. The nomination went to Major Donald Sharpe, a former warden of the county, and George H. Petitt, barrister, Welland, was beaten in the final ballot by only one vote. Mr. Petitt then made a rousing speech in favor of the candidate. Hon. W. J. Hanna said that be the elections early or late, they would be under the leadership of Sir James Whitney.

FOR THE FIRST TIME in the history of the Canadian Militia a Canadian Minister of Militia and Defence, Colonel the Hon Sam Hughes, marched the other night at the head of the local regiment, the Governor-General's Foot Guards, accompanied by several members of his staff. They marched for over an hour. The Colonel then proceeded to the House of Commons to place his vote for the Government on the C.N.R. resolutions. The minister marched out as an evidence of his own personal interest in the ordinary routine of the Canadian soldier's life.

HON. WILLIAM PUGSLEY, on the C.N.R. bill in the Commons, objected to the creation of $100,000,000 of "watered stock." Premier Borden replied that the late Liberal Government had allowed the issue of not $100,000,000, but $145,000,000 of stock by the C.N.R. and its allied companies. The present Government had really reduced the capital.

A NEW G.T.R. station and freight sheds are to be started in Port Hope. Now we know one of the main points of interest there viz., viewing their new station from the back of railway trains.

CONSERVATIVES are organizing in various parts of the province. Editor H. J. VanDusen is to be the candidate in South Bruce. Pretty reliable signs of an early election.

A DESPATCH says scores of Kingston people were cured by prayer. Let us humbly inquire if W. F. Nickle or the editor of the Standard is in the list.

The Warblers Are Here.

Toronto Globe.

Clothed in colors, tints, and shades as rich as those worn by the harsh-voiced birds of the tropics, graceful, alert, and sweetly hesitant in song, the most beautiful of our spring transients and summer residents are coursing through the half-clothed trees and searching every twig and bud for insect food. Warblers miss the admiring recognition of their many charms, for their perpetual activity and diminutive size make them elusive in spite of an engaging and courageous confidence. It is often a sudden revelation to find the branches overhead or the shrubbery all about suddenly inhabited by flitting, darting, climbing, chirping, and warbling gleaners, and as suddenly deserted when they hurry off to search among other bushes and trees. Rich markings of yellow, blue, red, orange, and green, with contrasts of black and white softened by quieter shadings, are discerned as they hastily pass from one concealment to another, and when one pauses to pick a minute speck of insect life from the crevice of a swelling bud on an exposed limb there is a complete revelation of beauty in color, form, and graceful activity.

The yellow warbler we all know as the wild canary, for he freely remains in the city throughout the summer, building in the lofty fork of a shade tree a nest of fibres, and enlivening the streets with a shrill, energetic song. The red start, with patches of coal-red on wings and tail in contrast with a glossy black mantle, makes a home in the suburbs. His mate is more quietly decorated in salmon yellow. The oven bird, orange-crowned, with thrush-like mantle and streaked breast, builds its canopied nest on the ground. The black-throated blue warbler and black-throated green warbler are descriptively named, as is the black and white warbler, whose copiously streaked back is often seen inverted against a tree as he searches the bark for food.

Among the early arrivals is the myrtle warbler in grey and black, with yellow patches on crown, sides, and rump. The magnolia warbler has a place among the more gaily adorned. Black streaks decorate his yellow breast and sides, his yellow throat and rump are conspicuous, and his expanded tail shows contrasts of black and white. The chestnut-sided warbler with yellow crown, and the bay-breasted with crown patch of chestnut, are among the more common, and the perula, with a yellowish-brown patch on his grey back and a touch of red on his yellow breast, is coy and retiring. There are other members of the family making their summer home in Canada, but these are the more familiar. They spend the winter about the Gulf of Mexico and the Isthmus, some passing to the northern continent, but most of them return when the north becomes hospitable. They pass freely through the cities and are welcomed by their friends. Some nest about the Lakes, but most of them move on to the remote wilderness where insect pests supply them with abundance of food and protect them from molestation. Little rangers of the continent with us for a season, they are making the awakening foliage glad for a few brief days as they pass to the forest sanctuaries of the north.

THE EARLY TOILER

By Walt Mason

Some fellows arise from their beds in the morning, when darkness is just giving place to the dawn, and, everyone's rights in the neighborhood scorning, they push their mowers all over the lawn. Their mowers are rusty, and screech like Old Harry, go clickety-clank in a maddening way; the voice of a rusty old mower will carry all over the village, at breaking of day. Then neighbors get up and lean out of their windows, and shovel out language that's addled and sour, and beg, in the tongues of the Choctaws and Hindoos, that silence may reign till a civilized hour. In vain is their pleading; the mowers go clinking, the mowers go clanking their cogwheels and cams, and many good people are driven to drinking, and finally die of the Jimuel Jams. There should be a jail for such slumber destroyers, a dark, mouldy dungeon, disgusting and stale, and also a cell for the coin hungry lawyers who fain would defend them or see they get bail. But law doesn't cover such grievous offenses, and people must suffer till this life is gone, they still must be driven out of their senses, by bores who go mowing an hour before dawn.

ON ARGUING

BILL JONES, the blacksmith, used to be a powerful argufier till one day he tried to drive home an argument on Stover's old sorrell mare with a red-hot hoss-shoe and the old gal kicked him clean through a pine partition. Bill was in bed fer two weeks and when he got around ag'in you couldn't any more get inter an argument with him then you could get into a benzine-wagon runnin' forty mile an hour.

Bill said he was through arguin' forever. Said he'd been figgerin' up while he lay in bed how many hours he had spent tryin' to convince us boneheads against our stubborn opinions, and he figgered that he had lost about four years, eight weeks, two hours and twenty minutes vallable time. And he was right, too. He had spent a lot of time arguin', he shore had. Funny part of it is, though, we all of us had told Bill that he wasted a lot of good time foolishly, but he never listened to us and it was left to a hollow-backed old mare to bring home conviction to him.

Which goes to show that mostly anythin' can be an agent fer good, doesn't it?

As You Like It

London scored one measly run in the first innings yesterday but that was sufficient to win as the Petes were kalsomined. The weak hitting locals have gathered sixty-six hits in the eleven games played or an average of six hits per game. The trouble with the locals outside of their inability to clout is that they have not bunched more than two hits per innings since the season opened. In the eleven games they have shown themselves to be a slow attacking force and have crossed the pan but twenty-five times or an average of about two and one-quarter tallies per battle. Truly the Petes cannot claim any bouquets as an offensive power. The pitchers have hurled ball which should win the majority of games and when the new players report that department should look better in the box scores as the slabmen have had little or no assistance from the other departments of the team. Schettler had to pitch air-tight ball to win at Erie and he had to do the same thing to beat Ottawa here while Tracey stood London on their heads in the battle he won.

There is much joy in Hamilton. Knotty Lee and his Beavers invaded the Mountain City yesterday and were trounced 12-6 with Kirley, Knotty's best bet on the mound. Dolan one of the four D's on the Hamilton roster heaved 'em for the winners. Knotty is about as popular in Hamilton as a lemon is in an orange crop, but can be depended upon ta make matters interesting. R-E-V-E-N-G-E is what Knotty is seeking, for all the nasty things the Ham fans said about him during his managerial duties there, and it looks like a neat bet that his ideal will be realized.

The outfielder whom the local management is dickering for is expected here by Monday. He is said to be extremely fast and a good clouter. Swartling, the Cincinnati lad, who has signed to cover first base, will be here to-night or to-morrow, instead of joining the team at London. He stands six foot two.

The motordome at Toronto will not be ready for the Beavers when they open at home on May 28, and the games will be played at the island for a few weeks. The motordome has a diameter of 420 feet and it will be some clouter who shoots the pill over the fence surrounding the saucer.

Charles "Chub" Collins, whose death occurred in Dundas, a suburb of Hamilton, on Wednesday night, was a born fighter, both on the baseball field and in a political and municipal sense. "Chub," after graduating from the Dundas team, played with the Buffalo and Indianapolis clubs. In 1885 he played with the Hamilton Clippers and the following year managed the Hamilton team in the International League. He also figured as an infielder with the Rochester Club. He wound up his career as a player in 1890, when he became manager of the Hamilton Internationals, a position he held for four years. He took hold of the Galt club of the Canadian League in 1906, but retired for good at the end of that year.

Gabby Ivers beat St. Thomas yesterday. Pinch hitting in the seventh, he singled, tieing the score and then he came back in the ninth and poked out a triple with Deneau on first.

LONDONERS HAD BAGS CROWDED BUT ONE RUN ONLY DID THEY COUNT

Petes' Best Was Three Hits off Hammond—Gorman Had Two

London, May 22.—One run was sufficient to give London a victory over the Petes yesterday afternoon. The lone tally collected by the Sparrows came on a single by Long, a sacrifice and a single by Bierbauer. The game was a fast exhibition of ball all the way, the two errors which the Blountmen had being at times when they did no damage. Both Hammond and Sterling pitched good ball, but the local man was backed up better than his opponent. Although the locals collected eight hits off Sterling he was strong in the pinches. The Petes had three hits. Gorman, the first sacker, who has been hitting badly of late, had two of the three bingles secured by the Petes, the other one being credited to Byrne. Both heavers passed four men, while Sterling fanned two and Hammond a trio. Taken all the way through the game was a snappy exhibition, and the Petes displayed good form except in hitting. The locals pilfered five pillows. The visitors had a lovely chance to do something in the seventh. With two on and two out, Swartz was dangerous. He, however, got a bad decision when hit by Hammond, the umpire declaring a foul ball. Then he fanned.

The Erie Yanks are enjoying or rather feeling the slump. The Yanks have lost all four games played on the road and the slugging crew evidently has fallen flat under good pitching. Erie has one hope and that is in batting as the team is not sure in the field. Lefty Kubat did the trick yesterday.

BOX OF PERFECTIONS FOR HOME RUN AT RIVERSIDE

S. Davis & Sons, Limited, the largest manufacturers of high class cigars in Canada, have donated through their Eastern Ontario representative, J. L. McIntyre, a box of their "Perfection" brand of cigars for every Peterboro player making a home run at Riverside Park during the season. When the boys strike their proper stride, they are sure to cop some of these smokes, as last year they put a pretty fair crimp in Clysdale's stock of "Perfections" under the same conditions. The season has hardly started, and before long we hope the boys will be pulling off "Perfection" wallops regularly.

Any player winning a box of these celebrated cigars may secure same by calling on A. W. Clysdale, the well known wholesale and retail tobacconist, George Street, who will hand the smokes over.

TURBULENT SCENE IN THE BRITISH HOUSE

Premier Asquith's Demand That Home Rule Bill Be Given Third Reading Without Change Evokes Round of Angry Protests From Unionists and Then Storm Breaks Loose.

LONDON, May 22.—(C. A. P. Cable.)—There was a wild scene in the House of Commons when, following the remarks of the Prime Minister, Mr. Asquith, and Mr. Bonar Law, the leader of the Opposition, the immediate third reading of the Home Rule bill was moved. Instantly there was a great uproar, half a dozen members attempting to talk at once. Speaker Lowther tried vainly to restore order, and finally adjourned the Commons until to-day.

When Mr. Asquith announced that the Home Rule bill would be called up for a third reading on Tuesday night, he said that he was prepared to consider all suggestions that might render the Government proposals acceptable to Ulster, but he insisted that the Commons must first pass the bill unimpaired.

Mr. Asquith said the Government's proposals for compromise had not met an encouraging reception. So anxious was the Government that a new system of government should start with general acquiescence that they had put forward proposals designed to meet susceptibilities which they readily admitted did exist. The effect of the Government's proposals would be to give people a chance of saying at the poll whether they would go under the provisions of the bill or not.

While the Government were anxious that full consideration should be given to such susceptibilities, they fully admitted they must have the firm judgment on the main proposals of the bill.

Mr. Bonar Law and other Unionists followed in bitter speeches, in which they denounced Premier Asquith for his refusal to acquaint the House of Commons with the terms of his amending bill. They declared that the whole proceeding of asking the House of Commons to read the Home Rule bill a third time before members knew the Government's intentions was so farcical that it would serve no good purpose to participate further in the debate.

Immediately after the vote had been taken, the Unionists started the refrain, "Adjourn," "Adjourn."

The uproar was long and loud. The Speaker finally rose and asked Mr. Bonar Law, the leader of the Opposition, whether he assented in the demonstration.

Amid shouts from his supporters of "Don't answer," Mr. Law refused to reply, and the Speaker declared the sitting suspended, saying there was nothing else he could do, as Mr. Law declined to assist him in maintaining order.

Premier Asquith and his colleagues in the Cabinet, who remained in their seats, were fiercely assailed with abusive epithets by the Opposition, to which the Ministerialists replied with cheers and the waving of handkerchiefs.

As the members emerged from the chamber, Henry Page Croft, a Unionist, raised the shout, "Three cheers for King John!" the reference being to John Redmond, the Nationalist leader.

Mr. Law's curt reply when the Speaker appealed to him to help him in restraining the disorderliness, was obviously disapproved by Arthur J. Balfour, and some of the older front bench men on the Unionist side.

When the Speaker asked if the obstruction had his assent, Mr. Law, in quick, angry jerks retorted:

"I do not presume, Mr. Speaker, to criticize what you consider your duty, but I know mine. It is not to answer such a question."

Members on the back Unionist benches wildly applauded, but the other Parliamentarians hung their heads with every sign of chagrin.

CHURCH LEAGUE DOUBLE HEADER

Opening Games at Nicholls Oval, Saturday Afternoon

Two good games are promised to lovers of baseball at Nicholl's Oval Saturday. The four Church League teams wil meet in the opener of the season. At 2 p.m. George Street plays the fast St. Paul's bunch of heavy hitters, while the Y. M. C. A. will meet St. Andrew's at 4 p.m.

Both games will be particularly interesting, as the Church League boys are playing snappy ball. The double header will give the fans a chance to get a line on all the teams.

The competition for the Cressman Silver Cup will be keen right from the start, as the winners this year will retain it for good.

Followers of the teams should be on hand to cheer their favorites.

Nicholl's Oval is an ideal spot for an afternoon's outing There is no admission charge.

ESSAD PEEVISH

Says Austria Expelled Him From Albania

NAPLES, May 22. — Essad Pasha, former Albanian Minister of War, who arrived here yesterday on his way to Rome after his expulsion from Burazzo, declared that he was a victim of Austria, which he says is averse to his friendliness for Italy. He added that disorders were organized in Albania so that he might be killed or captured.

The Albanians, according to Essad, dislike the idea of foreign officers commanding the Albanian military police as they consider it unnecessary foreign intervention in their affairs.

VERY MANY INTERESTING EXHIBITS AT THE MUSEUM

Some Recent Additions to the Ever Increasing Number of Relics

There is one institution among the many which residents of Peterboro should feel proud of. That is the Victoria Museum situated in the library building. The institution is without a doubt one of the finest of its class in Canada and leads in some collections. The rooms are attractively arranged and bright while the collections of relics are increasing each day. Which speaks well for the work of Mr. T. A. S. Hay and Mr. G. H. Clarke, to whom the greatest of credit is due.

Among the latest contributions to the museum is a collection of Indian archeology which is highly interesting. The collection includes relics of hundreds of years ago, arrow heads, pipes of all descriptions, iron axes from the miniature to the mammoth size and other works of the ancient Red Man. Silver hair brooches and buckles worn by the squaws of years ago are included in the collection and the change in style from the olden day custom and the present time is clearly exemplified. In all there are 2322 pieces in the collection.

The skulls of the mound builders dug up while excavation work was being carried on near Young's Point a few weeks ago have also been added to the large list of relics in the museum.

A fine collection of military badges is also on exhibition. They represent almost every Canadian regiment and numerous foreign corps. Old arms used centuries ago, revolvers and pistols of the early stages have also been collected, either by loan from some relic collector or outright gift. The majority of the arms which have been recently received are from the collection of D. A. Woods, Toronto. Shells fired at Santiago in the Spanish-American war are also on exhibition.

Collection of Coins.

The collection of coins is one of the finest in Canada. Included iu the lot are coins of the ancient Grecian and Roman governments which are very rare species. There is also a collection of old bills and bonds donated by Mr. Woods. One of the bonds issued to raise money to help the cause of the south in the Civil War is among the list. There is also a display of valuable coins owned by Fred T. Brown of Peterboro and Mr. Brown is to be congratulated on the work he has accomplished in securing the collection he is showing at the museum.

Mineral relics, the headlight of the first engine which ran over the Peterboro and Cobourg line, as well as a sportsman's kit of years gone by also prove highly interesting as well as instructive.

One of the choicest of relics and one which every Canadian who has read the history of his country will be interested in is that of an accordeon which belonged to Louis Riel instigator of the rebellion of '37. The accordeon was secured at Bostok. Riel had evidently fled a moment before as his clay pipe which was found beside the accordeon was quite warm. Another relic of interest to Canadians in general is a Boar flag captured at Johannesburg. Seven Britishers bit the dust in the capture of the flag which still bears the blood stains of that terrible struggle. It was donated to the museum by Col. Greenwood, C.M.A. There are shown plumes which some brave Britisher carried with him to Waterloo and also a badge of a member of the Scots Greys that noble regiment which was such a big factor in causing the route of Napoleon in the dying moments at Waterloo.

Another notable relic is an original commission signed by General Brock on May 1, 1912, which advanced Sergeant Durand to the rank of Captain. The Captain was identified with the Fifth Regiment of Lincoln Rifles which was litterly wiped out at Lundy's Lane. There is also a ribbon medal picked up after one of the battles in India in 1799. It was donated by Webber Turner.

Among the other military relics are two uniforms one worn by a British officer stationed at Quebec in 1812 and another by one of the 6th dragoons at Waterloo.

There is a collection of Indian beads and fancy work presented by Mrs. G. H. Clarke of this city which is one of the interesting items on exhibition. There is a chain or string made from wampom which required the work of four generations to complete. Among numerous donations by H. M. Carver is a cone from a pine which was grown in the Sehara Nevada Mountains.

The natural history department is one of the finest in Canada. There is one collection which includes every bird known to Canadian naturalists, and other articles of equal interest. It would take a book to enumerate all the collections but it is sufficient to say that Peterboro should justly feel proud of such an institution as the Victoria museum.

All the collections are catalogued and the institution is open every afternoon from 2 to 6 and Saturday evenings from 7.30 to 10.

PEBLO
CHILDREN'S EYESIGHT
It is astonishing the number of children who suffer from the effects of eyestrain, and many of them are unjustly blamed for being unambitious or mentally stupid. It has been shown by authentic investigation under municipal direction that from 20 to 30 per cent. of the children in public schools have defective vision and should wear glasses.
We make a specialty of examining children's sight by the most improved scientific methods, and if your child does not need glasses, we will tell you so frankly, and make no charge for the examination. But if your child should need glasses, we will guarantee that the glasses we fit are the proper correction, and will give perfect results. Our 10 years of successful optical business in this city is the guarantee we offer you.
We carry a special line of children's spectacle frames in heavy weight, in Gold Filled and Aluminum.

BAND'S TRIP DRAWING NEAR

Will Visit Other Cities Besides Attending Congress

One week from today the Peterboro Temple band will be in Montreal and in the following morning at sunrise, will sail for the old country to take part in the International Congress in London. The band will leave Peterboro Thursday midnight and many citizens will no doubt be at the station to say au revoir.

In the ten thousand souvenirs to be distributed in England, will be found a folder containing photographs including that of the local officers and the band, and also some information relative to that organization. This will be appreciated by the folks at home and will add much to the interest of the souvenir.

In the meantime, should there be any friends of the band who might wish to assist the financial end of the undertaking, their offer to help will not fall on deaf ears as the trip will cost a mighty pile of pennies.

Adjutant McElhiney is very enthusiastic, in speaking of the trip and he hopes to see some good results from this plan of advertising. The financial strain on him is very heavy and it is just possible that he will have to call upon some of his rich friends. But he will not take this trip unless it is absolutely necessary.

Besides taking an active part in the Congress, the band will also visit Plymouth, Southsea, Southampton, Reading, Tunbridge Wells, Leeds, Halifax, Bradford, Liverpool and several other cities as arrangements can be made.

The meetings in which the local representatives will take part are as follows:

Thursday June 11—Royal Albert Hall, reception of International Delegates.

Friday, June 12—Great Salvation Hall, Opening Ceremony and introduction of National Groups.

Saturday, June 13—The Embankment, Muster for Parade to Hyde Park: open-air demonstration.

Sunday, June 14—Great Salvation Hall, Salvation Campaign. The General and Mrs. Booth will speak at these meetings.

Monday, June 15—Great Salvation Hall.

Tuesday, June 16—Great Salvation Hall, Central Hall and Kingsway Hall.

Wednesday, June 17—Central Hall and Kingsway Hall.

Thursday, June 18—Great Salvation Hall and Theatre.

Friday, Great Salvation Hall, Memorial Meeting: also discussion on Men's Social Work and Western music.

Sunday, May 21—Great Salvation Hall, Salvation campaign.

Monday, June 22—Great Salvation, Women's demonstration.

Tuesday, June 22—Crystal Palace.

Thursday, June 25—Congress Hall, all night of prayer.

COMMENCE SERVICES AT BROWNTON HALL

The Sunday services will be inaugurated at the Brownton Orange Hall by the Salvation Army on Sunday, when the first service will be held at 2 o'clock. An open meeting will be held at 3 o'clock. The services at the Temple to-night will not be held because of the band concert in Victoria Park.

NEW BOOKS AT PUBLIC LIBRARY

The following new books have just ben placed on the shelves at the Public Library:

Monte Cristo and His Wife—Dumas.
History of France, 2 vols.—Duruy.
Tess of the D'urbervilles—Hardy.
Mayor of Casterbridge—Hardy.
Jude the Obscure—Hardy.
Far from the Madding Crowd—Hardy.
Return of the Native—Hardy.
Here are Ladies—Stephens.
John Halifax, Gentleman—Craik.
Story of Phaedrus—Hillis.
Terms of Surrender—Tracy.
Intriguers—Blindloss.
Salamander—Johnson.
John Inglesant—Shorthouse.
Political and Literary Essays—Earl of Cromer.
Land of Pardons (Brittany(—Le Braz.
America as I Saw it—Tweedie.
Life Story of a Dog—Mitton.
Life Story of a Tiger—Mockler Ferryman.
Life Story of a Squirrel—Bridges.
Life Story of a Cat—Hunt.
Life Story of a Fowl—Hurst.
My Life with the Eskimos—Stefannson.
Where and Why Public Ownership has Failed—Guyot.
Phillippines Past and Present, 2 vols.—Worcester.
Carmen Sylva—Loti.
Highways and Byways of the Zoological Gardens—Pocock.
Once to Every Man—Evans.
Life Story of a Black Bear—Robinson.
Life Story of a Fox—Tregarthen.
Quick Action—Chambers.

Many of the above books need no introduction to the reader. Thomas Hardy has stood for many years in the foremost ranks of English authors, and to-day he is admittedly the premier novelist of England. His books are, many of them, classics; "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," the one by which he is best known, is a very strong piece of writing. Although the subject is a sad one, the tale possesses a strong fascination, especially for the older class of readers.

"John Inglesant," by Shorthouse, is a book which in its day was looked upon as one of the finest romances ever published. The author took twenty years to write this book. Nobody who has read it has had aught but praise for the work. It appeals to old and young alike. "Political and Literary Essays," by the Earl of Cromer, is a collection of articles written at various times, and, as their general title implies, they deal with literary and political subjects. Many of them are reprints of articles written for the Spectator, and all are interesting and instructive. Among the subjects handled are International Trade, Lord Milner and Party, The Ottoman Empire, Imperial Rome, Portuguese Slavery, Patriotic and National Songs, Government of Subject Races, Translation and Paraphrase, and the Writing of History. The Phillippines Past and Present, is a remarkable work, and gives an illuminating description of the wonderful strides that have been made in the Islands under American rule. The illustrations add very largely to the value of the book, as they show so clearly the advance that has been made by the Bontoc Ingorots in the arts of civilization.

"America as I saw it," by Mrs. Alec. Tweedie, is a very readable volume, written in a racy manner, and is full of shrewd observation.

"Carmen Sylva," by Pierre Loti, is, of course, a splendidly vivid piece of writing, as is to be expected from the pen of one of France's foremost writers. It deals with the characters of the Queen of Roumania and of the late Sultan of Turkey, and also gives interesting glimpses of life in the near East.

The younger members of the community will find the Life Stories of animals good reading.

"The Land of Pardons" is a book that is very much handicapped by its title. It is really a tale of life in Brittany, and should be of great interest, especially to Catholics.

The Public Library has a really fine series of works on Arctic exploration, comprising the journeys of Shackleton, Scott, Peary and others, and it is now still further enriched by Stefannson's account of his Life profusely illustrated, and tells of the blond Eskimos whom Stefannson states he discovered, and who are supposed to be descendants of Norwegians who were wrecked in the Polar regions nearly a thousand years ago.

MAKING READY AT STONEY LAKE

Cottagers and Tourists Bound for the Lakes

The Kawartha Lakes once more present a busy appearance. Tourists are commencing to arrive and the local residents are leaving to open their cottages for the season. The warm spell this year will start operations earlier than usual at the lakes. Magistrate Dumble left today to open his cottage for the season. Mr. and Mrs. Bell, of St. Louis, pased through the city to-day en route for the lakes for the summer. Others who passed through, staying overnight, were Mr and Mrs. H. M. Sutherland, of Toronto, and Mr. and Mrs. Marshall, of Toronto.

Many local people will make the trip to the lakes to-morrow.

Several new cottages have been added to the already large resort number and the resorts are preparing for a busy season.

WEARY WILLIE NOT BAD MAN OF MONTREAL

Farmers Near Bethany Had Wrong Man

"Send help at once. We have cornered the desperate Montreal bandit. He is in the bush and armed."

Such was the message received over the phone late yesterday afternoon by Police Chief Thompson from farmers near Bethany. They were evidently of the opinion that the poor tramp they had chased into the wood was the highwayman, and murderer wanted in Montreal They surrounded the woods but refused to enter into its depths for fear of a bullet. The Chief informed them that it was out of his jurisdiction, and he could do nothing about the matter. He, however, advised them that the local department had received notice yesterday morning of the bandit's capture in Montreal.

Lindsay people also reported to the Lindsay police that they had seen the man.

PULMOTOR AGAIN DOES GOOD WORK

Italian in Trench Was Overcome by Gas

The Pulmotor was pressed into service last evening at six o'clock, when an Italian bearing the name of C. Graccos, an employee of the Peterboro Light and Power Co. was overcome by gas at the corner of Charlotte and Stewart Streets, where he was working on the gas main. Dr. McCulloch was called and immediately sent for the Pulmotor, which Chief Howard soon had on the scene. In less than five minutes the victim was restored to consciousness and was able to go to his home.

FIRE AT BRIDGE.

Aft five-forty last evening, the firemen were notified that the planking on the Hunter Street Bridge was on fire. Chief Howard and two men used a chemical and soon had the blaze extinguished.

When other people don't wish to do what pleases us, we call them disagreeable. When they try to make us do what they wish, we describe their actions as selfish.

SUFFRAGETTES FOUGHT POLICE

LONDON, May 22. — The police yesterday broke up a large column of militant suffragettes who were attempting to march on Buckingham Palace for the purpose of handing a petition to King George. When the women reached the top of Constitution Hill, leading to the palace, the police dispersed them and arrested Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst and several other leaders.

The skirmish between the police and the suffragettes outside the gates of Green Park was very lively while it lasted.

Mrs. Pankhurst surrounded by a bodyguard consisting of several hundred suffragettes suddenly appeared from the portal of a residence opposite the park, crossed the road to the gates, and attempted to march down the drive leading to the palace.

Mounted police then barred their progress, and the women who were armed with sticks, attempted to cut their way through the lines of policemen. They fought with vigor, using their sticks with such force that the police charged. Several women were injured in the struggle, and the raiders were finally driven back, but left Mrs. Pankhurst and a number of her lieutenants in the clutches of the police, while on the ground was a considerable collection of remnants of garments which had been torn off the women in the hand-to-hand fighting.

The police also suffered some casualties during the fierce onslaught made on them by the women.

King George himself was an interested spectator of the earlier movements for his protection, which he watched from a window of Buckinghaw Palace.

The ambulance corps was kept very busy in attending to a number of injured women and removing on stretchers several who had fainted. There were over forty arrests.

RUTTAN HAS SET FIRE TO BARNS NEAR GRAVENHURST

Murderer is Still at Large and Special Posses Are Engaged in Search for Him—Wife Says That He Visited Her Wednesday Night and Declared That He Would Never Be Taken Alive

GRAVENHURST, May 22. — Wm. Ruttan, who killed Mrs. Alfred Coutermanche, his daughter, and George George Coutermanche, her brother-in-law, at Housey Rapids Wednesday, is still at large, terrorizing the neighborhood in which the tragedy was enacted. In his flight for liberty Ruttan is well supplied with ammunition and a modern combination shotgun and rifle, with which he can use either shells or cartridges. He has in addition to the murders set fire to three barns of Messrs. Henry Cook and Thomas Fletcher, and the store of J. P. Brace, all of whom live in the vicinity of Ruttan's farm.

All the fires occurred between one and three o'clock yesterday morning. The first conflagration was started in the large barn belonging to Henry Cook, who lives about 500 yards west of the Ruttan farm. Three horses and a cow were destroyed, and the building was reduced to ashes, entailing a damage of $2,000. The insurance is only $400. Mr. Cook stated to the police that he had been watching the building until about one o'clock, and from subsequent happenings he felt satisfied that Ruttan had apparently been watching him. No sooner had he retired than his barn was enveloped in flames. He rushed out in his night attire, but owing to the lack of water facilities he was helpless to check the flames. About an hour later barns on the farms of P. J. Brace and Tom Fletcher were in flames, in addition to a storage warehouse belonging to Mr. Brace, in which he had a large amount of general supplies stored. The losses in these cases will be approximately $5,000.

People in the neighborhood are up in arms over the continued warfare waged by Ruttan. They have appealed to Inspector Greer of the Provincial Police, who reached the scene of the tragedy yesterday, to resort to every means possible for the apprehension of the crazed murderer.

Inspector Greer and Chief of Police Sloan of this town drove out to Housey Rapids yesterday and will make a thorough investigation. Upon reaching Ruttan's farm Mr. Greer found Constable Cook of Cooper's Falls in charge of the house, of which Mrs. Ruttan was the only occupant. The inspector stationed a special constable at the front door and Constable Cook at the back door while he searched the premises from cellar to garret, hoping to find Ruttan in hiding, but without success.

Inspector Greer did not return to Gravenhurst last night, deciding at the last moment to spend the night in the Ruttan house. During the day the inspector had six special constables sworn in, after which he distributed them at various parts of the Ruttan farm, issuing instructions to each man not to molest Ruttan if the outlaw attempted to enter the house during the night. The inspector stated that he would be in readiness on the inside to take charge of Ruttan if he ventured in, otherwise the special officers were to close in on him and effect his arrest.

Subsequently Inspector Greer had a long conference with Mrs. Ruttan, who was at first reluctant to answer questions. Finally she said that her husband had paid her a brief visit at midnight.

"What did he say?" asked the inspector.

"When he was leaving he kissed me good-bye, and said, 'You may never see me alive again.'

"He told me," continued Mrs. Ruttan, "that should I hear a single shot from a gun before many hours passed I would know that he would not be taken by the police alive."

Poverty makes it easy to live the simple life.

Hot milk added to potatoes when mashing them will keep them from being soggy.

Remember that pressing is not ironing. The iron should be hot enough to remove the creases and should be passed very slowly over the goods, or held where it needs filling in.

COTTAGES ARE SAVED

Bush Fire Fighters Are Successful

HUNTSVILLE, May 22.—A high wind has prevailed all day, and this has increased the anxiety in the fire zones. Reports, however, indicate that much private property has been saved by hard fighting. The Springsyde cottages have been saved, and all efforts yesterday was directed toward saving five new cottages in the vicinity owned by Mr. W. G. Blackburn. Men have been rushed up from Huntsville. Gangs have also gone out to Sand Lake, where a very bad fire is raging. Bonavista, on Lake of Bays, a colony of cottages owned by Rev. Mr. Brown, was in danger, but the whole neighborhood turned out, and it is said to-day that the buildings have been saved. This is the only danger point reported from Lake of Bays.

The Muskoka Wood Co. has lost a large number of logs at dumps on the east river, and the Ontario Bark Co. has sent a gang of men to protect their limits in Parry Township. There is still no sign of rain, and deep anxiety prevails everywhere in this section. The loss already is heavy.

Steamers Delayed by Smoke.

MONTREAL, May 22. — Dense smoke from forest fires in the Laurentian mountains and along the banks of the St. Lawrence between this port and Quebec held up several steamers yesterday. The Lake Michigan and Corinthian, bound from Great Britain, were forced to anchor near Batiscan.

OUTRAGES COMMITTED IN LONDON GALLERIES

Suffragettes Armed With Loaded Cane and Meat Cleaver Slash Canvas in Royal Academy.

BELLEVILLE REGIMENT VISITED HERE 18 YEARS AGO.

The 15th regiment of Belleville visited Peterboro to spend the 24th of May in 1896. The visitors camped at the exhibition park and the band gave a sacred band concert in Central Park. The officers were banquetted by the local officers at the Huffman House.

Bomb Placed by Militants in Edinburgh Church

LONDON, May 23.—The "wild women" of the Women's Social and Political Union, the militant suffragette organization, yesterday continued their terrorizing tactics by making two separate attacks on the National art treasures. Early yesterday morning a woman armed with a loaded cane slashed five masterpieces in the National Gallery, which, it is announced, has been closed to the public until further notice.

Both women were arrested.

The pictures damaged at the National Gallery were a "Madonna and Child With Infant Saints," a "Portrait of Girolamo Malatini," "Saints John and Christopher and the Doge," "The Death of Saint Peter," and "Christ's Agony in the Garden." Apparently they were not irreparably injured. The painting gashed at the Royal Academy was entitled "Primavera," by George Clausen, a Royal Academician. The Academy was filled with a fashionable throng when a woman drew a butcher's cleaver which she had concealed in her clothing, and dashed at the picture, in which she hacked several gashes.

Attendants at once seized her, and it was only the presence of the police which prevented her from being roughly handled by the irate spectators. Both the women refused to give their names after their arrest.

The National Gallery vandal left a trail of blood behind her from cuts she had sustained by the falling broken glass from the pictures. The National Gallery was immedlatey closed and all the students turned out.

Put Bomb In Church.

EDINBURGH, Scotland, May 23.—Militant suffragettes in the course of Thursday night placed an explosive machine in the Rosehall United Free Church in an attempt to blow it up. The bomb exploded, but did only slight damage.

Insisted on Seeing Prelate.

LONDON, May 23. — Miss Annie Kenney, one of the chief organizers of the Women's Social and Political Union yesterday afternoon made herself the self-invited guest of the Archbishop of Canterbury at Lambeth Palace. Together with a party of militant suffragette friends she proceeded in a motor car to the palace and succeeded in obtaining entrance afterward refusing to budge until she had seen the archbishop. Miss Kenney said she had made all preparations for spending the night at the palace.

CONVENTION EAST DURHAM CONSERVATIVES

Not Likely That Liberals will Put Candidate in Field

Port Hope, May 23.—The Liberal-Conservative Association of East Durham will meet in Millbrook on May 28 to nominate a candidate for a seat in the Ontario Legislature. East Durham is such a staunch supporter of the Conservative Government that its member has for years been elected by acclamation, and thus it is a foregone conclusion that the man who carries the convention will be the next representative. J. J. Preston, M.L.A., has held the honor for twelve years, and on the occasion of his last nomination expressed an intention of retiring. In event of his doing so the following in the northern portions of the riding will aspire to succeed him: John Kennedy, Pontypool; T. B. Collins and Norman McGill, Millbrook, and Chas. McNeil, ex-warden, Cavan. In Port Hope the following would gladly accept the nomination: Robt. Grandy, Chas. Perry, R. A. Mulholland, and T. B. Chalk, the last two being ex-mayors. It is not probable that the Liberals will put a man in the field, although the names of Harold Fulford and F. W. Galbraith are occasionally mentioned on account of their extreme temperance views.

Against liquor Ads.

Kingston, Ont., May 23.—The Methodist district conference, held here, passed a resolution that no minister of the district should buy a magazine that contained advertisements of intoxicating liquors.

FELL ON PAVEMENT AND FRACTURED ELBOW

Little Peter Scully, the six-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. D. Scully, Wolfe Street, met with a very painful accident yesterday, while at play. He was running along the pavement and in some manner tripped, falling on the hard surface with considerable force. The elbow of his left arm came in contact with the pavement and was fractured. It will be some time before the lad has the use of the arm.

ADVANCE GUARD.

Quartermaster Doyle of the 15th Regiment of Belleville arrived in the city this morning with an advance guard of fifteen men to prepare the campus for the coming of the remainder of the Regiment, who arrive to-night.

The tents will be pitched along the north side of the park for the accommodation of some 350 men who are coming.

POLICE COMMISSIONERS SAT ALL BY THEMSELVES

Dealt With Resignation and Applications For Positions on Force.

At a meeting of the Police Commissioners last evening, it was decided to accept the resignation of Constable Burnham, who resigned on account of his dissatisfaction at the action of one of his superior officers. Ross Green, a local man, was appointed to fill the vacancy. He will commence his duties immediately. H. D. Lawrence, who was appointed some time ago to the force will commence duties to-day. S. Q. Servantie was recommended by the Chief as a substitute during Constable Sills' illness.

The accounts presented were ordered to be paid.

The Police Chief seemed quite pleased this morning because the meeting was held without the reporters being present. He was asked yesterday afternoon when the next meeting of the Commissioners would be held and he replied some time next week. Probably the meeting was held last night so that the Chief might not be prevented from attending the baseball games next week.

PROVINCIAL ELECTIONS AT END OF JUNE OR FIRST PART OF JULY

Speaking with Mr. E. A. Peck, M.L.A., this morning he informed a Review man that he considered the Provincial elections would take place before the extreme hot weather came — possibly the last of June or very early in July. The main plank in the Conservatives' platform would be the Good Roads policy. Of course, there would also be the record of the party as exemplified in the legislation passed—a very creditable record. As to the candidate, Mr. Peck stated that he had not decided to withdraw, as has been rumored, but the matter of a candidate will remain with the local convention, which will shortly convene. Conservatives of West Peterborough are assured that organization work will proceed rapidly and that they have every reason to expect a win at the polls.

RECEPTION TO DUKE

The reception committee met last night and furthered arrangements for the Duke's reception. It was decided that ten minutes of the programme should be allowed the military forces for receiving the Duke at the Armouries. Arrangements were completed for the location of the school children who will be situated in front of the grandstand in Central Park. The meeting in general was merely for the purpose of instructing the J. J. Turner and Sons as to the decorations.

Altruism.

"Jim," said an honest coal dealer to one of his drivers. "Jim, make that ton of coal 200 pounds short. It is for a poor, delicate widow, and she will have to carry all of it up two flights of stairs. I don't want her to overtax her strength."—Philadelphia Kronikle Herald.

FRATERNALLY YOURS

Fraternal Day will be observed here on Sunday, June 28th. The Fraternal deputation, consisting of Fire Chief Howard, Ald. Duncan, Dawson Kennedy, Col. Miler and George Clark, waited on the Ministerial Association and laid the matter before the heads of the clergy of the city for their support, and they are pleased to announce the fact of the hearty approval by the Ministerial Association. The clergy assured them of support and co-operation in the matter. The Health Association were also represented at the meeting. After a short discussion it was suggested that the clergy recommend that one half of the collection received on Fraternal Sunday be used towards assisting the interests of the tuberculosis patients of the city.

Mr. Ernie Reid has been appointed Grand Marshal, and Fire Chief Howard Deputy Marshal.

The various lodges will assemble at their respective halls and march to the Market Square, where they will be assigned to the different churches. Fully 2,500 are expected to turn out.

Another arrangement made by ministers is that they will exchange pulpits.

The annual church parade of Lansdowne Lodge, S.O.E., will be held on Sunday, May 24th. The members will meet at the S. O. E. Hall at 6 p.m., and will proceed to Knox Church.

White gloves and badges will be worn.

The members of the Sherwood Forest Camp of the W. O. W. will attend the unveiling of the monument in memory of Robert Toole at Omemee on Sunday, May 31st. Woodmen from Lindsay and other centres will also be present.

A Short History of Regiment Which Will Visit This City

LIEUT.-Col. Archibald Ponton who organized the XV Regiment in the autumn of 1862 (gazetted in 1863) had previously served as an Officer of a West Indian Regiment, and had been in command of the Provisional Battalion at Cornwall. The Regiment first drilled without uniforms, and frequently mustered 400 strong. Col. Ponton having been appointed to a Court Office which required his whole attention, remained in command only two years, and was succeded by Lt.-Col. Alfred A. Campbell in 1864. Under him, the Regiment sent one Company to the Niagara Frontier in 1865, and the whole Battalion went, on a few hours' notice, to Prescott during the Fenian Raid of June, 1866. In December, 1876, the War Office acknowledged gratefully the offer of the Regiment for service in the East of Europe during the troublous times of that year, and in March, 1878, Lord Beaconsfield transmitted a personal dispatch from Whitehall thanking the Regiment for their spirit and example shown in again volunteering for Imperial Service. Lt.-Col. Campbell was succeeded by Lt.-Col. Samuel Shaw Lazier in 1877. During his command the Regiment furnished the gallant A. Company of the Midland Battalion who led the charge at Batoche in 1885, when several officers and men were wounded. Under Colonel Lazier, the first Belleville Armouries were built, largely at the personal cost of the Officers and citizens of Belleville.

MAJOR W. J. BROWN

Lt.-Col. Lawrence Henry Henderson who followed Col. Lazier lived only a few months and died in harness, being succeeder by Lt.-Col. William Nisbet Ponton, who had formerly served in the Queen's Own Rifles and in every rank from Private up in the Fifteenth. Under his command, the Duke of Argyll, K.T., was gazetted Honorary Colonel, and the Regiment was presented with a bronze statute of Queen Victoria by H.R.H. the Princess Louise, Duchess of Argyll, her own handwork. The Veterans' Association was organized (numbering over 200 memmebs). The Regiment spent two days in Rochester being the first Regiment in British scarlet who had ever carried arms in the United States since the Revolutionary War. No less than eighteen members of the Regiment served in the South African War 1989-1901; twelve were present at Paardeburg at the surrender of Cronje, one being wounded, and several marched into Pretoria. New colours were presented to the Regiment by the Soldiers' Wives League, and the old Colours were deposited in St. Thomas' Church. In August, 1901, Lt.-Col. John Earl Halliwell, who had also served in the Q.O.R., and as a member of "A" Company of the Midlanders, had been wounded at Batoche, succeeded to the command just be-

CREST— Boar's Head

MAJOR BARRAGAR

BRITISH STEAMER WAS ATTACKED BY PIRATES

Thrilling Tale of Chinese Piracy on the West River

Vancouver, B.C., May 23. — On April 27, 1913, the British steamer Taion was pirated on the West River under circumstances which aroused world-wide interest. On April 27, 1914, the same vessel was pirated on the same spot, and this time destroyed by fire, after the British officers had put up a hard fight against the horde of Chinese pirates.

News of the stirring battle was brought here by the C. P. R. liner Empress of Japan, which is in port from the Orient.

The Taion sailed from Hong Kong at 7 p.m., April 27, bound for Kong Moon, with a general cargo, a crew of forty (Chinese) and 363 passengers. The vessel was commanded by Capt. Wetherell, with Chief Officer Evans and Chief Engineer McCartney, who was on the Taion when the vessel was pirated last year.

At 10 o'clock that night, when the steamer was off Kai An, a number of pirates, who had shipped as passengers, made their appearance and threatened the other passengers with Mausers.

Desperate Fight on Bridge.

Captain Wetherell was asleep, but the commotion aroused him and he jumped for the bridge with a shotgun. The first pirate to climb on the bridge was shot in the stomach by the skipper, who was then joined by the mate and engineer. The three Britishers were augmented by two Portuguese guards, and the five men finally drove the pirates from the bridge, killing fourteen of the pirates and wounding a number.

During the fight on the bridge the engineer was downed by a pirate who attempted to strangle him, but Captain Wetherell came up and blew out the brains of the Chinese. He shot so close that some of the bird shot from his gun lodged in McCartney's hip.

The pirates then tried the lower deck, stopped the engines, cut off the electric lights, and put the steering gear out of commission. Then they broke open some tins of kerosene and set fire to the Taion. The fire spread rapidly and the vessel was soon aflame from stem to stern.

The Chinese passengers and crew jumped into the river, while the white men sent up rockets, which were sighted by steamers, which came as near as possible and lowered boats and saved most of the passengers.

Four Europeans Saved.

The three white men stayed with the ship until it was too hot, and then they hung from the portholes, shouting advice to the passengers. Mr. Evans, the mate, finally grabbed an oar and jumped into the water and was never seen again. Chief Engineer McCartney was picked up by one of the boats, and Captain Wetherell was rescued by another. The two Portuguese guards were also saved.

While the Empress of Japan was at Hong Kong excitement was at fever heat at this second pirating of the Taion, and the British river flotilla is on the lookout for the pirates who will get short shrift from these boats.

INVESTIGATION A FALSE ALARM

Nothing in it Says the Police Chief

Police Chief Thompson in an interview with the Review stated that this so-called police investigation as far as he knew was all a false alarm. It was merely a case of a trouble-maker causing dissatisfaction. The claim of such a person would not be listened to by the Commissioners. There would be nothing for him to obtain by such a course. The resigning police officer was peeved owing to being disciplined by Acting Sergeant Reid.

"There is nothing to it," said the Chief.

"This man who resigned should have left it to a senior member of the force, to complain about the Sergeant's discipline or them," he concluded.

600 SWIMMING LESSONS.

During the week over six hundred swimming lessons have been given at the Y.M.C.A.. This is a record. This morning Boys' Secretary Galley spoke of the great need for the Council to go ahead with the public bathing places. It was impossible to accommodate all the youngsters at the Y. and a larger place must be decided upon.

JURY FINDS BECKER GUILTY OF CONSPIRACY TO KILL ROSENTHAL

Foreman Weeps as He Returns an Unanimous Verdict for Conviction After Second Trial.

Only Pardon Can Save Him From the Electric Chair

NEW YORK, May 23. — Twelve men decided yesterday for the second time that Charles Becker was the arch-conspirator responsible for the Rosenthal murder, which nearly two years ago awoke New York to a realization of corruption in the police department and opened a new era of police reform.

Becker, once a police lieutenant, was found guilty of murder in the first degree. Only a pardon or interference again by the Court of Appeals can save him from following to the electric chair the four gunmen who shot Herman Rosenthal, the gambler, early on the morning of July 16, 1912. The jury yesterday decided that the gunmen were Becker's agents.

One ballot decided Becker's fate. It was taken almost immediately after the jurors returned from luncheon at an uptown hotel, where they went as soon as Supreme Court Justice Samuel Seabury finished his charge. It was unanimous for conviction. Tears streamed down the foreman's face as he announced the decision, and tears stood in the eyes of several other jurymen, but sympathy did not warp their judgment.

Becker's counsel announced that he would appeal, and gained a week's stay for the preparation of his future campaign. The defendant was granted a short meeting with his wife and his brothers and then taken back to his cell in the Tombs.

The whole proceedings from the time Becker was pronounced guilty until a recess was declared, occupied scarcely four minutes.

Mrs. Becker, learning the verdict, threw her arms around his neck and buried her face on his shoulder.

"Oh," she cried, "Charlie, I'm so sorry, so sorry. I didn't expect it."

She could say no more.

Becker stood, looking down at her as she wept.

LIEUT. CHARLES BECKER.

MERCHANTS PICNIC THURSDAY JULY 16th

Will be Held at the T.A.S. Park

Final arrangements have been completed for the holding of another big picnic under the auspices of the local branch of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada. It will be held at the same place as last year, at the T.A.S. Park, on Thursday, July 16th.

Arrangements are already being made for the chartering of boats to carry the expected crowds to and from the Park and better transportation will be afforded this year, so as to avoid the crowded conditions that prevailed last year.

A meeting will be called shortly to appoint a large committee to take charge of the picnic, which is expected to be the largest ever held in Peterboro.

A general meeting of all the different sections of trade, including all the merchants, is expected to be held shortly.

"LEST WE FORGET."

The above will be the subject of the sermon at the Empire Day service of Murray St. Baptist Church on Sunday evening. The music will be of a patriotic nature including Kipling's Recessional. It is expected that the evening service will include not only the members of the Church and congregation but visitors to our city who will be here in connection with the military assembly.

OPEN AIR SERVICE.

The first of the open air gospel praise meetings will be held in Central Park Sunday night.

Convenient.

ADOLPH GOIPP MUST MOVE ON

May Try Missionary Effort in Scagog District

A middle aged man who claimed to bear the handsome name of Adolph Goipp, and who had the map of the German Empire imprinted across his face, attempted to Christainize the Township of Dummer. He was afforded an opportunity to be a martyr for his cause. On May 15th he approached residents and asked for a morsel of eats as the bird had forgotten to call with fod. They offered him a job and bed, but he hadn't time to work, his time was to be spent entirely on the saving of souls. He had been tramping around quite a bit, so Constable Clements thought he would save the poor fellow's soles and arrested him.

Magistrate Edmison, it will be remembered, remanded him, and he appeared again yesterday. After pouring forth a great deal of sanctimonious terms about his everlasting faith and caressing the Bible as a mother would caress a babe, he promised to confine his missionary work to districts other than Peterboro County, so he was let go. Some one suggested to him that there was great need for his work among the police force of the county seat of Victoria County. When last observed he was hiking toward Jackson Park via the ties.

BILL PASSES FIRST READING.

THE GOVERNMENT'S PROPOSITION on the C.N.R. was carried on the first vote by the substantial margin of 47. The criticism of the opposition has been on the whole, weak. Two or three things have been brought out in the debate that appear remarkable. In the first place has been the statement that Mackenzie and Mann have not profited out of the C.N.R. beyond receiving large consignments of the common stock and one unanswered question is, how did MacKenzie and Mann acquire their fortunes?

Another point is that the promoters have apparently tried to build a road practically on the proceeds of bond issues. This method has advantages, since it allows a small capitalization although the expense of construction would be very large. As the bonds fell due they would be paid off from the earnings of the road and in the course of time a very large productive enterprise would be paying its profits on a relatively small capital and thus permit big dividends.

THE C.P.R. followed this plan as far as possible, but it was quite true that the leading promoters of the C.P.R., Donald Smith, afterwards Lord Strathcona, Lord Mt. Stephen and others invested their own private fortunes in the C. P. R. to the verge of bankruptcy. They reached almost exactly the same position that the C.N.R. has reached, and in 1884 were forced to call on the Government of the day for the amount of $30,000,000. After considerable negotiations this loan was effected, but it was not obtained until both the London and New York money markets were closed to the C.P.R. The result has been that the C.P.R. is one of the most profitable and successful railways in the world. Its earning powers are very great and its dividends have always been substantial, while, at the same time, vast sums of profits have been expended in building branch lines, improving old lines, double tracking and in other forms of betterment.

It is possible that MacKenzie and Mann have not been paying enough money into the capital of the Canadian Northern. These two points have been considered by the Government no doubt and the sentiment of the House has been mostly in favor of the proposition of the Government. In the first division, party lines were broken, two Conservatives voting against the Government and one Liberal voting with the Government, while some other Liberals who were paired, announced that they would have supported the Government had they voted. In view of the character of the division and of the criticism of the measure, it is quite plain that the Government have tried to offer a non-partisan and as fair a solution of the C.N.R. problem as the facts of the case allowed.

MONEY NOT THE GOAL.

CALVERT TOWNLEY has an article in the May Aera which throws light on the purposes of one of the greatest and wealthiest of modern inventors George Westinghouse. Personal gain seemed never to weigh with George Westinghouse. President of many corporations, all of which he controlled by stock ownership, he for many years drew no salary from any of them. Could there be more eloquent testimony of the fact that personal gain counted but little in the list of his ambitions? He wanted money because its gain spelled success and its possession meant power to do, but when interested in the doing he seemed never to count the cost to himself. Over his dinner table he once said to me "I shall spend $100,000 this year developing my gas producer.' The world knows of his many successful undertakings; only a few know the vast sum which he spent without [illegible] and over the losses of which he wasted no laments and which went for investigations and experiments not directly successful in themselves but nearly always pointing the way for progress in some other direction

STUDIED HARD—NOW INSANE.

A DAY OR TWO AGO, a cultured young woman of attractive appearance travelling with her father to Europe, went violently insane in Montreal. The European trip had to be abandoned and a detective sent with the girl and her father to see them safely back to the United States. The young lady had recently graduated with highest honors from a Chicago university. She had been a diligent student and it is asserted her mental derangement was due to over study.

No university course is worth the price of ill-health and mental breakdown. If universities make such demands on their students that the aftermath is insanity, the need for sweeping reform is apparent. In fact, it is a case of negligence, almost criminal negligence if such conditions are allowed to exist, which ruin the health and nervous system of students, merely to maintain what are called high standards.

On the other hand, one should not criticise the universities without a reservation. All the facts of this case are not known, and, frequently such cases arise not from the fault of the university, but from the action of the student in attempting too much. One of the greatest difficulties of any ambitious student is to gauge correctly his capacity for work. If that is over estimated break down will result, unless the amount of study is reduced: However, such cases deserve the serious attention of all interested in the welfare and progress of university education.

A CAUTION REGARDING MUSHROOMS.

WITH THE ARRIVAL of these beautiful days of sunshine and gentle breezes comes the lure of the woods and fields. The charm of the wild flower sending forth its delicate perfume and adding its beauty to unfrequented spots draws many searchers to the green shade of forest glades. Perchance, in the aimless search through trees, by rippling brooks or over grassy banks the desire to possess mushrooms will stir the wanderer to a more attentive search. For that reason we desire to sound a note of warning or of caution for those hunting spring mushrooms.

It has been said that those growth of fungi found in damp, dark, cool spots, such as swamps, and in deep forests and on decaying stumps, are generally not mushrooms at all, but poisonous toadstools. Edible mushrooms, in nature, grow in open, sunny meadows. For those who will find mushrooms this spring, the safest guide to what is the true mushroom is to be found in the 'gills.' In the mushroom, the gills are not attached to the stem, but grow almost to the stem but leave a short space next to the stem, being attached to the lid of the mushroom. In toadstools, these gills grow out of the stem. The next surest way to tell the mushroom is to break it. The flesh is pure white and remains so. The toadstool flesh turns dark.

Concerning such directions for hunting mushrooms Mr. J. Dearness of London, Ont., an authority on the subject, says in a letter to the Toronto Star:

> "These statements are too dangerously erroneous to allow their passing without correction. One of the most virulently poisonous mushrooms we have in Ontario is a pure white plant with flesh that remains white and gills that are not attached to the stem; it grows "in open sunny meadows." I remember seeing a number of them growing in the grass in High Park, west of Toronto, and a day or two afterwards reading of a fatal poisoning attributed to eating toadstools mistaken for mushrooms collected in High Park."
> The truth is that there is no structural mechanical, or chemical test known by which the inexperienced person can distinguish the poisonous mushrooms from the edible ones. Fortunately there are only a few kinds that are really poisonous when cooked and eaten before they begin to decompose, while there are numerous kinds that are edible or at worst disagreeable. One might go into the woods, collect everything he can find in the shape of a fleshy fungus cook the lot, and eat it without feeling the worse for his bowl of toadstools, but if the lot included a specimen of amanita verna or phalloides the result would be sure death."

In view of the above statement it is better to be safe than sorry by rejecting all those except ones that are known absolutely to be not injurious. There are one or two well known varieties and if people who are not thoroughly familiar with fungus growths confine themselves to hunting them and using no others, no bad results will follow.

COTTON GROWING IN EGYPT.

THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT is spending in Egypt about £2,000,000 in a scheme of irrigation, which should be productive of great results in cotton production. Among cotton producing countries, Egypt ranks third in quantity and first in quality. In 1912 Egyptian cotton production was upwards of 7 per cent. of the world's supply, exceeded only by the United States and India. Egyptian cotton is strong and of uniform length. It is best adapted to mercerizing and other processes of treatment that give a high finish to cloth causing it to resemble silk. There is a growing demand both in England and in the United States for Egyptian cotton.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

MR. BURNHAM, M.P., wishes it understood that all rumors to the effect that he is backing anybody for the provincial nomination are without foundation. He considers it would be highly improper for him to take any interest until after the convention has made a selection, and to avoid any excuse for rumors he will not return to Peterborough for June 1st, although he had expected to do so for the visit of the Governor General.

JUST THE SAME, a bucket of radium would be appreciated about as much as an oil well near Calgary.

The Big Noise in American Senate.

Montreal Mail.

Having exhausted the best things in the Bible, Lincoln's speeches, Washington's addresses, the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution, United States Senators are about ready to vote on the canal tolls proposition.

The Woman's Movement.

Westminster Gazette.

Lord Courtney's speech on the Woman Suffrage Bill in the House of Lords yesterday seems to us the wisest and sanest contribution to the subject that we have had for many a long day. The unprivileged position of women in public affairs is not, as Lord Lytton said, a disability imposed by law, but, as Lord Courtney said an institution of primeval antiquity, compared with which the woman's movement is a thing of yesterday. If we can start from that premiss, we get the present position in its right perspective. We see the woman's movement not as a despised agitation struggling vainly with men's prejudices, but as a prosperous cause which in the comparatively short time in which it has been at work, has profoundly changed opinion and is moving to a conclusion which its opponents have little hope of resisting in the long run.

PAINTING

By Walt Mason

Now the husband paints the fence, while the housewife paints her face, and, with energy intense, we are painting, every place. We enjoy this useful toil, which will make the town more fair, and we smell of linseed oil, and there's ochre in our hair. Paint would beautify the spheres, and we heave no useless sighs, if there's putty in our ears and some varnish in our eyes. Wheresoever brush is laid, an improvement then is seen, and no odds about the shade—lilac, lavender or green. You will say, "I am surprised, that you preach paint evermore; you have sure been subsidized by some paint and varnish store." But I haven't had a yen from the dealers in red lead, since I started urging men to embellish house and shed. Some men, tell you how to vote, others tell you how to pray, but I'm wearing out my throat shrieking, "Paint Up!" all the day. It's because I hope to make this old world a brighter place that I urge you till I break both suspenders and a trace. Blow yourself for linseed oil, blow yourself for lead and zinc, or your residence will spoil; paint it blue, with stripes of pink!

Birthdays of Note

SATURDAY, MAY TWENTY-THIRD

This is the fifty-sixth birthday of Edward Ernest Prince, Canadian Commissioner of Fisheries and an international authority in his special line. He was born in Leeds, England, and until 1893 was engaged in academic work in the old country, holding professional positions in the Universities of Edinburgh, St. Andrew's and Glasgow successively. He also carried on important investigations under the auspices of the Scottish Fishery Board, work which brought him to the attention of the Canadian Government. Since coming to this country he has done excellent service for the Dominion Fisheries, acting as chairman for numerous commissions of inquiry and introducing valuable reforms, such as the experimental curing of herring by a Scottish staff of girls and curers, the establishment of dogfish and fish offal works and the building of bait freezers.

Also born to-day:—

Edward Brown, former leader of the Liberal party in Manitoba, born at Gresham, Ont., 1865.

SUNDAY, MAY TWENTY-FOURTH

Sir William Mortimer Clark, former Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, completes his seventy-eighth year to-day. He was born in Aberdeen, Scotland, and after being called to the Scottish Bar, came to Canada and began the practise of law in Toronto, where he has ever since resided. His appointment as Lieutenant-Governor was made in 1903. A very dignified and picturesque old gentleman, he has long been a familiar figure on the streets of Toronto. When he lived at Government House, he used frequently to walk on King street. One day the following remarks were overheard on a street car, which pretty well illustrate his character. "There goes the Governor," exclaimed a young woman to her companion. "He's a perfect gentleman. I know a girl who was in his law office for a long time. She says he was kind to her as a father. He was a great traveller and wherever he went he always brought her and the others presents. Oh, he's a perfect gentleman, all right."

Also born to-day:—

C. C. Chipman, former chief commissioner of the Hudson's Bay Co., born at Amherst, N.S., 1856.

Eugene Haanel, director of mines, Ottawa, born at Breslau, Silesia, 1841.

A. P. Low, Deputy Minister of Mines, Ottawa, born at Montreal, 1861.

Fat Man.

"Why don't you like her?"

"Because she is a strong minded woman."

"But I guess she has to be."

"Why?"

"She has her husband on her mind all the time."

Chance to Escape.

"I heard a good story today."

"What was it?"

"I forget."

"Well, I must be going."

"Why?"

"You might remember it."

JEB SAYS

BELIEF IN YOURSELF

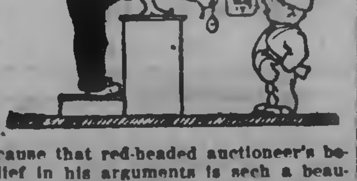
FER all-round, fire-as-fast-as-ye-pull-the-trigger, automatic action there ain't nuthin' can beat the red-headed auctioneer, who sells dollar watches fer five and weeps 'cause he is makin' sech a sacrifice.

That feller's got our political stumpers beat to a frazzle; even a circus speeler seems dim when this star swims outin the cloudy firmiment to twinkle his leetle say so to the doubtin' Thomases gathered before him.

And he sells watches, dollar watches fer five, and fer every tear he sheds sumbody sheds money. His watches air no good, we know that when we're buyin' 'em. But we do buy 'em because that red-headed auctioneer's belief in his arguments is sech a beautiful and wonderful thing that we simply can't help it.



And, if ye notice, the men who air doin' things to-day air the men who believe they kin do 'em, men who have confidence in their ability to put over anythin' they tackle.

Your business may have a reputation fer square dealin' that took two er more centuries in the makin', but that ain't goin' to make it expand any. You've got a mighty good foundation but what you've gotter watch is your structural steel work, in other words the backbone of your business. That backbone is you and you air jest as strong or jest as weak as your belief in yourself.

Politeness.

Mr. Schmaltz, noted for his table noises, hurried into a Broadway hotel at the lunch hour and took a seat.

"Come over here with us," called one of several acquaintances at a nearby table.

"Oh," said Schmaltz, "all I want is some soup."

"You can have soup at this table just as well as at that one," said the other. "And we'll give you a respectful hearing."—New York Press.

The DAUGHTER of DAVID KERR

"Judge for yourself," answered the Belmont attorney. "I had Mr. Wright to dinner tonight so that you could meet him without arousing his suspicions. I wanted to help you that much."

What Kendall really thought he evidenced by his indirect reply.

"I don't blame Dave Kerr for being angry because Wright slipped in and bought the paper."

For a minute or more the two men smoked in silence. Kendall was wondering what he could say to his Chicago principals which would make them understand that Belmont was not now the Belmont of the old days, that although to all appearances it was the same the practiced eye could detect the vague unrest which pervaded it.

Judge Gilbert had been too long in the harness to wince at a corporation request for the vacation of a principal thoroughfare and a public park, but he was tired of the long fight for grasping masters whose one demand was always for more, more, more. And yet he had no sympathy with such men as Joe Wright. He had made up his mind, however, that he would not aid the company in this new franchise grab. He was partly led to this conclusion, all unconsciously, because he knew David Kerr was not betraying any interest in it.

"The river eats up our tracks on the west," protested Kendall. "The stockyards'll never be safe while we depend on the one line." Then he added with emphasis, "We must come down Maple avenue on the east and use Benton Park for switching yards."

"It can't be done."

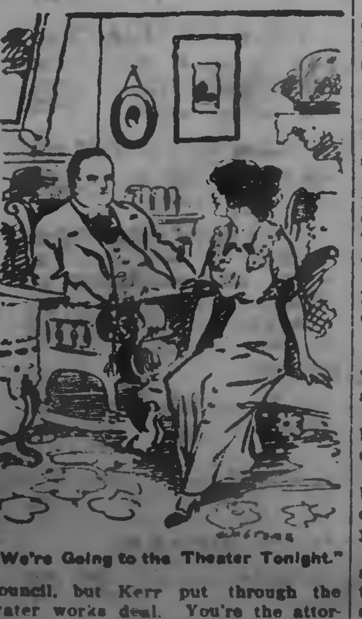
"It can be done. Dave Kerr can do anything he pleases. He's the absolute boss of Belmont."

This was said with such a tone of finality that Judge Gilbert saw no need of replying. He knew that Kerr was the absolute boss of Belmont.

There flashed through the minds of both men the thought that the Belmont News might have something to say. It couldn't prevent a franchise being passed, of course, but publicity at times was unpleasant. This was something Kerr did not court, Gilbert knew. He was the easy boss, letting every one have a share of the spoils, and thus all were satisfied. Few indeed had been the times when the town had attempted to revolt.

"You'd have the whole town up in arms," remonstrated Gilbert.

"They've been up in arms before. Once they brought ropes to hang the council, but Kerr put through the water works deal. You're the attorney for the street railway company; you know what he did there."



"We're Going to the Theater Tonight."

"Yes, yes I know," Gilbert admitted hastily. Then with a sigh of relief, "That's all past."

He ran his hand through his hair, grey long before the frost of age could come to silver it, and was thinking that such episodes were things of the past. He was weary of it all. Kendall's next remark, delivered with the chill incisiveness of a lawyer cross-examining a belligerent witness, brought him once more to the defense of the man who had made his success possible.

"Is Dave Kerr keeping out of the deal only through fear of young Wright and the Belmont News?"

"He isn't afraid of anything. Mr. Kerr merely says that it doesn't interest him at the present time. As for me, I'm out of it."

"You're still Kerr's right-hand adviser."

"Pardon me. his legal adviser."

Kendall did not pause to acknowledge the distinction, but went on, this time straight to the heart of the matter.

"I made what the stock-yards people consider a good offer. If that isn't enough, what's his price?"

This point-blank question irritated Gilbert. He much preferred to call a spade an agricultural implement even when talking with those who stood close to him in his manipulations for the various corporations he represented. He therefore ignored the question, preferring to tell why the matter could not be taken up at present.

"The election's coming on in a couple of months, and your franchise would be made an issue. We can't afford it with the News in a position to boost the opposition party."

"I've got to get it through as soon as possible. There's nothing raw in this franchise, is there?"

"That's the Chicago point of view," answered Kendall. "Stripped of legal verbiage, what you want is to lay railroad tracks, on which will run cattle trains, down a pretty residence street and use a park for terminals, all without giving property owners or the city adequate compensation for ruining or confiscating their property. I call that pretty raw."

"Well, it's our best and certainly our cheapest way if Kerr will put through a franchise for us," Kendall maintained stubbornly. "I'll come back next week, and take the matter up again. In the meantime you can talk it over thoroughly with Kerr. He may have something to say by that time."

"It hardly seems likely. He seldom changes his mind."

"He may this time. I've got to get away now and go by the hotel before I go to the train. Let's go back to the drawing-room, where I can have a few more words with Wright. We may be able to win him over."

"That's what I'm going to try to do," replied Judge Gilbert, as they rose to rejoin Mrs. Gilbert and her guests.

The attorneys entered the drawing-room to find a discussion regarding newspapers just drawing to a close with victory still uncertain on which standard to perch.

"You just missed hearing Dr. Hayes pay his respects to newspapers, Judge Gilbert," said Joe Wright with a smile. The layman's opinions always interest and usually amuse a journalist.

"What's the matter? Have you told him you won't publish the box scores of the ball games this year?"

"I'll do that for him, and gladly."

"Then there's no occasion to kick. That's the only thing that can trouble a fat man."

"This time I was speaking generally," explained Hayes. "I don't like some of the ways reporters have."

"That's only a small part of the business," laughed Wright. "If you complain only about that I shall have you for a staunch adherent."

Mrs. Hayes saw that Kendall was at a loss to understand the drift of the conversation, and accordingly said, "Dr. Hayes is coroner, Mr. Kendall, and the Banner man calls us up at most unearthly hours."

The Belmont Banner was the morning paper, and its editor, Deacon Jerry Withrow, was always at the beck and call of the boss. Kerr let him think that he had something to do with directing the affairs of the city. This was a harmless delusion, since its pliant attitude always made him consider a suggestion let fall by the boss as a scheme which he himself had hatched.

"I think it is dreadful for nice men to be mixed up in politics," said Mrs. Gilbert.

Perhaps it was no more dreadful than was the lack of knowledge of politics displayed by the nice women of Belmont. This would have been difficult to impress upon Mrs. Gilbert. She knew well enough that her husband was consulted by that odious David Kerr, but that was in a legal way and Kerr paid well for the advice he received. Even the tone in which she spoke showed how thankful she was her husband was not in politics. Mrs. Hayes was quick to say what she thought along the same line by adding:

"And Dr. Hayes doesn't have to at all, you know. He says he does it for the good of the party."

This would have been all very interesting to Kendall if he had had the entire evening to spend in such pleasant company. Time was pressing, however, and in the few minutes still at his disposal he wished to sound Wright at greater length about the Belmont News.

Kendall looked closely at the young man whom he had already set down as an opponent. Physically Wright seemed no shirker of a combat. His shoulders were broad and his body well developed. Led to believe from his knowledge of the reformer type that he would find Joe Wright a long-haired theorist and Utopian dreamer, the lawyer found instead a self-possessed, well-balanced young man. The newspaper owner's manner, even in repose, was judicial. To Kendall's thinking he had the air of a man who would not be swayed by prejudice or liking. It was his part, however, as a special pleader, to make Wright think himself too much an idealist—if he could—in opposing the just claims of the stock-yard company.

"I suppose you found the News somewhat run down when you took hold of it," Kendall remarked casually.

"Yes, the name was about all I bought."

"I thought the paper had a pretty good mechanical plant," interjected Gilbert.

Instinctively Wright felt the concerted action masked under the innocent question and the remark by Gilbert. Just what Kendall had to gain he did not know, but since he recognized him as a representative of large interests he thought best to let him know what stand the News might be expected to take. It was just as well that Gilbert should have it clearly in mind also. If the clients of these men were playing the game fair and square they would welcome his kind of newspaper. If they weren't, and Wright knew there had been lapses from grace on the part of some of them, he hoped they would recognize in the paper the power which would first seek to prevent, and, failing in this, then try to correct. Judge Gilbert's allusion to the good mechanical plant he seized upon for a text.

"That's true, the News has a good mechanical plant." He paused to let that sink in before he continued. "Somehow or other when I think of a newspaper I never think of that side of it. I have in mind only the feeling of confidence with which a newspaper inspires its readers."

"What do you think the ideal newspaper is like?" asked Judge Gilbert. He wanted to know to what kind of star this young man had hitched his wagon.

"The ideal newspaper is one which has no ax to grind, and no personal animus in the discussion of private affairs or public questions, but only a constant regard for the truth and the lasting welfare of the state."

Kendall went to what he considered the heart of the matter.

"Aren't you leaving out of consideration, Mr. Wright, that everything—this government, even—is but a compromise?"

"No, I recognise that, and I believe in compromise. Without it we would still be cave dwellers. It is exactly because of this everpresent compromise that an honest newspaper is so valuable. It must see to it that this compromise is open and above board. It mustn't be the give-and-take trade of low politicians in the back room of a saloon or the far more dangerous trades of men higher up and powerful interests; not that kind of compromise, which after all is a sale of something one does not legally own to one who cannot or will not secure it honestly. I tell you that the majority must rule fairly and with a proper deference for the rights of the minority, that's where a newspaper can be of service."

Having decided to deliver a broadside, Wright had gone about it with great enthusiasm. The sight of Mrs. Hayes gazing wonderingly at him, for she did not understand what he meant, caused the editor to break off with a laugh. He recognized that Judge Gilbert's drawing-room was not the proper place for a lengthy exposition of his views.

"I'm afraid I'm preaching," he apologized, "and there's nothing I hate more than that."

"Not at all," protested Kendall. "Your views interest me greatly, Mr. Wright. When I come again I am going to see how far along you are on the road to the ideal."

With this Kendall announced that he must be going, and made his adieux. To have a few last words about Wright, Judge Gilbert accompanied the visiting attorney even to the front gate. His very last assertion was that he himself would have nothing to do with the proposed franchise grab and that he was morally certain David Kerr was of the same frame of mind.

CHAPTER III.

As Judge Gilbert was about to enter his front door, having accompanied Mr. Kendall as far as the gate, he saw a carriage stop in front of the house. The man who got out and came up the walk he recognized instantly. None the less he did not walk like the David Kerr of yesterday; he seemed in every motion as he came into the light cast by the porch lamp to be the David Kerr of ten years hence. Realizing that only something unusual could bring the master of Locust Lawn out at night, and to his house, too, the lawyer went down the porch steps to meet his visitor.

"Good evening, Mr. Kerr," was Gilbert's greeting. "This is an unexpected pleasure."

"Evening, Amos. Can I see you alone? I don't want to be interrupted."

"We can go into the library. No one will disturb us there."

To this Kerr made no reply. He toiled heavily up the steps and into the house. Gilbert's surprise increased on finding, when his visitor removed his overcoat, that he had on evening clothes. It was more an intuitive feeling than observation which made Gilbert understand how uncomfortable the boss found his unaccustomed raiment.

As Kerr walked through the hall and into the library, his own thoughts did not weigh so heavily upon him as to prevent him from satisfying his curiosity by gazing about him. It was the first time in his life that he had ever set foot in Gilbert's house. The invitation had been extended many times, but Kerr knew his social limitations and had always refused.

The judge pushed forward a big leather chair and into it Kerr dropped without a word. His hands rested listlessly on the arms of his chair, the bosom of his shirt was rumpled and bulged out of his waistcoat, his breath came heavy and fast, and he gazed dully at the fire in the grate. Gilbert had never seen him in such a condition before. Until now he had always been the man of iron, accepting his many triumphs and his few minor defeats in the same imperturbable manner.

"I tried to get you by telephone several times today," Gilbert began.

"I know it, but I wasn't in the mood for nothin'." The very tone in which he spoke betrayed that fact.

"I promised Kendall I'd call you up in regard to the new franchise he's anxious for you to support."

"That'll keep."

"I told him that personally I could not be interested."

This drew no answer from the boss. Gilbert made no further attempt at making conversation and for a time the two men sat in silence. When Kerr launched his first question it seemed apropos of nothing.

"How long you been in Belmont, Amos?"

Gilbert's brain went through a series of rapid thought transitions in an effort to divine whither the question led. He was accustomed to Kerr's interrogatory methods, but everything was so out of the ordinary this evening that he tried his best to fathom the boss's purpose, before, in his usual indirect fashion, he disclosed the object of his visit. The question was one easily answered, albeit with some surprise.

"Why, a little more than twenty years."

Kerr continued to gaze into the fire, seemingly oblivious to his surroundings. Gilbert could not have sworn that the boss had heard him reply. Then came another question, still seemingly apropos of nothing.

"Remember your first office—after you quit keeping it in the top of your hat?"

"Yes, very well. I paid you two dollars a week for desk room in a corner of your real estate office—in that same old office you still have on Fifth street."

"That's what I charged you—but I don't guess you've got a receipt for every week. Was it you or Bill Stoner in them days used to use my big atlas for a ironin' board?"

"Both of us, I believe."

Kerr moved restlessly in his chair, then went on.

"Many's the time I've opened that book to show a man the plat of an addition and out would drop your other handkerchief. I guess the mirror in your room wasn't big enough to hold a handkerchief on your wash day." He looked about the library, absorbing its quiet elegance. "Things mighty different now, ain't they?"

"Then I was struggling to get a start."

It seemed to be a monologue Kerr was delivering. His questions were answered, but he made no sign that he heard. His remarks were delivered at random, and he never took his gaze from the fire, except the one time he had looked about the room to note the contrast of the present with the time when Gilbert had first come to Belmont.

"'Bout that time you wanted to git married to a mighty nice girl."

"Yes, that was about the time I was elected prosecuting attorney."

"Exactly," then after a pause, "and you got married."

Gilbert could not understand the drift of the conversation, but he recognized that Kerr was reviewing the past step by step.

"Then I gave up my desk in your office, and moved to the courthouse."

"But you still came to see me, Amos."

This was said as quietly as had been his previous remarks. Taken by itself it was a harmless utterance, but in connection with what had gone before it was of great significance. Yes, Amos Gilbert, the rising young prosecuting attorney, had gone to see David Kerr after he had moved his office to the courthouse. The boss let that remark sink in well before he asked.

"After that how long was you on the bench?"

"Six years."

To be Continued.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Coughing.

"Constant coughing," says a doctor, "is precisely like scratching a wound on the outside of the body. So long as it is done the wound will not heal. Let a person when tempted to cough draw a long breath and hold it until it warms and soothes every air cell and some benefit will soon be received from this process. The nitrogen which is thus refined acts as an anodyne to the mucous membrane, allaying the desire to cough and giving the throat and lungs a chance to heal. At the same time a suitable cough medicine will aid Nature in her effort to recuperate."

MOVING PICTURE PLAYS.

The Man Who Perfected Them and What the Future Promises.

C. Francis Jenkins of Washington, who was awarded the Elliott Cresson gold medal in 1895 for the successful method of projecting motion pictures on a large canvas, has been given new honors for his work in the "movie" line. The Franklin institute of Philadelphia has now awarded him the John Scott medal for his recent achievements in moving pictures.

Here is a man unknown to the millions for whom his original research has made possible the thousands of theaters in which photo plays are produced. Much of his early experimental apparatus has been acquired by the National museum, Washington, and is now shown in the graphic arts section.

Other scientific minds are bent to the further perfection of the movies, and a recent declaration by a technical writer would lead us to look forward to the day when the projected scene will not only appear real, with the apparent actuality of color depth and distance, but the actors will have body and what looks like substance. In fact, they will appear to be real. Add to such a consummation the perfected talking attachment, which we have been led to expect, and we will have convincing shadows elbowing the flesh and blood actors of the "legitimate" stage.—San Francisco Chronicle.

To Exhibit Pictures.

Several pictures have been purchased by the Ontario Government from the Ontario Society of Arts exhibition for the purpose of exhibiting them in the normal schools throughout the province. They are: "The Very Heart of It," by C. N. Manly; "The Carpenter's Shop," G. A Reed; "The Old Hutt House," by Bertha Des Clayes; "Roses," by Mary H. Reid; "Dartmoor Farm," Gertrude Spurr Cutts; "Autumn in the Luxemburg," by H. Mabel May; "Rion Magog," A. Suzor Cote; "On the Trail to Sentinel Pass, Canadian Rockies," by Thomas W. Fripp; "The Old Barn," by T. G. Greene; "Autumn Evening," F. McGillivray Knowles.

The Porcupine.

The porcupine produce the greatest medley of calls, moans, and squeals combined of any animal in our Canadian woods. It is beyond description. I have seen them rolling in a sunny nook, says a recent writer, also hanging suspended by their fore paws from a limb of a tree uttering all manner of sounds. These are more frequently heard during the mating season, but I have heard them pretty much all through the summer months.

Light.

Why is a man approaching a lamp like one about to get off a horse? Because he is going to a-light.

LATEST FROM DAME FASHION

A MAY FROCK FOR A GIRL.

Combining exquisite daintiness with the latest note of fashion is this girlish frock of the sheerest batiste embroidery which uses the flouncing in a most original fashion, inverted in the skirt and hanging loose over the girdle of pink ribbon. A puff of the plain batiste in between the skirt and blouse simulates the panier on mother's dress and is put over a lining of thin lawn.

Cleaning Velvet Ribbon.

To clean velvet ribbon, first brush thoroughly with fine velvet brush. Dampen the right side lightly with clear water. Tack or pin the ribbon over space from table to chair with wrong side up. Iron with medium hot iron on wrong side until dry. The wrinkles will disappear, the crumpled edges straighten out and the pile freshen and stand up like new.

THE ONLY MEDICINE FOR TEETHING BABIES

Mrs. Alcide Charland, Ste. Sophie de Levrard, Que., writes: "I am well satisfied with Baby's Own Tablets which I used for my little one during the teething period. I know of no other medicine to equal them." Mrs. Charland's testimony is that of thousands of other mothers. Once the Tablets are used a mother will give no other medicine to her little ones. The Tablets are guaranteed to be absolutely safe and are not only good during the teething period but cure constipation, colic, colds and simple fevers—in fact they cure all the minor ills of little ones. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

REVISION OF THE ANGLICAN PRAYER BOOK IS ALONG CONSERVATIVE LINES

Shortening of Services Sanctioned by New Rubrics. Permission to Use Liturgical Version of Athanasian Creed—Prayers for Workers and Vice-Regal Officials

The first statement on the proposals for the revision of the Prayer Book of the Church of England in Canada, which the Bishop of Kingston was requested to prepare by the special revision committee, shows that the "eminently conservative" revision which was forecasted leaves very few marks upon the old forms of morning and evening prayer.

In addition to the present rubric another has been added sanctioning the shortening of the service by the omission of the venite (in morning prayer), of one or more psalms, of one lesson, of one canticle as appointed, of the lesser litany and the Lord's Prayer after the creed, and of the prayers following the third collect, except the prayer of St. Chrysostom and the grace.

The following combinations of services are permitted—(1) Morning prayer and holy communion. (2) Morning and evening prayer and litany. (3) Litany and holy communion. (4) Morning prayer, litany and holy communion.

Many new opening sentences have been added to the order of morning prayer, and new special anthems are suggested for use on holy days.

Meaning of "Hell."

The following rubric is inserted after the apostles' creed:

"Note that the words in the creed 'He descended into hell' are considered as words of the same meaning as 'He went into the place of departed spirits.'"

Special Prayers.

Two new prayers are added after the prayer for the royal family, one being for the Governor-General of the Dominion of Canada, and the lieutenant-governors of the provinces, and the other incorporating petitions for all the royal family from the King downwards, the Governor-Generals, lieutenant-governors and the legislatures. In the prayer for the clergy and the people, the phrase, "Who alone workest great marvels," is altered into the "Giver of all spiritual gifts," and "clergy" is substituted for "curates."

The changes made in the order for morning prayer were adopted also for evening prayer in the places in which the two orders are identical.

Retain Creed.

The Athanasian creed is to be retained in the Prayer Book in its present place exactly as it stands without any alteration in text or rubric, but a liturgal version omitting verses 1, 2, 28 and the last verse is to be printed immediately after the creed as it now stands. This means that permission is given to use the liturgical version where preferred instead of the creed as it now stands. This recommendation amounts to little since the creed has largely fallen into disuse on account of its archaic nature. In many places it is already to all intents and purposes obsolete. Many of the clergy have taken conscientious objection to what are known as the "damnatory clauses" in the creed.

To Shorten Litany.

A new rubric is placed before the litany directing that when the litany is not used as a separate service, the minister may, at his discretion, omit all that followeth the Lord's Prayer, except the prayer of St. Chrysostom and the grace.

The words "from fire and flood" are inserted after "from lightning and tempest."

The following is substituted for the petition for the lords of the council, etc.: "That it may please Thee to endure the Governor-General of this Dominion and the lieutenant-governor of this province, with grace, wisdom and understanding."

Then follows a new petition: "That it may please Thee to bless the Parliaments of the Empire, and to direct their consultations to the honor of Thy name and the welfare of Thy people."

Prayer for Labor Men.

After the petition for the magistrates, the following new petition is inserted: That it may please Thee to bless and protect, all who serve mankind by learning, labor and industry."

No change of even a single word was made by the revision committee without a two-thirds majority, and they acted with unanimity on all matters.

The present Prayer Book, as used now in England and Canada, and the colonies, was last revised in 1662, in the reign of Charles 11., the first Prayer Book being compiled about 100 years previously.

For the Irish Church and in the American Church, the Prayer Book was revised to meet conditions in these, but Canada has hitherto followed the English use, and attempted no revision.

HINDUS MUST NOT LAND

The Government Has Issued Special Order

OTTAWA, May 23. — Special instructions have been issued to the immigration officials at Vancouver that, under no circumstances, are they to allow the four hundred Hindu immigrants on the steamer Komagata Maru to land in Canada. The vessel, whose arrival was chronicled yesterday, is now off the quarantine station at Vancouver, and word from the officials as to the action taken is expected here at any time.

"We have instructed Malcolm Reid, the chief immigration officer at Vancouver, that the Hindus must not be allowed to land under any circumstances," said Hon Dr. Roche, Minister of the Interior, last night. Dr. Roche pointed out that the landing of the Hindus could be prevented on several grounds.

The order in council forbidding the entry of immigrants by way of the Pacific for six months from April 1 would cover the case. The fact that it is understood that the Hindus on the Komagata Maru have not come direct from India, but from Shanghai and Hong Kong and other eastern ports, is also given as ground under the Canadian regulations for denying them entrance. If the Canadian officials are successful in preventing the Hindus form landing, as Dr. Roche is confident they will be, the company owning the steamer will be required to carry them back again from the Dominion.

XV REGIMENT ARGYLL LIGHT INFANTRY

fore the Royal Review at Toronto in honour of the Duke of York (now King George the Fifth) in which the Regiment participated. The death of Col. Halliwell in September, 1907, was deeply regretted. The command next devolved upon Lieut.-Col. Thomas Stewart, whose period of command was signalized by the increased strength of the Regimental establishment to 8 Companies, and by the erection of the splendid new Armouries furnished with all modern military equipment.

Lieut.-Col. Lorne W. Marsh succeeded Col. Stewart, in October, 1911, and is the present Commanding Officer, under whom the Regiment has been kept up to its usual high state of efficiency, and in 1913 took part in the Tactical Manoeuvres in the field

Lt.-Cols. Lazier, Ponton and Stewart are on the Reserve of Officers, the two former, as well as the present Commanding Officer, holding the "Long Service Decorations."

The P. ex-G.—Precisely the same.

The Waiter—No, you're wrong there. The old ones was bigger.—New York Post.

LOCAL MARKET

The markets during the past few weeks have been rather small, the cause no doubt lying in the fact that the farmers have been too busy. The rain affects them as it does the ball players, and as to-day was an off day they gathered about the market square while their wives filled the auditorium. Butter sold from 25 cents to 27 cents, while a Review scribe was requested to shell out 22 cents for eggs. There was a small amount of fowl, but the price remained the same as last week. The outside market also remained the same.

KINGSTON, May 23.—That magazines containing liquor advertisements should be banned was the opinion expressed at the Methodist district meeting, a resolution calling on the ministers not to purchase such magazines was passed.

A change in rules is desired so that ministers may stay in a charge for a second term.

Old Tavern Going.

London is to lose its only Dog and Partridge Tavern, which, at Bow, preserved a reminder of more rural days. But London has still, at Rotherhithe, a link with an old-time sport in the Dog and Duck. That was, humanitarians will agree, a cruel sport that set the swimming spaniel against the diving duck. But it was, 100 years ago, a fashionable pastime, along with cock-fighting and prize-fighting. There was a Dog and Duck in Mayfair once; there was another in St. George's Fields, which, in consequence of the natu reof the company who frequented it, was at length put an end to by magisterial enactment. The ducks were not sorry!—London Chronicle.

TRADES AND LABOR COUNCIL

Notes by Official Scribe.

A goodly number of delegates were present at this week's meeting; president J. J. Hartley occupying the chair.

The City Improvement Works.

Much discussion of a critical nature took place over the way Peterboro residents and taxpayers are treated when they apply for work to the foremen on the George Street Improvement Scheme and other public works. Foreigners are being put on while the men who are entitled to the preference are turned down. Also that ex-Mayor Bradburn's promise to the Council was that the contracts would call for a nine-hour day, and 10 to 10½ hours is the actual length of a day's work demanded by the Paving Company from its employees. The Municipal Committee will wait upon the Board of Works at its next meeting and ask an explanation.

Labor Educational Association of Ontario.

Representative Harry Gainey of the Barbers was elected a delegate to the Convention of the above named association on the 25th at St. Thomas. Representative Wm. Cotton of the Electrical Workers was appointed as alternate.

The following letter was received from London, England, and is self-explanatory.

Labor Party,
House of Commons,
4th May, 1914

Dear Sir:

I have to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 21st April to Mr. MacDonald, and to say that numerous communications in a similar strain have been received from different parts of Canada and have been inserted in the "Daily Citizen." A question was also recently put in the House of Commons as to the misrepresentations of emigration agents and the reply received showed that the Board of Trade were doing what they could to bring to the people here the exact situation in Canada.

Yours truly,
H. S. Lindsay,
Parly. Asst.

Mr. Wm. Stevens,

A Government Employment Bureau.

The Secretary was instructed to write the proper authorities about establishing a Government Employment Bureau in this city.

BELIEVES IN SOUL CURE

French Doctor Says it is Medicine of Future

PARIS, May 23.—Dr. Berillon of Paris asserts that psychotherapia or soul cure is the medicine of the future. He does not put his patients under a hypnotic trance, but places them in an environment which creates an appetite for sleep. He invites them to repose on a bed and think of nothing. Then he leaves them. They gradually succumb to the "tick tack" of a metronome. When the patient is in a hypnotic slumber, if it is desired he should be cured of excessive indulgence in alcohol, the psychotherapist suggests to him that he cannot raise a glass of absinthe to his lips, and repeats the suggestion until the prohibition is so engraved on his brain that if he would he could not do so. Berillon is frequently consulted by those who wish to be cured of the unhappy love or passion, and through hypnotism they obtain release.

CAMP WILL BE LARGE.

Petawawa Training Ground Will See 12,000 Troops This Year.

OTTAWA, May 23.—The mobilization of troops at Petawawa this year will be the largest that has been carried out in Canada during any training season for many years. It is expected that during the latter part of June about 12,000 cavalry, artillery and infantry, will be mobilized for a few days of combined training. Col. Hughes has decided this year to carry out a mobilization scheme of combined training that has not been attempted in Canada for 25 years, and Petawawa has been selected as the point of mobilization. One of the features will be the test of transportation facilities and of staff work. During the last twelve miles of the run only a single track is available. The mobilization will be on July 15. What will be known as the secondary mobilization will take place on June 20 when 4,000 city corps from an area extending from Hamilton, Ont., to Sherbrooke, Que., will be brought to Petawawa for their five days' training.

TRIED AGAIN TO ESCAPE.

Robert Snow Faces an Addition To Present Prison Term.

GUELPH, May 23.—Robert Snow of Toronto, who a year or two ago, with six other prisoners made a successful dash for liberty from the Toronto Jail, appeared before Magistrate Watt here yesterday. He was sentenced in March to a term of 18 months at the Prison Farm on several charges of theft and housebreaking, but a few days later, as he was working in the paint shop he was missed by one of the guards. After a search of several hours he was found with Harry Kellet, another prisoner, between the ceiling and roof of one of the buildings and removed to Guelph Jail. Yesterday morning both men were committed for trial on a charge of attempting to escape.

Centenarians' House Burned.

CORNWALL, May 23. — The residence of Francis and Mrs. Kirkey, just west of the town, was burned to the ground yesterday morning. The couple are very aged, Mr. Kirkey being 103 and Mrs. Kirkey 101. The old couple had to be carried out as Mr. Kirkey is blind and his wife has been confined to her bed for over two years.

Silliman Is Safe.

MEXICO CITY, May 23. — Vice-Consul John R. Silliman arrived in the Federal capital yesterday morning from Saltillo, and was taken to the Brazilian legation.

Canaries Aid To Orchestra.

Twenty canaries in cages lent their voices to swell the music provided at the 48th anniversary of the Centenary Methodist Church Sunday School of Montreal by an orchestra of twenty pieces and a choir of seventy voices. At the morning and afternoon services, even during the addresses, the birds sang lustily, but at night they went to sleep on their little perches, leaving the field free to the choir and the orchestra.

THE FIGHTING DOCTOR.

Hon. C. B. de Boucherville Is a Veteran of the Stormy Days.

The Hon. Charles Boucher de Boucherville, who was associated with his nonogenarian colleague, Sir Mackenzie Bowell, in the complimentary banquet given by the members of the Senate of Canada in honor of the two senior Senators, is not the only Canadian public man who holds seats in two legislative bodies; but is the only remaining member of a provincial legislature council who had the right, as such, to the title of honorable. According to the official "Table of Titles," gentlemen who were legislative councillors in the provinces at Confederation in 1867 were allowed to retain the title of honorable; those appointed later have no right to it, and the practice in Quebec and Halifax of calling legislative councillors other than the Speaker and members of the Provincial Governments "Honorable" is wrong. Senator de Boucherville, is the only provincial legislative councillor now living who was appointed prior to Confederation, and he is entitled to be called Honorable on account of his seat in the council as well as on account of his seat in the Senate. He was not appointed to the latter body until 1879 but that was prior to the law abolishing dual representation. The mention of Senator de Boucherville's name takes one back many years in the political history of Canada, when the names of Chauveau, Belleau, Cartier, Cauchon and Dorion were to the fore, and then in the front rank in the close, bitter, political fighting of those days was the doughty "Doctor" de Boucherville. He was in his prime known as "the fighting doctor," and he was regarded for years as the champion of the Ultramontane wing of the Conservative party.

Perhaps the most active period of his political career closed shortly after the dismissal of the Government of which he was the Premier by Lieut.-Governor Letellier de St. Just. Immediately following the famous coup d'etat, Dr. de Boucherville made a vigorous and affecting protest, which attracted much attention; but the energy he threw into the effort affected his health for some time. When Lieut.-Governor Angers dismissed the Mercier Government and was looking about for a new Premier, he picked out Senator de Boucherville as the safest and most acceptable man available; and after some hesitation on his own part he accepted the post and formed a Government, but retained the Premiership long enough merely to see it properly organized and established. Then he turned over the reins of power to the Hon. L. O. Taillon, in December of the next year. Senator de Boucherville is descended from Lieut.-General Pierre Boucher, Sieur de Grosbois, of the French army, who was Governor of Three Rivers. His father, the late Hon. P. B. de Boucherville, was a well-known member of the old Legislative Council for Lower Canada, while his mother came of the old de Bleury family, after whom the well-known Montreal thoroughfare was named. The Senator is one of the oldest living graduates of the medical faculty of McGill University and first sat in a legislative body as member for Chambly in the old Legislative Assembly of Canada in 1861. He was born at Montreal ninety-two years ago.—Chesterfield in Family Herald and Weekly Star.

"Goats" No Longer.

The retail merchants of Winnipeg have put on the brakes, and propose to be no longer held up by indiscriminate institutions and persons seeking advertising in church and lodge programs, selling tickets or soliciting charity. When a solicitor of this kind calls upon a Winnipeg retailer he is promptly asked to produce his credentials from the headquarters of the Retail Merchants' Association of Winnipeg. When he goes to procure these credentials he is told that his project will be submitted to the censorship committee, and that if it is worthy it will receive support.

Retail merchants say they have been plagued for years by all kinds of people asking them to advertise in programs and announcements, to buy tickets for dances, church affairs and lodge functions, and contribute to all kinds of schemes, both charitable and otherwise.

THE 57th REGIMENT

The 57th Regiment, which will entertain the 15th Regiment of Belleville over the holiday has, as the records show, taken a very active part in the history of Peterboro as town and city. It has given of its membership when the calls to arms was sounded; it has held a high position among other regiments of the district and province and in the earlier years, crack shots were born and bred in Peterboro.

In 1837 a number of companies were raised for what was styled the Seventh Provincia. Battalion of Peterboro, with Col. McDonell, chief in command. There were six companies, each having fifty men. In 1857, the Peterboro Rifle Company was formed with W. A. Scott as captain and continued till 1861, when Lt. Poole was promoted to Captain. On February 19, 1858, the Rifle Brigade Band was organized. In September of 1862, a drill instructor was engaged and two years later, the town council made a grant of $500 with the proviso that the County Council do likewise for the purpose of building a drill shed. A petition asking assistance in this undertaking was forwarded to the department. The drill shed was completed May of 1867 at a cost of $3065, the site being that of the present armouries. The Home Guards were organized the next year by Sheriff Hall and others and the following year, a drill shed was erected in Ashburnham as it was then called. The shed cost $840.

COL. E. B. CLEGG.
Officer Commanding the 57th Regiment.

At the rifle matches held July 21, 1867, one of the highest individual scores was made against all comers by Pte. D. English of No. 1 Company, 57th battalion.

The next year saw the organization of a band to be known as the 57th Band.

In February, 1886, a meeting was called for the purpose of forming a city battalion and on the 19th of June of the same year, the battalion met at the drill shed as a city battalion for the first time.

Twenty-four years ago, the Queen's Birthday was observed in Peterboro, with the Queen's Own of Toronto as visitors. The next year the Prince of Wales Own Rifles of Kingston visited here. The battalion had grown in numbers and efficiency and on January 26th, 1893, stood fifth among the battalions of the province. Two years later, Lt.-Col. J. Z. Rogers, resigned after sixteen years as Colonel of the 57th. In 1895, the headquarters of the Third Prince of Wales Dragoons was changed from Cobourg to Peterboro with Col. H. C. Rogers in command.

The veterans of '66 met on March 31, 1897, and organized the Veterans' Association. Lt.-Col. Bell, who had succeeded Col. Rogers in command resigned on February 16, 1900, and in June of the same year, Major E. B. Edwards was gazetted to command the regiment. Col. Edwards held command for two years and was succeeded by Col. Miller. Five years later, Major Stevenson took command and in April of 1908, the corner stone of the new armouries was laid by Sir Frederick Borden. The armouries were formally opened May 24th, 1909.

Col. Stevenson was succeeded by Major Clegg as officer in command and still holds that position. Rifle ranges recently provided at a favorable site to the east of the lift lock, fill a long-needed want.

WAS INJURED BY HORSE AND RIG

Man Was Brought to Court and Assessed $10

While lying on the road near Downer's Corners last evening in an intoxicated condition, Theodore Edward Kimbal was run over by a horse and rig, sustaining several cuts about the head. He was brought to the Police Station. This morning he appeared in court, charged with being drunk while on the black list. He pleaded guilty and was fined $10. Kimal still appeared shaky and nervous. Asked where he got his liquor he related how he met a man near Hunter Street Bridge yesterday afternoon. The man was driving a bay team attached to a green wagon. The tail board of the wagon fell out and he picked it up. The man was somewhat intoxicated and asked him to drive him out of the city. He did so, and the stranger produced a bottle. They drank. He left the man at the Canal bridge.

"How did you get to the Locks," asked the Chief.

"Don't remember."

"Do you remember getting run over?"

"No."

"Well, the money will be used to advantage here," remarked his Worship.

KNOX CHURCH.

PEBLO

CHILDREN'S EYESIGHT

It is astonishing the number of children who suffer from the effects of eyestrain, and many of them are unjustly blamed for being unambitious or mentally stupid. It has been shown by authentic investigation under municipal direction that from 20 to 30 per cent. of the children in public schools have defective vision and should wear glasses.

We make a specialty of examining children's sight by the most improved scientific methods, and if your child does not need glasses, we will tell you so frankly, and make no charge for the examination. But if your child should need glasses, we will guarantee that the glasses we fit are the proper correction, and will give perfect results. Our 10 years of successful optical business in this city is the guarantee we offer you.

We carry a special line of children's spectacle frames in heavy weight, in Gold Filled and Aluminum.

FINE REPORTS AT MARK STREET

East City Methodists Are Marching Forward

The congregational meeting of the Mark Street Methodist Church was a pronounced success. The reports of the past year were most encouraging and a pronounced feeling of hopefulness and enthusiasm prevailed.

The attendance at the Sunday School was reported as being the largest in the history of the church; the receipts amounted to $285.

Last year, 1913, the Mission Band was the "banner band" in the Bay of Quinte conference, but the reports indicated that both from the standpoint of attendance and finances, this past year was even better.

The Woman's Missionary Society reported a year of activity and of increased interest, also an increase in membership and finances.

The report of the Ladies' Aid Society was also encouraging and judging from the address of Mrs. Speer, the president, and the enthusiasm with which it was received, this coming year will be the best the society has ever experienced.

The Secretary of the Trustee Board reported the finances of the church to be in a very healthy condition, the average increase per week for the past five months (since the "canvass") being $7.45, and for the year, an increase per week of $3.01.

The interest of the meeting however gathered around the purchase of the lot at the corner of Hunter and Mark Streets, and judging from the spirit of the meeting, and from one or two addresses, every one was delighted at the wisdom and foresight of the Trustee Board in the purchase, and it will not be long before every cent is paid.

The total amount raised by the circuit for this year was $3,969.

BUSH FIRES IN HALIBURTON

Much Damage Being Done Throughout Country

Already bush fires are causing thousands of dollars loss in timber in Haliburton County, and if rain does not soon come, the outlook is serious for many places. Fires have been started at Harburn, at Lochlin, on the Burnt River and elsewhere for various reasons, and one, at least, the Harburn fire, is past all control, sweeping along miles wide. The law, and the enforcement of it, should be strict enough to make those too careless to look after their own, let alone other's interest, responsible for the damage caused. In a district depending so much on the product of the forest, it is most ridiculous to see such reckless abuse by fire, especially when the summer is scarcely begun.

Other Fires.

Mr. Thomas Graham, of Wilberforce, came to town by train this morning, and gives a thrilling report of the terrible destruction wrought by fire between Bancroft and Kinmount. The distance between those places is about 60 miles, and all along this route the flames are rapidly licking up vegetation — trees, shrubs, fences and everything in its path. Destruction follows its wake and the vigilance of the settlers is taxed to its enormity in their wild endeavor to battle with their much dreaded enemy, which swoops down upon them almost annually, considering neither age, condition or financial standing of its victims. It is a most horrible presentment and a sad state of affairs to hear the crackling flames and see the fire speeding along with the velocity of a race-horse. At times it is following a moss-covered rock for a short distance, then leaping forward to follow a crevice or fissure in which brambles and stunted shrubbery grows. In this manner it is carried along from place to place.

Along Lines of I. B. & O.

The awfulness of the country along the line of the I. B. & O. at night is too thrilling to consider and looks like a gigantic display of fireworks or the Hadesian world as the tongues of fire shoot heavenward to be lost in the dark etheral surroundings. Such is a picture of the north country to-day along the Burnt River district.

A Close Call.

The New York Graphite Mills were closely guarded by men last night and it was only through hard and diligent work that the structure was saved. It is surrounded by acres of burning timber and grasses.

Hotel Burned.

The Watson Hotel at Kinmount Junction was burned to ashes last night through the fires which surrounded it. Nothing short of a good week's rain will do any good and extinguish the flames. Some farm buildings are reported to have been destroyed.

The Railway Company is keeping a close watch along the tracks that no accident can possibly occur from fire. The rain of to-day may have a slight effect upon the burning region, but a week's rain would be more salutary.—Lindsay Warder.

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH.

The regiment will march to St. John's Church from the Armouries, Sunday morning at 9.30 sharp, and the service will conclude at or before 10.45. The service will be of a purely military character, with members of the 57th Regiment composing the choir. The entire seating accommodation will be taken up by the militia. It is hoped that Rev. Canon Beemish of Belleville, will preach at the 11 o'clock service.

GARBAGE COLLECTIONS.

Monday next being a holiday the garbage wagons will collect this route on Wednesday instead of Monday next week.

A Few Suggestions from Our Wash Goods Department

Regarding Dress Lengths That Are Quite Exclusive

Biscuit Fancy Ratine in a very modish tile effect; there is something a little different about this fabric, which will appeal to milady of exacting taste. It will make up equally as well for suit or dress, in fact it is one of the most serviceable materials you could possibly find. The color is perfectly fast and the length quite exclusive; very moderately priced. $9.00.

Persian Silk and Cotton Crepe, an extremely handsome fabric that will lend itself admirably to the graceful limpid style that Dame Fashion now decrees. The color is an unusual shade of cinnamon with a very dainty floral effect which blends perfectly. This exclusive length will make a dress of more than ordinary charm, and what is more, the colours are perfectly fast, being specially priced at $4.50.

Take Advantage of the Special Prices Prevailing in Every Dept. on TUESDAY, the Last Day of the Three Days' Holiday Sale

Silk and Cotton Crepe is the material of which another of these lengths is made, the colour is positively handsome, for it is a most bewitching Tango shade. Only an expert could discern the difference in this fabric from an all silk for it has that soft shimmery appearance found in materials that are twice as expensive. For the making of a real swagger dress, you will find it difficult to equal; priced reasonably at $5.90.

Honeycomb Ratine in pleasing shades of Tan and Cream; a wash fabric of rare quality, possessing that wiry surface which denotes a tendency to outwear materials of a similar character. This, is also an exclusive length and thoroughly adapted to the making of a really stylish suit at a cost which would prove quite moderate, for the price is only $6.90.

MURDERER PAYS ANOTHER VISIT HOME DESPITE GUARDS

He Is Now In the Bush to the Southeast of His Home and Is Believed to be Waiting for a Chance to Kill Alfred Coutremanche.

GRAVENHURST, Ont., May 23.—William Ruttan, the fugitive murderer, owes his liberty yesterday to the prompt action of his ten-year-old daughter at a time Thursday night when Provincial Detective Greer with six men had the home surrounded with the murderer inside. Warned by his daughter, he dashed into the very midst of the searchers, and in spite of the nine shots fired at him again reached the safety of the bush. One of the shots, it is thought, struck Ruttan. He has now taken to the bush southeast of his home, and was believed to be awaiting a chance to shoot down Alfred Coutermanche at the funeral yesterday at Barkway. Coutermanche stayed at home.

Neighboring barns which it was thought Ruttan might attempt to fire were all watched during the night, and at Ruttan's own home elaborate preparations for the capture of the man were made. Inspector Greer placed three armed men who know Ruttan by sight on the east side of the house where he must enter. So far as the police could learn the man had eaten but one meal since the murder, and they believed hunger would drive him home. It was arranged that the three men on the east side were to give a certain signal after Ruttan had safely entered the house, upon which Greer and his two men were to surround the house and effect his capture.

At 11 o'clock at night the three watchers on the east side came back. William Fryon, a brother-in-law of George Coutermanche, one of Ruttan's victims, and Constable Cooper heard a noise in the bush on the top of a small knoll about fifty yards distant, and in a few moments Ruttan was seen advancing towards his home and taking advantage of every available growth to screen himself from the view of possible watchers. The three watchers lay still in the shelter of some brush and allowed him to enter his home.

The few minutes they waited before giving the signal provel fatal to the enterprise. Once inside the house, Ruttan, who is very deaf, stationed his young children in the house so that they could hear any noise from outside. Ten minues passed and still no signal was given, and Ruttan remained undisturbed in his home.

Detective Greer on the other side of the house, was not aware the murderer had entered. Suddenly the little girl motioned to her father that she heard a noise outside and only stopping long enough to seize some pancakes his wife had prepared for him, the outlaw leaped through the door at which he had entered and dashed for the shelter, a huge rock. As he ran, Fryon fired three times in quick succession at him, while Bush took two shots at the fleeing man. In the darkness, only lighted by a bush fire some distance to the south, both marksmen missed him, and Ruttan broke away for the shelter of a pile of tins in a southeasterly direction from the house. Four more shots were fired at him on this stretch, and after one rifle report, Ruttan seemed to stumble, fall, then get up and run again. When the police lost sight of him, he was heading for a heavy bush which extends two and a half miles to Bush Lake.

Ruttans' wife, when interviewed, admitted her husband had come home to get the pancakes which he knew she would have ready for him. She told the police of his placing the children where they could hear the slightest noise, and of his desperate break for liberty. He has a rifle, she said, and plenty of ammunition purchased in Barkway, the day before the murder, and claims he will never be taken alive. Ruttan told her again not to worry if he did not come back, because he might decide to make an end of himself in the bush. Mrs. Ruttan believes that her husband's hope is to kill Alfred, his son-in-law, before he is captured. She stated that he told her if he could get one shot at him he didn't care what happened. According to her he will succeed or surrender as soon as he kills Coutermanche. A threat made by Ruttan to the effect that he would appear at the funeral ceremonies yesterday at Barkway and shoot down Alfred Coutermanche and all the latter's friends put the neighborhood in a state of terror. When the funeral of the two victims did pass it was closely followed by a dozen armed men who kept close watch on the bush at each side of the road. Coutermanche, hearing of Ruttan's threat, was afraid to venture out and remained in Tryon's home with two men while his wife was being buried two miles away

OFFICERS GUILTY

LONDON, May 23.—A plea of guilty was handed in by seven of the nine British army officers and all the eight civilians charged in January last with receiving and giving illicit commissions in order to influence the allotment of contracts for supplying army canteens. All the officers except Lt.-Col. Whittaker were connected with the quartermaster's department of the army and had risen from the ranks. The civilians accused were employes of the firm of Lipton's, Limited. The bribery had been going on for years. Sentence was deferred by the judge until May 25.

Italian Hanged For Murder.

MONTREAL, May 23. — Tomasso Bernardi was hanged at six minutes to eight at Bordeux jail yesterday morning for the murder of Luigi Scrolli, committed over a year ago. As Ellis, the executioner, pulled down the black cap the condemned man shouted three words in Italian, interpreted as meaning, "Grace, grace, pardon." Rev. Father Garceau, the priest of the jail, who had been with Bernardi all night stood by him on the scaffold. Just as Ellis was adjusting the noose, the priest murmured in the ear of the condemned man, "Courage, brother."

YOUTH DROWNED

IROQUOIS, May 23.—A drowning accident happened here yesterday at 8 p.m. when Zidon Everetts, aged 16, the second son of P. H. Everetts, was drowned while playing with two other lads around the old locks at the Iroquois Canal. He made an effort to keep himself afloat, but went down last time before help came. The body was recovered two hours afterwards.

Dion Named as Murderer.

QUEBEC, May 23. — The coroner completed the inquest on the death of Miss Dubois, who was brutally murdered a few days at her home in St. Sauveur, the jury returning a verdict of wilful murder against Dion, who was formerly a clerk in the employ of her father. Dion was arrested.

DEMOCRACY AT STAKE.

Representative Government the Real Issue Says Lloyd George.

LONDON, May 23.—(C. A. P. Cable.)—Finishing the campaign for the Government candidate, Mr. Masterman, in the Ipswich bye-election last night, Lloyd George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, said that this contest was one of the most critical in the history of this country.

"Read the story of the scene in the House of Commons yesterday," he said. "Do you appreciate what it means and that it is a blow to free and representative government?" If it had been the case of an outburst of temper on the part of the Opposition, he would not have said a word, but he knew that it was deliberate and part of a plan to destroy the representative character of the Lower House. "Home Rule is not the cause of the trouble," he declared. "I am a Protestant Home Ruler, just as good a Protestant as any covenanter. Why, even the Tory candidates has ceased to treat it as if it were a Home Rule election. On his polling card he places Home Rule last. It is not Welsh disestablishment, it is not plural voting, it is representative government in this land. They attempted to destroy it. So long as the House of Commons was filled with squires and sons of the nobility, so long as it took the Commons away from the people, so long as it imposed taxes on their food in order to raise huge rents for the landlords, the House of Commons was all right. You had no young Tory lordlings, trying to break it by that rowdyism then. It was a mere drudge, a mere appendage to the House of Lords.

SAYS LAW WAS RIGHT.

Carson Proud of Leader's Retort to Speaker Lowther.

LONDON, May 23. — Sir Edward Carson, speaking to a vast audience at Ipswich last night, referred to Thursday's scene, introducing it by saying that with the trickery that was going on in the House it was hard to keep his temper. "I never was more proud than I was yesterday afternoon of my leader, Mr. Bonar Law," he said. "That was the first time any leader of Opposition of Government had been cross-examined by the Speaker, and every man of the Opposition shook his hand and told him they were proud of him. Bonar Law had felt that the moment had come to make a protest against it."

Referring to the Ulster question, Sir Edward said: "We are going to finish it now one way or other. We are prepared. I hate the idea of civil strife, but I agree with Winston Churchill that there are worse things than bloodshed, although he said it in a different context."

THE WORD "YES."

We Are Charged With Rarely Using It in This Country.

In the United States "yes" is pre-eminently a book word, though it is also scattered somewhat thinly through the conversations of everyday people and is employed habitually by a negligible number of individuals who are both highly cultured and careful of their speech. Furthermore, as compounds or set phrases tend to preserve old forms and old sounds, "yes" regularly occurs in all stock combinations. That is why persons whose habitual affirmative is ordinarily "yeh-a," or "eh-a," "eh-up," "yeh-up," never say "yeh-a, sir," "eh-a, to be sure," "yep, madam," "eh-up, indeed," or "eh-a, thanks," for example.

"Yes, sir"—a group which in various states, but especially in New England, is occasionally employed as an emphatic exclamation (and without any humorous intent) in addressing girls or women—"yes, sir," has several striking variations; first, "yes, sir," an accentuation as common and illogical as that in "I hadn't any reason to go," or in "He's a married man." Then what is "yes, sir-ee?" Well, like "no, sir-ee," it is as characteristically American as "yes, sir-rah" is Elizabethan; but that final "ee" is mysterious—possibly a decayed remnant of "ye" or "thee," possibly nothing but an emphasizing vocalic appendix, like the "o" which cheerful Britons often add to "right."—Richard T. Holbrook in North American Review.

POLLUTED WATER.

Two Simple Tests by Which Its Impurity May Be Noted.

Every one knows and admits the necessity for pure water. When you are away from home and are not sure of the character of the water supply it would not be a bad idea to make a few simple tests. The results may prove that it was decidedly worth while to take the trouble, says the New York Sun. Here are two tests that you can make very easily:

Fill a tumbler with water, drop in a lump of white sugar, cover it with a saucer and let it stand overnight on the bricks at the side of the range, on the kitchen mantelpiece or, in fact, anywhere where the temperature will not sink below 60 degrees. If next morning the contents are clear the water is pure. If, on the other hand, the liquid is cloudy some source of contamination is indisputably proved.

The second test is to drop a few grains of permanganate of potash into a tumbler of water, cover and let it stand for an hour. If the water is still of the bright rosy color to which the chemical turned it, it is perfectly safe for drinking. If it is of a brownish color it is impure, although the impurity may be of the kind that boiling will rob of its power to harm.

ADVANCE WARNING.

Coming?
Well,
If you will listen
With your ear
Upon the ground
You will hear
A distant rumble
And
A most
Suspicious sound.
There can be
No doubt
About it.
Small bills furnish
You the date.
Keep yourself
In dodging practice
For the day
We celebrate.
Coming
Just as sure
As measles,
Taxes or
The patient man
Who drops around
To get
Your pittance
On the slow
Installment plan.
Never doubt it
For a second.
Do not give up
In despair.
In a moment
Not far distant
There'll be crackers
In the air.
Even now,
If signs are truthful,
It is up
And on the way.
With a fervor patriotic
Wait
For Independence day.

Wouldn't Do.

"Yes."
"Can he throw a swift ball?"
"He couldn't throw a fit."

Contrary.

"Those two kids appear to be inseparable chums."

"They are together a great deal."

"They must think a lot of each other."

"No; their only bond in common is that neither one is allowed by his mother to play with the other."

Somewhat Stingy.

"Is he a near friend of yours?"
"What, Bob?"
"Yes."
"Well, he is near enough, but I can't say much for the friend part of it."

Long Headed.

"He is such a brave man."
"Is he?"
"Yes; he is not afraid to say 'No' to his wife over the telephone."

Willing to Prove It.

"Are you certain you can keep a secret?"

"Positive. Give me a three days' trial and see."

Just Enough.

Work indeed may be a blessing.
Still, it isn't too distressing
When one in the line of duty
Doesn't draw a double blessing.

Bond of Sympathy.

"Who goes there—friend or foe?"
"Got any chewing tobacco?"
"Yes."
"A friend."

Talented to No Purpose.

You'd own it if you knew him.
There was a time, indeed, that he
Had six girls promised to him.

Harmless Coloring Permitted.

Regulations have been issued under the adulteration of food act, providing that harmless coloring matter may be used in the manufacture of cheese, confectionery, ice cream and butter, without declaration on the label to the effect that coloring has been used, provided that "the color does not conceal damage or make the article appear better or of greater value than it really is." It is also permissible to use copper salts in the greening of peas, provided the amount of copper does not exceed 80 parts per million in the drained peas or 10 parts per million in the embedding liquid.

AN ANCIENT SHIP.

Timbers Found In England May Date Back 400 Years.

At the present time there is a controversy raging in England over some old ship timbers. One party contends that the remains are those of a warship of the time of Henry VIII., the Henri Grace a Dieu; while the other believes them to be portions of Sir Francis Drake's famous flagship the Golden Hind.

J. Seymour Lucas, R.A., the British artist, after seeing the relics, has come to the conclusion that they are those of a sixteenth century vessel, possibly the famous Henri Grace a Dieu. This craft was burned at Woolwich in 1553. It was little more than 12 months ago that the borough council of Woolwich, in preparing a site for a new electricity station on the south bank of the Thames first unearthed the timbers of this old ship. The late Sir William White then inspected them and was of the opinion that they came from an eighteenth century merchant vessel. The authorities were not very keen, if this was so, to preserve the remains.

The theory of Mr. Lucas, the artist who painted "The Armada in Sight," has put quite a new aspect on the matter. He considers that the closeness of the ribs and size of the keelson are irrefutable evidence of the date of the hull. In addition, he has seen two wheels, evidently from a gun carriage of the time of Henry VIII.; some stone cannon Balls and pieces of Elizabethan pottery, all taken out of the hull.

The theory that the vessel is the Henri Grace a Dieu is put forward by the Woolwich antiquarian society. There was a dock built at Woolwich in 1521, to which the hull of the Henri Grace a Dieu was taken, after the fire which destroyed her upper works and rigging. The question then arises, How came the hull to be buried? It is believed that after the hull had been placed in the dock something in the nature of a landslip occurred which removed both ship and dock bodily.

This, at any rate, is held to explain the circumstance that part of the timbers are still sunk beneath an old house. Very little is known concerning the methods of ship construction in vogue in the reign of Henry VIII., and it is not surprising that expert opinion is divided as to whether the Woolwich wreck may be taken to be that of the Henri Grace a Dieu.

It was the Henri Grace a Dieu which Henry VIII. built in 1515, that was burned at Woolwich in 1553. In this vessel Henry VIII. embarked at Dover on May 31, 1520, to meet Francis I. at the Field of the Cloth of Gold, the incident being the subject of a picture by Holbein in Hampton Court Palace.

For the present there is a good deal of doubt about the identity of the relics of the Woolwich, and it would, therefore, be premature to accept the theories put forward, but undoubtedly the possibility of a ship of Tudor times being recovered is causing widespread interest, and already there have been several offers of financial help to reconstruct the hull of the vessel.

Modern Business Man.

Dean Inge, of St. Paul's, whose lectures on things modern have won for him the sobriquet of "the gloomy dean," declares that Protestant asceticism is responsible for that singular product of our civilization known as the modern business man. He said recently:

"When one reflects that a man is constitutionally indolent, that his natural desires are easily satisfied, and that unremitting attention to money-making disqualifies its votary from enjoying the finer pleasures of life, it must be clear," he said, "that nothing but a queer sort of religious self-mortification could induce many persons to choose the life which the successful business man has to lead.

"When the money-maker was an honest merchant, subduing the earth and really creating wealth to the public advantage, his work might be an instrument of valuable moral discipline. But now that the financier had dethroned the merchant; now that wealth was appropriated rather than created, the connection between religious austerity and business was almost dissolved, and there was the undefying spectacle of the unscrupulous speculator, who made his home in his office, while his wife squandered his ill-gotten millions in vulgar and senseless extravagance."

Hotel of 1,140 Rooms.

Six thousand tons of steel, 100 miles of piping and an amazing quantity of scaffolding have contributed to the gigantic framework, completed recently, of the new Regent's Palace Hotel, of Piccadilly Circus.

When the topmost girder was swung into position more than eleven months had been occupied in the construction of the vast skeleton alone. Many more months will elapse before the hotel is ready for the public, and by that time half a million sterling will have been expended upon it.

The hotel will have 1,140 rooms upon its thirteen floors, and it will stand nearly 140 feet high. It will cover about an acre and a quarter of land.

Australian Bushmen.

Although the bushmen of Australia are the very lowest in the scale of ignorance, they possess a rare instinct that equals that of many animals and is in its way as wonderful as man's reason. It is almost impossible for them to be lost. Even if they be led away from their home blindfolded for miles, when released they will unerringly turn in the right direction and make their way to their nest homes, and, though these are all very similar, they never make a mistake.

ON THE VERGE OF A BREAK-DOWN

Wrecked Strength And Shattered Nerves Completely Restored By "Fruit-a-tives", The Famous Medicine Made From Fruit.

MRS. W. N. KELLY.

HAGERSVILLE, ONT., Aug. 20th. 1913

"I can highly recommend "Fruit-a-tives" as they did me an awful lot of good and I cannot speak too highly about them. About four years ago, I commenced taking "Fruit-a-tives" for a general break-down and they did me a world of good. We bought a good many dollars' worth but it was money well spent because they did all that you claim for them. Their action is so pleasant, compared with other laxatives, that I found ONLY pleasure, as well as health, in taking them. They seemed to me to be particularly suited to women, on account of their mild and gentle action, and I trust that some other women may start taking "Fruit-a-tives" after reading my letter, and if they do, I am satisfied the results will be the same as in my own case". MRS. W. N. KELLY

A blood purifier, a general tonic, a builder of health and strength, "Fruit-a-tives" is one of the great discoveries of the century in curative medicine. One of the valuable properties of "Fruit-a-tives" is its marvellous cleansing powers. When these tablets are taken, they act on the three great eliminating organs of the body—the bowels, kidneys and skin. "Fruit-a-tives" keeps the system free of waste matter, prevents the formation of an excess of uric acid, and insures the blood being pure and clean. "Fruit-a-tives" sweetens the stomach, increases the flow of the digestive juices, makes digestion complete and enables the system to absorb and assimilate an abundance of nourishment from the food eaten.

"Fruit-a-tives" builds up, invigorates, strengthens the whole system. As a general tonic, there is nothing else quite so good. And these tablets are so mild in action, so pleasant to take, that they are particularly suited to women.

50c a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size 25c. At all dealers or from Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

WILL ASK MAYOR BULLER TO HURL THE FIRST PILL

Big League Style for Opening of Mercantile Ball League

The Mercantile Baseball League will open Saturday, May 30, with all the pomp of a big league. His Worship Mayor Buller will very likely twirl the first ball while other prominent citizens will also be invited to take part in the ceremony. That the grounds at the exhibition park will be in perfect condition is assured as the meeting last evening decided to engage the services of a capable man at once who will skin the diamond and make other necessary repairs.

The executive will be composed of the President, C. Paton; Vice-President J. Murphy; Secretary W. English, W. Harris and W. Andrews. It was at first decided to have one representative from each team but the league now thinks it better to have their executive composed of men who are not in any way connected with any of the teams.

The schedule as appeared in The Review last evening was adopted and certificates handed out. All the teams who have not paid their entrance fee are requested to do so immediately.

Several names were given the Secretary last evening as prospective umpires and in all probability a list will be published during the next few days.

PETES LOST THE GAME AND ALSO SOME CHANGE

Seven Were Fined and Two Were Banished From Game

ONLY ONE HIT

There was a warm time in London yesterday. The Petes took exception to Umpire Walsh's decision and were banished by the wholesale. Despite President Fitzgerald's warning about umpire baiting, the locals kept it up, and Byrne and Fox were chased from the grounds. Other members of the crew were fined, and it was a real nice day. Bobby Heck, the London twirler, almost got away with a no hit encounter, as King gathered the only local bingle in the ninth. A London dispatch says:

Peterboro had a turbulent time of it here to-day, and between wrangling with Umpire Walsh and combing the London crew, dropped another of the series by a 7 to 0 count. The visitors frequently disputed decisions, and when not heeded by Walsh, became uproarious. The result was that Fox, Kelly, Wilcox, King, Byrne, Tracey and Belting were taxed $5 each. Byrne and Fox were banished from the game and grounds, and Belting, who was on the bench, was sent along with them. Heck came near for a no hit game, the only rap of the Peterboro team being a single in the 9th.

FORT WAYNE OUTFIELDER

New First Sacker at London To-day

Welsh, the new outfielder, whom the locals have been dickering for, will report here on Monday. The new fellow hails from Fort Wayne, and is said to be a speed merchant. Last year he only hit .260. Swartling, the new first sacker, reported at London, and will most likely figure in the battle to-day. The club is also after three other players of note and when they land them, the fans will see a real tidy bunch of pastimers at Riverside.

LAWN BOWLING.

Members of the Lawn Bowling Club are asked to be present at the green Monday morning at 10 o'clock for opening day games. The green is in good condition.

JENKINS LEADS IN GOLF FINAL

Canadian Press Despatch.

Sandwich, England, May 23.—The final in the Golf Amateur Championship is being played this afternoon between Jenkins of Scotland and Heslet of Ireland, at thirty-six holes. At the eighteenth hole Jenkins was three up.

COMMENT

As You Like It

Strict discipline must be maintained in the Canadian Baseball League, according to an ultimatum from President Fitzgerald. Yesterday morning Manager Shaughnessy, of the Ottawas, was notified that Catcher Lage and Outfielder Harris, of the Ottawa and Erie teams respectively, had been suspended for three days as the result of their clash at the home plate in Thursday's game. In addition each must pay to the league treasury $10 as a fine.

Harris held Lage's hand after the latter had tagged him at the plate in the fifth inning Thursday, and Lage struck him in the face and ribs with the ball. Both were at once reported by Umpire Evans.

Gallagher, a southpaw pitcher from Detroit, arrived in the city early this morning and will appear with the Red Sox to-day. He has all kinds of experience and is considered a veteran in the game. Deneau is especially anxious to strengthen up for the road trip, which the Sox will take soon, which will include nine games all told. The Chief is aiming at bringing the club back over the .500 mark, which would be considered good going. Just what the arrival here of Dad Stewart, of St. Thomas, will mean is hard to say, but Stewart has accepted terms and will report to Brantford. He is reported to be in fine shape. Stewart is known as a cracking good hitter and is also a good fielder. Deneau apparently is not satisfied with the hitting strength of the club, but declines to make any announcement of his plans.—Brantford Courier.

The games in the P. S. Baseball League scheduled for Monday, May 25th, will be played on Tuesday, May 26th instead.

Peter Spratt and Chas. Paton are taking a team to Lindsay on Monday to enter the tournament in connection with the field day to be held in that town. Carson, Smith and Huycke are among the crowd, so there will be good pitchers.

BELTING HAD BODY GUARD

But he Broke Loose—Caught First Train Out

Knute Belting, the chunky hurler of the local team had some time in London. The Swede, after issuing some thumb opinions of Umpire Walsh, was being escorted from the grounds by two cops when he broke loose and caught the first train for Peterborough. The Swede stopped over in Hamilton on the way down. Belting says that Umps. Walsh was very bad. Strong language, but he claims even the fans were holding their noses. The Swede hopped it home because he was afraid he would be fined fifty bones this morning. He says that President Fitzgerald wired last night that there would be something doing to-day. He says the best thing the president could do would be to can the umps.

Railway's Realty Holdings.

It is not generally known that the C. P. R. is the largest land owner in the world. Despite the sales of millions of acres from the original grant of approximately 26,700,000 acres, the railroad still possessed at the opening of the year more than 11,000,000 acres, worth, on the basis of sales in 1912, at least $175,000,000.

JOE JACKSON HOLDS LEAD IN AMERICAN

Cobb is in Fourth Position — Bill O'Hara the Leading Batsman in the International

Canadian Press Despatch.

Chicago, May 23. — Joe Jackson leads the American league batsmen with .355. Crawford is second, Barry third and Cobb fourth. Hyatt, the Pittsburgh pinch hitter, leads the National League with .400; Cathers of St. Louis, with .380 is second, while Devore, Philadelphia, with .364 is third. Evans still tops the Federals with .440, and O'Hara of Toronto with .370 leads the Internationals.

POINTERS ON LAWN TENNIS

The closer one is to the net, the easier it is to volley and the greater chance of mishits — not infrequent with all of us—coming off. It invariably happens that a player has a favorite direction for his passing stroke. Let us take a backhand stroke for example. A player will often be able to execute a very good cross court stroke, i.e., hitting from his backhand corner to his opponent's backhand corner. But suppose he is forced to hit down the line, probably a wild, inaccurate shot will result. Many players, of course, such as Gordon Lowe, can execute this backhand to perfection in any direction. But in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred a player is distinctly weaker on one side than on the other; as you all know that side is generally the backhand side. Therefore remember this simple formula, so obvious, but yet so seldom consistently adhered to. Play a good length on to the weaker side and follow in to the volleying position; again I say, get close to the net. This is the first move. The second is to anticipate, i.e., take up a position where your opponent is accustomed to make his shots. It is patent and obvious in so many cases that a player is more severe and accurate across the court than down the line. This being the case, the volleyer must place himself at the net ready for this cross court stroke. Two eventualities are now possible:

1. A stroke is forced which is strange to the striker and lacks confidence.

2. The volleyer is waiting ready to deal with the return.

But, of course, the first and most important point and one that should obviously never be lost sight of is to follow in to the net when you have succeeded in placing a ball—preferably a good length— on your opponent's backhand.

A few words as to the all important point of executing volleys. Practice—hard, intelligent and consistent practice—has to be gone through. A wall provides an admirable substitute for a court and opponent. In fact, a wall is to the tennis player what a punch-ball is to the boxer.

Having regard to the various methods different first-class volleyers adopt, it is impossible to be dogmatic on the subject. However, I advise as far as possible:

I. Keeping the head of the racket above the wrist, i.e., racket running parallel with the ground rather than at right angles to it.

II. Getting down to low volleys, i.e., bend from the waist and get your shoulder down low. The wrong way is to stand upright and put the racket down, allowing it to be at right angles to the ground. To volley correctly it is necessary to stand well to the side of the ball.

III. Do not hit low volleys as you would a ground stroke. Hold the racket firmly and push rather than hit. The oncoming ball will have nearly sufficient force already to carry itself back if you present a resolute racket held firmly and quietly but firmly pushed forward. Balls shoulder high and above may be hit as hard as is compatible with safety. Each player soon learns to what extent he may "let her have it," without undue risk. Don't ever kill for the sake of plaudits from the gallery, or a solitary admiring friend, as the case may be.

IV. Present the full face of your racket and never hit across the ball. Let the racket follow on through in the direction the ball has been aimed. The racket must never be allowed to follow across the body. Do not imagine the stroke is over when the ball strikes the racket. On the contrary, the most important part is to come. Following through with, and in the direction of, the ball spells the success or failure of the shot.

Summarising the foregoing suggestions I would like the reader to especially remember the following points:

I. Get well to the side of the ball.

II. Push rather than hit low volleys.

III. Do not snatch out in front, but wait until the ball is level with the body before hitting it—it is at the side of course.

IV. Play straight and not across the ball, except of course when playing across, but then follow through with and in the direction you wish the ball to go. Volleying is well worth cultivating.

Calgary Thugs Who Slew Cashier Are Cornered in Bush.

CALGARY, May 23.—John Wilson, cashier of the Canada Cement Co. at Exshaw, had his head blown off by thugs yesterday morning at 10 o'clock as he was about to enter the works with the sum of $2,314 in cash to pay the hands.

The robbers opened fire without warning, and the bullets entered the unfortunate man's head. They then grabbed the bag and escaped across the Bow river on a raft, making for the bush, where it is reported they are surrounded by a force of 100 men who started on their trail within a short time. Mounted police and C.P.R. detectives left here for the scene on track motors just before noon.

The robbers cannot get away without coming into the open country, and it is believed that their capture is only a matter of hours.

MORTON—RATCLIFFE.

(Calgary Herald.)

A quiet but very pretty wedding took place at the residence of Mr and Mrs. David Queen on Thursday evening, when Miss Margaret Ratcliffe, of Stouffville, Ont., was married to Mr. John Morton, of Calgary, by the Rev. Mr. Clark, of Knox Presbyterian Church.

The bridesmaid was Miss Ethel Queen, and the groomsman was Mr. George Anderson. The bride, who was given away by Mr. Queen, was gowned in a lovely gown of white satin broche with tulle veil, and carried a shower bouquet of white roses and orchids. The bridesmaid was gowned in white marquisette embroidered with French embroidery, and carried a sheaf of roses and ferns. A reception was held after the ceremony.

Miss Ratcliffe is well known in Calgary, where she has done private nursing for three years, and was a graduate of the Nicholl's Hospital Training School of Nursing, Peterborough, Ont.

Mr. Morton came to Canada from Kilmarnock, Scotland, two years ago, and is an accountant with the Great West Permanent Loan Company, which presented him with two handsome chairs on the eve of his marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Morton received many beautiful gifts besides. They will reside in Calgary.

In the recent examinations of the Ontario College of Art in Toronto last week, the O.C.A. scholarship in the life class was awarded to Miss Kate Livingstone Taylor, daughter of Mr. Wilson Taylor, B.A., of the Collegiate Institute staff.

Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton Hall of Toronto, are visiting with Mr. and Mrs. Richard Hall, Water Street.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Peebles, of Colborne, anounce the engagement of their daughter, Annie Laurie, to Mr. Clarence J. Smale, of Bowmanville. The marriage will take place on June 3rd.

Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Knott, of Markdale, announce the engagement of their daughter, Helen W., to Mr. Albert Sims, of Windsor, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Sims, of Fenelon Falls. The marriage will take place quietly early in June.

Miss Madeline Rutherford, of St. Joseph's, Toronto, is the guest of her parents over the holidays.

Mr. Gordon Matthews, of Toronto University, is visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. F. Matthews.

Mr. Meredith Huycke, of Toronto University, is the guest of his parents, Judge and Mrs. Huycke, Engleburne Avenue.

Mr. Murray Carlyle, of Toronto University, is home for the vacation.

At the regular meeting of the St. John's C.W.A. yesterday afternoon it was decided to hold the annual strawberry festival on June 24th on the church lawn. All the members of the C.W.A. are asked to give their hearty support towards making it a success.

Yesterday afternoon was the date for the Daughters of The Empire to pay their annual visit to the schools, but as the children assembled at the Armouries, the visit was postponed.

Her many friends regret to learn of the illness of Mrs. Hugh Davidson at Nicholls Hospital, and will extend best wishes for her speedy recovery.

Invitations are being received by local medical men for the annual medical convention, to be held in Brantford this fall.

CONCERT AT ST. ANDREW'S

Choir and Soloists Heard In Enjoyable Program

A large audience enjoyed an excellent concert at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church last evening. The choir, which was assisted by Frank Oldfield, the well known Toronto basso, sang in exceedingly fine voice. Mr. Herbert Treneer, choir director, and organist, in his numbers displayed excellent tonal qualities as well as finished execution, and his playing of the overture Lustpiele was a treat. Frank Oldfield will seldom be heard in better voice. The rich qualities of his splendid voice were given great scope in "Nearer My God to Thee," which was rendered with all the feeling and sentiment necessary to make it pleasing. He also sang "Hail! King George" in rousing style. The choir's best effort was the Hallelujah Chorus, by Handel. The number, which is taken from the Messiah, was rendered in a style which was very impressive, the choir members displaying excellent idea of the piece, good tone and volume of voice. The programme follows:

Organ Solo—Mr. Herbert C. Treneer. Lustpiele Overture, Keller Bella.

Chorus—"The Bells of St. Michael's Tower," Stewart.

Bass Solo—Mr. Frank Oldfield. "Nearer My God to Thee," Carey.

Male Quartette—Messrs Jones, Anderson, Pilling, and Thorpe. "Lead Kindly Light," Dudley Buck.

Soprano Solo (in Italian)—Miss Olive Howell. "Il Bacoa" (Dream of Home), Luigi Arditi.

Chorus—"Boat Song," Lohr.

Bass Solos—Mr. Frank Oldfield. (a) "Somewhere a Voice is Calling," Tate; (b) "Hail! King George," Quentin.

Chorus—"Tell Her I Love Her So," De Faye (arr. by F. Mullen).

Tenor Solo—Mr. E. Jones. "My Hope is in the Everlasting," Stainer.

Bass Solo (By request) — Mr. Frank Oldfield. "Arm, Arm, ye Brave," Handel.

Chorus—"The Village Blacksmith," Weiss.

Bass Solo—Mr. Frank Oldfield. "The Skipper of St. Ives," Jos. Rockel.

Chorus—"Hallelujah" (Messiah), Handel.

The chorus was composed of the following:

Soprano—Miss Olive Howell, Miss G. Evans, Miss J. Evans, Miss Eaton, Miss A. Givern, Miss Grant, Miss Henry, Miss Hamilton, Miss M. Laing, Mrs. B. Read, Miss G. Stevens, Miss A. Telford, Miss E. Telford, Mrs. F. Weir, Mrs. W. H. Waram.

Contralto—Mrs. Atkinson, Mrs. Boud, Miss J. Givern, Miss Ada Lee, Miss M. Rae.

Tenor—Mr. J. Anderson, Mr. Gilbert, Mr. E. Jones, R. Logan, and Mr. B. Head.

Bass—Mr. G. Brookes, Mr. S. Calladine, Mr. R. Dickson, Mr. B. Minns, Mr. A. Pilling, and Mr. C. Thorpe.

MAJORITY EXPECTED

WASHINGTON, May 23. — Democratic leaders in the Senate were confident last night that the Panama Canal tolls exemption repeal bill and the arbitration amendments will be disposed of next week. Senator Kern, leader of the majority, said a vote would be taken May 26 or shortly afterwards, and added that the repeal bill would be passed by a majority of at least ten.

Senator Simmons returned to the Senate yesterday after a short illness with measles. He took up the fight for repeal at once, and will direct the administration forces until the vote is taken. He will speak for repeal early next week.

The best way to deal with secrets is not to have any.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

A QUESTION OF CATS.

Editor Review:

Dear Sir:—

After reading a short article in Thursday evening's edition of The Review, it would appear to certain taxpayers of the West Ward, while not wishing to put themselves on record as deliberately accusing the garbage collectors of being careless with the truth, being that they are entitled to a compensation of 50 cents for each dead feline or canine that they remove on their rounds, that possibly it is the same cat that they are gathering up day after day and carefully preserving same to be deposited on William Street during the night, or, if I an wrong in my opinion, there must be an awful lot of cats on William Street. We do hope that this end of our beautiful city will be rid of the nuisance and unnecessary expense before the arrival of H. R.H. the Duke of Connaught, as he is no lover of cats, especially dead cats. We would suggest as a remedy to this unnecessary expense that the Sanitary Inspector be asked to cut the tail off each cat as brought in by the collector, and pay him his 50 cents per tail. This no doubt would remove all possibility of the same cat being colected twice, also that anyone found breeding or having in their possession a cat with more than one tail shall be prosecuted to the full extent of the law. We would further ask that the Sanitary Inspector be instructed to see that these tails are properly disposed of, which does not mean throwing them in the Little Lake, for as fishermen, we do not like cat-fish.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, we are
Yours in the Good Work,
TAX-PAYERS.

NEW INTEREST IN BOY SCOUT MOVEMENT

Church Parade to be Arranged for June 14

To all appearances the Boy Scout movement in Peterboro is enjoying a new lease of life, and it is anticipated the boys will rally once more. At the present time all the Scouts meet at the Armouries, and this arrangement is very satisfactory. Last night about sixty Scouts were on hand. Active steps toward reorganization are being made, and it is expected that the Scouts will take part in the reception to the vice-regal party on June 1st. A church parade will also be arranged for Sunday, June 14. Also a field day will be held on Monday next.

The troops of the surrounding district have been communicated with and good results are looked forward to.

THE CHINCH BUG

The Experimental Farms Branch of the Department of Agriculture has issued Entomological Circular No. 3, entitled "The Chinch Bug in Ontario." This has been prepared by Mr. H. F. Hudson, Field Officer of the Entomological Service. In the United States the losses due to the ravages of the Chinch Bug, during the last sixty years, considerably exceeded $350,000,000. Fortunately no very serious outbreaks have, as yet, occurred in Canada, but the insect has established itself in Middlesex County in Ontario, and has been reported also from Nova Scotia. The Circular, therefore, is timely and discusses the methods to be adopted in order to control the insect. In 1912, an investigation of the infested area in Middlesex County was made by the above Field Officer, and the life-history of the insect, etc., was studied. In the Circular the information gathered during the investigation is given. Preventive measures, such as clean farming, rotation of crops, etc., are discussed, as well as artificial remedies. Copies of the circular may be obtained free of charge from the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

They that touch pitch will be defiled. -Shakespeare.

VILE DUNGEONS OF SAN JUAN DE ULUA FULL OF HORROR

Americans Found Four Hundred Prisoners in Dark Loathsome Vaults

Most famous of all Mexico's prisons, noted for the untold thousands tortured within its wall, the castle prison of San Juan de Ulua stands to-day on a little island overlooking Vera Cruz pretty much as it has stood in the centuries of its existence. On April 28 the flag of Mexico fluttered down from its flagstaff. The Stars and Stripes rose in its place as Captain Paul Chamberlain and a company of marines from the North Dakota took possession.

The Castle of San Juan de Ulua was built in the sixteenth century. Its history from the days of the Mexican Inquisition to those of Huerta has been consistently infamous. The Spaniards carried the infamies and tortures of the Inquisition with them to Mexico in the year 1571. The Mexican Inquisition began its sittings in that year and continued them as late as the first few years of the nineteenth century. In the grim, forbidding, gloomy pile of San Juan de Ulua the Spanish inquisitors found a building suited to the purposes and one which appealed to their torture-loving tastes. Only a fifteenth century Spaniard could have designed such a castle.

Far, far underground go the foundations of the building, leaving room for row upon row of dungeons which no light ever struck, except the rays from a keeper's torch or lantern as some hapless wretch was thrown in or taken out. Many of these dungeons are below the sea level, and apparently well authenticated report has it that there are others which are flooded by the rising of the tide

A network of subterranean passages form the passageways between these tiers of loathsome cells, leading, some of them, no one knows where. Even in the tiers of cells above the subterranean ones no sunlight ever penetrates directly.

None of the dungeon-like prison rooms have windows or doors.

Into some of them the light filters vertically through an opening in the roof, an opening only about a foot square. When Paul Chamberlain went through the prison after taking possession in the name of the United States he found at least a hundred half starved, more than half naked poens languishing in the horrible stench of a single one of these dungeons.

Moats surround the old castle. There are drawbridges which have not been lowered for years, portcullises and all the other appurtenances of a robber baron's eyrie. Writing immediately after his visit to the prison, Mr. Ruhl, the New York Tribune's correspondent, said

"No stage manager putting on 'The Count of Monte Cristo' could imagine anything more creepy than the sight which met the eyes of the American officers when the keys were turned in the rusty locks and they entered the ancient vaults."

The Americans found 400 prisoners in the various dungeons. Most of them were peons held for impressment into Huerta's army. There were only a few criminals among the number, but hundreds of political prisoners had been released or removed before United States occupation.

Italian Hanged For Murder.

MONTREAL, May 23. — Tomasso Bernardi was hanged at six minutes to eight at Bordeux jail yesterday morning for the murder of Luigi Scrolli, committed over a year ago. As Ellis, the executioner, pulled down the black cap the condemned man shouted three words in Italian, interpreted as meaning, "Grace, grace, pardon." Rev. Father Garceau, the priest of the jail, who had been with Bernardi all night stood by him on the scaffold. Just as Ellis was adjusting the noose, the priest murmured in the ear of the condemned man, "Courage, brother."

JUST A WORD FOR MOTHER-IN-LAW

Though long ago the mother-in-law joke was put on the shelf by persons with a keen sense of justice, it is gratifying to learn, from an official source, that it never had much warrant in fact.

Investigation by the Brooklyn domestic relations court of some 800 cases of family smashes reveals that mother-in-law figured as a cause in less than two per cent.

Nearly half were traced right back to booze; an eighth to "other women," and most of the rest to laziness, jealousy, incompatibility and gambling.

Instead of being a force for discord and separation, mother-in-law is a most patient, long-suffering and sympathetic adjuster of difficult situations.

Take your own case, Mr. Man. When you marched up to the Old Girl's ma and told her you were going to take daughter away, didn't the old lady kiss and bless you and then work her fingers to the bone making things for the new home? Even when her heart was full of losing the pride of the flock, did she ever grouch or grumble—didn't she show a brave face and go the limit with a thousand little kindnesses to ease your way?

And then, when later on, the stork was hovering above your door, and you were flustered and wife was all a-flutter, who was it took hold, brought order out of chaos, like a practiced general bore the brunt of the household arrangements and brought yourself, wife and the wee one through an ordeal you thought would never end?

Mother-in-law, of course.

Indeed, when you take the pains to think back along life's troubled course, you're apt to find that you owe a mighty big lot to that derided mother-in-law of yours.

A joke's all right when it is a joke without a sting; and mother-in-law is usually good enough sport to join in the laugh even when it is unfairly at her expense.

If you joke with her as a means of showing a man's clumsy good will, that's all right.

But look here, old top, don't you dare to tip a joke at mother-in-law with a barb of malice.—Minneapolis News.

Carranza's Agent In New York Will Not Enter Mediation.

NEW YORK, May 23.—Jose Vasconcelos, the special agent of Carranza, who, it had been reported, had been chosen as a Constitutionalist representative to the Niagara conference, emphatically denied in a statement last night that he was to receive such an appointment or that Carranza would ever consider mediation as a solution of Mexico's internal affairs.

"As long as the Huertistas are at Niagara we shall not be represented there," said Mr. Vasconcelos. "The only way my party meets Huerta is on the battlefield. I will accept any mission that the chief of the Constitutionalist party may confer upon me. But I have no idea I will be named as delegate to the A. B. C. conference.

"Personally as a Mexican I thank the A. B. C. powers for their efforts to settle a conflict that has been brought in my country by some of its bad citizens. But the A. B. C. powers have no more right than the United States to interfere or advise in our internal questions."

Couldn't Help It.

A little girl had just been dressed in clean clothes and went out to play. In a short time she came back covered with dirt. Her mother was much put out and asked her how she came to be so dirty.

"Well, mother," she said, "isn't I made of dirt?"

"Yes, dear. But what has that to do with it?"

"Well, you know, mother, it will keep working out."—Philadelphia Ledger.

MAY CROP BULLETIN

The following statement regarding crop conditions in the Province, based on the returns of correspondents sent in on or about the 15th of May, has been issued by the Ontario Department of Agriculture:

Fall Wheat.—In the April crop bulletin, which was based on statements of correspondents reporting on the first day of that month, fall wheat prospects were said to be encouraging, as the crop had come through the winter practically unscathed. April, however, proved to be a most trying time for the young wheat, and it suffered severely from the formation of ice and from "heaving." The area plowed up this spring will not be relatively great, as farmers have preferred to drill barley or other spring grains in the bare spots rather than lose the grass that was seeded down with the fall wheat. Some correspondents report a most promising outlook on high and well drained lands, but the bulk of the fields are more or less spotted, or patched in with other grain. Very little injury from insects has been reported, odd mention being made of the Hessian fly.

Clover.—As in the case of fall wheat, clover fields are very variable in appearance. This crop also suffered more or less from the testing weather of the early part of April, which caused considerable heaving, especially in low and poorly drained situations, although some correspondents report the fields as looking well on rolling and well drained lands. Two year old clover is much poorer than that in the new fields, as the older meadows were greatly tried by last summer's drouth. Some corespondents also point out that many pastures were rather too closely cropped last fall for best results.

Alfalfa.—This crop has not come through the winter quite so well as clover. There is a strong desire expressed by correspondents for a hardier variety of alfalfa, suitable for the climate of this Province, and Prof. C. A. Zavitz, of the Ontario Agricultural College, has recently expressed himself as being hopeful that he will be able to satisfactorily meet this need very soon.

Vegetation.—Correspondents differ greatly as to the present stage of vegetation, some stating that the season is well forward, while others claim that it is a week or more late, the first two weeks of May having been too cold for much growth. Cattle and sheep were reported to be on the grass at dates ranging from the 1st to the 11th of May. When correspondents wrote vegetation in the fields appeared to be more forward relatively than in the case of orchard and forests.

Fruit.—The low and sustained dips in the temperature at times during the winter caused much anxiety among growers of peaches and other tender fruits, and the results have shown that they had reason for their fears. In nearly every peach section the fruit buds have been more or less frozen back. In some cases in the Niagara district, the loss will be almost complete, while in Essex, Kent and Lambton, the injury has been lighter. One correspondent points out the fact that early varieties have escaped better than the later sorts. However, there has been comparatively no root freezing, and our great peach industry at the most is likely to suffer but one season's loss in bearing. On the other hand apples, pears, cherries and plums are very promising as to blossom, but the presence of the San Jose scale and the oyster shell bark louse is threatening many orchards. The tent caterpillar is also much in evidence in York and other counties to the east. Small fruits have come through the winter with comparatively little injury, and present prospects are good. Correspondents speak approvingly of the increase of the practice of spraying fruit trees, but complain of the lack of competent farm help in orchard work.

Fodder Supplies.—During the past seven years the farmers of Ontario have learnt to make their supplies go farther than formerly. Hay and the grains are now fed sparingly, the coarser fodders being much more largely utilized. The quantity of hay on hand in most quarters is said to be sufficient for emergencies; but while individually some report a surplus, others have had to buy in order to carry live stock over until they could be put on the grass. All classes of grains are being more and more fed on the farm, although it is likely that a decided rise in prices would bring out a fair supply of wheat, barley and oats. The rather backward spring, however, has had a tendency to decrease any surplus of either hay or grain.

Spring Sowing—The soil was in a splendid condition for a seed bed in the latter part of April, even heavy clays having been well pulverized by the severe frosts which occurred during the winter. Farmers who got on the land to sow early were well advanced—and some through—when returns were made; but cold rains early in May prevented those who had been tardy from getting to work for a week, and in such cases seeding was more or less unfinished, while the soil was in a much stiffer condition than at the opening of the season. However, the general tone of the reports is very satisfactory, except in the case of some from the low lying townships of Kent and adjoining counties.

LINER BREAKS FROM TUGS.

Arrival of Vaterland Demoralizes New York Shipping.

NEW YORK, May 22.—Navigation in the North river, between lower New York and Hoboken stood still yesterday while the Vaterland, the biggest ship afloat, defied all efforts to dock her and swept broadside down the stream for more than a mile.

When the liner arrived at her pier after her maiden voyage her great length and a strong ebb tide proved too strong a combination for the fleet of willing little tugs that urged her toward her berth. For more than two hours the tugs pulled and hauled at the gigantic liner without success. At the end of that time she lay heading up the river against the heads of three piers, while the tugs, clustering like dolphins about a whale, laid their noses against her stern and started to swing it out into the river, so that the steamer could slide bow-first into her slip.

The Vaterland had made three attempts to dock before this. Once she was almost ready to tie up, when the tide gripped her and dragged her out of the slip. Ferryboats and small craft scurried to safety as the leviathan floated broadside down the river with twenty tugs circling frantically around. She floated a mile before the tugs got her straightened out, and then she returned under her own steam. Two more trials failed, but by this time the fleet of tugs had been reinforced and they caught the liner and headed her back before she had gone far down the river.

The fourth attempt to dock the ship proved successful. Hawsers had been attached to the bow and donkey engines ashore pulled while the tugs pushed against her stern.

Captain Dion Died on Duty.

QUEBEC, May 22.—Captain Dion of the steamer Champion, dropped dead on board his vessel yesterday morning.

The steamer was on the way from St. Michel to this port and stopped at St. John, Island of Orleans. He went into his room, and just as he passed the door fell on the floor and expired. He was about 60 years of age, and leaves a widow and family.

Guelph Farmer Killed.

GUELPH, May 22.—John Thring, a farmer living on the old David O'Connor farm, on the York road, half way between Guelph and Rockwood, met instant death yesterday afternoon in a tragic manner. Mr. Thring was engaged with his team of horses in drawing gravel to point on the Grand Trunk Railway for the grading of a new overhead bridge, and was about to dump his load when a freight train came along. The team took fright and ran away. Mr. Thring was thrown off and one of the hind wheels of the wagon passed over his neck, killing him instantly.

SHORT CIRCUITS.

Mission of the Fuse When the Wires Become Crossed.

"Another short circuit!"

One of the commonest reports heard in all electrical works.

A "short circuit" means that the electric wires have become crossed or connected so as to form a bypath or shunt of comparatively low resistance, through which so much of the electrical current passes as practically to cut out that part of the circuit through which the current originally flowed. In other words, a "short circuit" has replaced the normal circuit, which may be considered a long circuit. The cutting out of the resistance of the long line permits the power to rush over this path of low resistance, and if the apparatus were not protected by the fuse or circuit breaker the electrical machinery would do itself serious harm.

To prevent serious effects from accidental short circuits of electric lighting wires in buildings a "fuse" is inserted in the circuit just inside the building. In case a nail or some other falling object short circuits the electric wires in the house this fuse blows out—namely, melts out—and throws the circuit open so that no electricity can flow through the wires in the house until the "short" has been found and corrected.—New York World.

Made a King's Leg Shorter.

In "Random Recollections," by Caton Woodville, the English war artist, is a story about Edward VII. Woodville painted an equestrian portrait of the king, who, says the artist, was greatly pleased with it until he examined the legs.

"Oh, Mr. Woodville," he said, "what a pair of magnificent legs you have given me! They are simply splendid. But look at my short ones. You will have to make these in the portrait shorter."

"I pointed out," says Woodville in telling the yarn, "that in some of his photographs his legs appeared to be quite as long as I had painted them, but no argument could convince him. A piece had to come off, and it did."

Hildebrand's Gate.

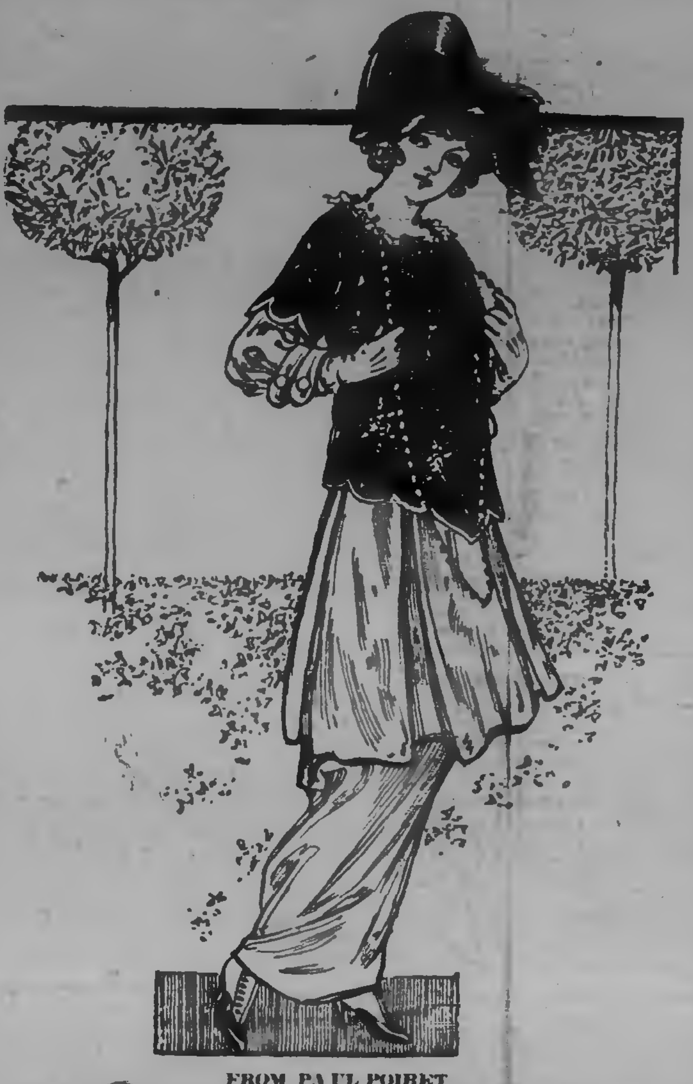
St. Paul by the Tiber, last of the Roman basilicas, which has been restored, has a great bronze gate inlaid with silver, presented in 1070 by the Roman Consul Pantaleo. His agent in ordering the gate was the archdeacon and the abbot of St. Paul, who happened to be in Constantinople, where metal inlayers alone could be found. The agent's name is inscribed on the gate, "Hildebrandus Venerabilis Monarchus et Archidiaconus." In 1070 the "venerable Hildebrand" did not mean much, but he became Pope Gregory VII.—Exchange.



FROM PAUL POIRET

Here is Paul Poirets interpretation of the spring mode, done in magenta, pussy willow taffeta and basque of figured moire faille, in an early Victorian mode. The peplum is a bit reminiscent of Poiret's minaret tunic, but is cut rounding to flare at the lower edge. The basque is separate from the skirt, but is attached at the top to the one piece lining that holds the narrow lower skirt and the under sleeves of the magneta taffeta.

UNFAMILIAR FACES OF HISTORICAL CHARACTERS OF WHOSE LOOKS WE KNOW ABSOLUTELY NOTHING

Many of the Famous Figures and Heroes of Colonial and Revolutionary Times Are as Blanks to us so Far as Their Personal Appearance is Concerned.

In the search for a portrait of Thomas Willett, the first mayor of New York, the committee from the City club visited nearly every print dealer in the city in addition to scores of private collectors of Americans. But there was no portrait to be found.

Any one who has ever attempted to make a collection of the pictures of the big men of early New York soon realizes that there are many blanks For instance, of the four Dutch governors Peter Stuyvesant is the only one of whom we have a correct portrait. Of Peter Minuet, William Kieft and Wouter van Twiller there is absolutely nothing accurate, although various caricatures have appeared from time to time.

The same is true of a still more eminent New Yorker, William Bradford, the first printer, who founded in 1725 the New York Gazette, which was the first newspaper printed in the province. Bradford was so prominent a man and so active for years, both in Philadelphia as well as in New York, that it is rather surprising not to have something worthy of being called a true portrait. If there was, perhaps his features might be on the tablet erected on the site of his printing office, now of the Cotton Exchange, at Hanover square.

The lack of an authentic portrait of Nathan Hale, the martyr spy of the Revolution, is somewhat better known, although the sculptors MacMonnies, Partridge and others have not allowed this to restrain them from depicting the features of the young soldier in stone or bronze. Of Colonel Ethan Allen there is no known portrait, and the same is true of the doughty warrior, General Nicholas Herkimer.

One of the heroes of Bunker hill, Colonel Richard Gridley, has left no portrait. He was the artillerist and engineer who built the fortifications the night before the battle. Other prominent Revolutionary fighters of whom no pictures exist are Colonel William Ledyard, the defender of New London, who was killed by a British officer when Ledyard surrendered the fort; General Thomas Conway, leader of the notorious cabal to depose Washington from the command of the army in 1777; Colonel Seth Warner, who was prominent in the attacks on Ticonderoga and Crown point and in the battle of Bennington; General Seth Pomeroy of Massachusetts, and General Samuel Holden Parsons, one of the board which tried Major Andre and was appointed by Washington as the first judge of the northwest territory.

No accurate portraits exist of two of the fifty-six signers of the Declaration of Independence, John Morton of Pennsylvania and John Hart of New Jersey, although a portrait which is said to be that of Hart hangs in Independence hall in Philadelphia and is said to have been painted from a miniature.

There is nothing extant of the father of George Washington, Augustine Washington, nor have any portraits been discovered of Colonel Ball, father of Mary Washington, mother of the general, or of John Dandridge, father of Washington's wife, Martha Washington.

A portrait which a great many collectors of old New York material would give a good deal to obtain is that of Samuel Fraunces, the West Indian tavern keeper, whose best known house was the old Fraunces' tavern, now owned by the Sons of the Revolution, restored since they purchased it a few years ago to its original condition. It is on lower Broad street, on the corner of Pearl street, and the famous long room in which Washington took farewell of his officers has been restored as closely as possible to its original form.

There is no portrait of William Cunningham, the heartless keeper of the provost jail in a corner of City Hall park during the Revolution. Betsy Ross, the celebrated maker of the first stars and stripes, has no portrait. Captain Miles Standish is among those who have left nothing of their personal appearance, nor is anything known of the intrepid French explorer Joliet, who traced the sources of the Mississippi.

Others of more or less note of whom there are no portraits are the old English dramatist, Christopher Marlowe; Richard Savage, another well known English dramatist, who died in 1743; Marquis Duquesne, from whom Fort Duquesne, now Pittsburgh, got its first name from the French; George Clinton, royal governor of New York from 1743 to 1753 and father of the British general in the Revolution, Henry Clinton; Colonel John Henry Cruger, General Oliver de Lancey, Governor William Tryon, General John Forbes, Baron Dieskau, General Robert Howe and Bourrienne, Napoleon's famous secretary, who wrote an excellent life of the great French emperor.—New York Times.

AVENGING DEAD BRITONS

Wars Over Murders in Foreign Lands.

The international pother over the death of Benton, the English ranchman who bearded Villa in his headquarters and suffered for his temerity, recalls the fact that unprovoked murders of British subjects in foreign lands seldom went long unpunished.

When, for instance, Chinese officials boarded the British vessel Arrow, hauled down the national flag, and killed her captain for daring to protest, Sir J. Bowring, governor of Hong Kong, declared war there and then, practically on his own initiative, and within a few weeks the Chinese fleet had been destroyed and Canton bombarded and burned. This happened in 1856.

In 1862, again, similar swift retribution overtook the murderer of Mr. Richardson, an English merchant living in Japan. Because he refused to prostrate himself in a street in Yokohama when the Prince of Satsuma happened to be passing with his suite he was brutally beaten to death by the prince's armed retainer's. Whereupon English warships bombarded Satsuma's town of Kagosima, burned his palace and sunk his steamers.

Britons were quick to draw the sword when the British empire was a-building. In some cases, even, outrages falling short of the actual taking of human life, have been followed by hostilities.

There was, for instance, the conflict which was known in semi-derision as the "War of Jenkins' Ear."

Jenkins was a merchant captain whose vessel was boarded by a Spanish guardship, and in the course of a scrimmage that ensued Jenkins' ear was cut off. "You'll hear more of this!" yelled the angry master mariner, and he caused the severed ear to be smoke-dried and cured, much as if it had been a kipper or a haddock.

In this state it was exhibited to the members of the House of Commons who passed it from hand to hand with a great show of gravity, and many expressions of sympathy. Afterward an apology and a money indemnity were demanded, and, neither being forthcoming, war ensued.

Not infrequently, however, "money talks" in these international disputes, as in private ones. There was the case of Major Lothaire and Mr. Stokes, which created such tremendous excitement in the spring of 1896. Stokes was an Englishman engaged in trading for ivory in the Congo Free State, and he was arrested by Major Lothaire, a Belgian officer, on a charge of gun running and inciting the natives to rebel, and, after a summary trial by drumhead court martial, was hanged.

The British Government insisted on Lothaire being brought to trial, and this was done. In fact, he was tried twice, once at Boma, and again at Brussels, and each time he was acquitted. Whereat public indignation in England blazed up afresh, and with tenfold force.

However, a war with Belgium being unthinkable—it would have set all Europe by the ears—England compromised matters on the usual money indemnity basis, the sum of $30,000 being handed over by the Belgian Government to the next of kin of the dead man.

Sorry He Spoke.

Some time ago, on a certain inspection day Sir John Fisher had a very amusing experience. Somehow he got separated from his official friends, and at last lost his way. He wandered about and eventually came upon a workman gently hammering a piece of iron outside one of the workshops. "Are the Lords of the Admiralty about here?" asked Sir John.

"No fear, matey," said the man, who did not know his rather carelessly-dressed inquisitor. "I'm here doin' crow for 'em!"

"Crow! What's that?"

"What, don't yer know? Inside this 'ere shed my mates is a takin' of it easy. When I sees some one that don't matter I knocks soft like now. But when I sees old 'Jacky' Fisher I knocks like blazes, and when old 'Jacky' pokes his nose inside they're workin' like blazes, too, See?"

"Jacky" Fisher did see, and crow-shooting was begun in the dockyards that day.

Dr. Johnson's Spelling.

Dr. Johnson's ignorance of derivations led him to absurdities of spelling that were admitted even by Boswell. Dr. Johnson's methods in tracing etymologies were of the simplest. "This is a great work, sir," said Dr. Adams to him. "How are you to get all the etymologies?" "Why, sir," replied Johnson, "here is a shelf with Junius and Skinner and others, and there is a Welsh gentleman who has published a collection of Welsh proverbs who will help me with the Welsh." And so the famous dictionary was written, with little assistance from the learned, as the dictionary maker himself complained. That little came from a man who sent him a list of thirty derivations.

SAID PASHA LAST GREAT LINK WITH OLD REGIME

Veteran Politician Was a Remarkable Man in Many Ways, and Although the Inferior of Kiamil Pasha He Stood Out in the Limelight in Dramatic Fashion—Recalled Several Times.

Said Pasha, one of the most remarkable politicians that Turkey ever produced, has passed away, and the last notable link that bound the new regime to the old has been broken. Said Pasha's name is known to the world for two very good reasons, the more important being that it is easily spelt and confidently mispronounced. Perhaps he was not so great a man as Kiamil Pasha, who died not long ago, and who was his associate, as well as his master in Oriental diplomacy, but it was his fortune to be the man of the hour in two or three of the most dramatic situations in the modern history of Turkey. Originally called to high office in order that he might frustrate the plans of the patriots who desired to give Turkey some sort of decent government, he left the service of the Sultan, whose cruelty and viciousness disgusted him. Recalled again by the Young Turks, he seemed to betray them when preparing the constitution. Yet again when they were in straits they called him back, and upon him and Kiamil Pasha they relied for guidance in those days of stress and trial that led to the war with Italy.

Said Pasha was born in Armenia, and when a young man entered the service of the Turkish Government. Though he held several posts prior to his sudden elevation to be First Secretary to Hamid, they were of an unimportant character. How the new Sultan heard of Said Pasha is not clear, but he must have been pretty well informed when at a critical moment he called him to his side in 1876. At that time it appeared that Turkey was about to experience a renaissance of liberty and material prosperity. Midhat Pasha, who is the real father of the Young Turk movement, was the most powerful influence in Turkey under the Sultan, whose Ministers were ready to join him in a demand for a liberal constitution. Abdul Aziz was ready to sign it when a series of tragic events threw back the cause for thirty years. The Sultan committed suicide, and a Turkish officer ran amok in Midhat's home, where were gathered several of the Ministers to discuss the situation. He killed two of them, and for a few months confusion reigned in Constantinople.

The heir-apparent was Murad, but he showed signs of mental weakness, and Abdul Hamid began actively conspiring to occupy the throne. The Ministers, led by Midhat Pasha, believed that in this young prince lay the hope of Turkey. They approached him, and found that he was profuse in professions of devotion to the cause of liberty and in promises of reform if he became Sultan. In proof of his earnestness he signed a document in which among other things he agreed that Sadullah Bey, a noted reformer, should be his First Secretary. Soon afterward Murad was confined in a castle, and Abdul Hamid became Sultan. One of the first acts was to repudiate the promise to appoint a reformer as his First Secretary. Instead he brought Said Pasha to the front, and gave him this post. He proved himself worthy of the confidence reposed in him, and won not only the respect of the Sultan, but of foreign diplomats. The result was that at the close of the Turco-Russian war, when Europe demanded reforms in Turkey, Said Pasha was made Grand Vizier and entrusted with the task of carrying them out.

However, it was no part of the Sultan's plans to have the reforms introduced, and the palace clique soon made things so unpleasant for Said Pasha that he retired, and for thirteen years lived quietly on his estate. When the Sultan found himself deserted by his friends, with the Young Turks knocking upon his castle walls, he remembered Said Pasha, and he was suddenly recalled and was appointed to preside over the final assembly when the new and the old regime met for the last time. The council was in doubt what course to pursue. From all parts of the country came rumors of insurrections; whether they were for or against the Sultan nobody seemed to know. Then Abdul Houda, the old court astrologer, was carried into the council chamber upon a litter. He was asked for his advice, and instead of giving it proceeded to tell each member what was in his own mind. Most of them were for the disposition of the Sultan, though none dared say it. There was a silence.

Then Said Pasha said: "Silence gives consent." So it was decided, and at once the news was sent to Abdul Hamid. Having presided over the last council of the old regime, Said Pasha was asked to become Grand Vizier under the new. He consented. To him was entrusted the task of drawing up a form of constitution for the new Sultan to sign. It was found that in this document, instead of following instructions, he had left the appointment of the Minister of War and the Minister of Marine in the hands of the Sultan. Since these were the two departments most notorious for bribery and corruption the constitution had provided that they should be filled by nominees of the Grand Vizier. The Young Turks felt that they had almost been betrayed and Said Pasha retired in disgrace. Two years later, however, he was called again, and while he and Kiamil Pasha lived it was to them more than to any of their own leaders that the Young Turks looked for counsel.

MAN'S TWO MINDS.

To Make an Evenly Balanced Person Both Must Be Used.

Expounding a theory that man has two minds, or a double consciousness—objective and subjective—Mgr. Benson has compared the two activities to an upper and a lower room separated by a trapdoor. Dreams are due to the subjective consciousness working without check from the objective consciousness.

The man who usually claims to have an evenly balanced mind is the one who has shut the trapdoor and remains in the upper room, and those who have closed the trapdoor and remain in the lower rooms are commonly found in lunatic asylums.

The man of really even balance either remains between the two rooms or keeps the trapdoor well oiled.

Napoleon, in the lower room, conceived ideas for ruling Europe and in the upper room put his ideas into practice; Raphael created combinations of colors and then expressed them on canvas, and Beethoven in the lower room composed his sonatas and in the upper room reproduced the notes on paper.

The events of childhood are remarkably clear in the recollection of very old people, though present happenings are forgotten. This may be explained by the decay of the objective consciousness, and it is curious that as this decays the subjective consciousness becomes more acute.—New York Press.

THE RIGHT LINES FOR A DANCE FROCK.

There is nothing so pretty and so appropriate for the dance frock as this accordeon pleated indestructible voile which gives the proper close line about the feet and yet plenty of play for dancing. This sort of sheer skirt can be hung over another of accordeon pleated silk or a plain one that is slashed. The arrangement of the lace and flowers on the skirt gives a drapery that is unobstrusive in dancing. The corsage of lace is simply hung in Greek lines and held with a girdle of Roman striped ribbon in pink and yellow.

SLOPPINESS IN PROPER STYLE.

The newest modes are "sloppy" in effect, loose and suggesting a figure line only in the most uncorseted way. Hence the modishness of this afternoon suit of cactus green premo, a mohair material so woven with wool that it has the desired softness and drapability. The smart high belt line emphasizes the flare of the coat and the skirt peplum; while in the high back and the low front of the collar and the long pointed vest there is ultra style.

HOG TYING A LONGHORN.

Catching, Tripping and Roping a Steer in Twenty-seven Seconds.

To rope, "bust" and "hog tie" a wild Texas longhorn single handed in two minutes is a sport which represents the daily work of the range. Men of quick eye and steady nerve each start their fifty feet behind the longhorn, which may jump the arena fence like a deer and again and again dodge when it hears the first swish of the rope. The rope often breaks on the tautening, or the saddle may slip, as in the case of Bill Mahaffey, who landed on his head with foot caught in the stirrup and but for the splendidly trained cow pony might have been dragged and killed.

There goes Cuba Crutchfield! He overtakes his sister. Swish, swish! His lariat zips through the air—a beautiful throw over the horns. Then the cow pony braces, and the rope tightens like a harp string. Watching, anticipating every move of his horned adversary, the cowboy now circles the animal so that the rope is brought from the horns around the hind legs. A word, and the knowing pony makes a sudden start. Thud, and the steer is tripped or "busted." The rope tautens, and the rider is already running afoot with a short cord in hand toward the steer, depending for his own safety on his trained cow pony to hold that rope taut and the steer in position. With marvelous dexterity he "hog ties" with a number of half hitches looped about the hind feet and one forefoot of the steer. The man stands erect, raises both arms in the air, and Crutchfield has not only won the steer roping championship, but has ridden down, roped, thrown and hog tied a steer in twenty-seven seconds, within six seconds of the best record ever made.—World's Work.

Rum Beggers, These.

Hon. George E. Foster has come out as a champion of the lowly molasses. He thinks if the people of Canada would eat molasses more and "pate de fois gras" less, there would not be so much talk of the high cost of living. During the discussion in the Commons recently of the mail service between Canada and the West Indies, Mr. Foster added that it would bring the Canadian consumer into close touch with the good old-fashioned molasses of those islands. "I remember," said the grizzled Conservative veteran, "the taste of those molasses from my boyhood days to this minute, and I always respect the man who likes molasses."

"That's quite a rum taste" put in Robert Bickerdike, slyly, at which gentle touch the high priest of temperance smiled and pulled his Fosterian whiskers.

VIOLINISTS UNMASKED.

Edison Tells the Secret of How They Strike the Right Note.

Thomas A. Edison, who has an expert knowledge of every known musical instrument, from the oboe to the aeolian harp, was discussing the great violinists of the present age. He spoke with deep feeling.

"I have to admit," he declared sadly, "that for a long time those fellows had me completely bewildered. I used to watch them in amazement. Every time one of them shot a finger halfway down the neck of his fiddle and stopped it in exactly the right place for the sounding note I gasped in astonishment. Every time, it seemed, he could stop that finger correctly within one-thousandth of an inch. That's what he had to do in order to make the right note. And I concluded that he and his fellows were in some way superior to all other kinds of people in the matter of judging distances.

"But I know better now. After long and careful observation I have discovered the truth. Those fellows shoot their fingers up and down with an air of great confidence, but they never know exactly where the fingers will stop. Like any other human being, they guess at it. Then just as the note is begun by the scraping of the bow their trained ears catch the defect, and they readjust their fingers. Consequently, although the public doesn't know it, the great violin geniuses of the world fill their work with a lot of notes that start falsely."—Popular Magazine.

A Change That Worked.

Little Alice was writing invitations for her birthday party and had been instructed by her mother to write the sentence "Please bring no presents" at the bottom of each invitation.

The little guests arrived at the appointed time, but each came with a gift for the hostess.

"No, mamma; I put in every single letter of that note. I only changed the 'no' the least little bit."

The note read, "Please bring on presents."—Ladies' Home Journal.

When the vicar returned home one of his daughters, her eyes red with weeping, said:

"Where's the widow you married, father?"

"Oh, I married her to another man. I ought to have told you that."—London Telegraph.

Won't it be fine
To shine
For two weeks as a millionaire
And make the ladies stare—
In short,
To be the real old sport
That throws down a two dollar bill
For a cigar or a soda
And gathers the change in his mitt
Without counting it?
Gee!
But, between you and me,
It takes saving in advance,
Eliminating the song and dance
And living on bread and butter
To cut 'er.
Wow!
Can't think of wasting money on the necessities of life
Now!
Dodge the butcher
And the grocer.
Say "No, sir,"
Firmly, but politely,
To the tailor man.

TWO WOMEN SAVED FROM OPERATIONS

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—Their Own Stories Here Told.

Edmonton, Alberta, Can. — "I think it is no more than right for me to thank you for what your kind advice and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound have done for me.

"When I wrote to you some time ago I was a very sick woman suffering from female troubles. I had organic inflammation and could not stand or walk any distance. At last I was confined to my bed, and the doctor said I would have to go through an operation, but this I refused to do. A friend advised Lydia E. LONDON, May 22.—Some days ago Princess Ludwig of Lowensteinwertheim, who takes the greatest interest in flying, approached Mr. Handley Page, the aeronautical engineer, and asked if she could book a passage by air to France for yesterday as she had to be in Paris for several social engagements. At 7.30 yesterday morning the princess took her seat in a 100 h.p. biplane at Hendon, and started the flight to France. At 9.45 the biplane descended at Eastbourne to await the lifting of the thick Channel fog. In the afternoon they resumed their trip, crossing the Channel in fifteen minutes.

M'CAULEY RETIRES.

Celebrated Edmonton Pioneer Lays Down Active Work.

Matthew McCauley, first mayor of the town of Edmonton in 1892, serving three terms, and who was captain of the Vigilants in territorial days, has resigned as warden of the Alberta Penitentiary, to pass the evening of his eventful life in less strenuous endeavors. He has amassed a fortune from real estate and industrial investments in and near Edmonton. He has been in the employ of the Dominion Government for eight years, and leaves the service with the most kindly feelings.

Mr. McCauley is one of the oldest of the pioneers of Edmonton, settling in the present capital of Alberta in the '80's, when what is now the home of 70,000 people, was a fur-trading post. He made the trip from Winnipeg to Edmonton in a dog-sled, and experienced all the hardships of the winter trail. He was a leader in the affairs of the community in those days and was active in all its undertakings, such as preventing the Government from moving the land titles office and dealing with claim jumpers. He was successful in all things.

The land titles office in those days was a mere shack, but it served its purpose. One day the Government decided that Strathcona, on the south bank of the Saskatchewan river, now part of Edmonton, would be a better location, and its men started to carry out orders by moving the office. They placed the building upon a dray, to which were hitched two teams of the strongest horses in the town. McCauley and several of the old-timers were quickly on the spot. The first named cut the harness and the others plied the whip, with the result that the horses ran away, leaving the dray and the land titles office on the spot. It was not moved.

When McCauley reached Edmonton from Winnipeg the settlers of Northern Alberta were being troubled by claim-jumpers. There was more or less of this along the bank of the Saskatchewan river, which bisects the city. The method of dealing with claim-jumpers was to push their shacks off the property and then hurl them over the embankment.

On one occasion the claim-jumper defied the Government and the settlers. He remained in his shack until it was about to roll down the river bank. McCauley, who superintended operations, entered the shack, warned the man of what was to take place, and told him to come out. Just before the shack began to totter on the hill top he again entererd the building with a second warning. The claim-jumper then dashed out of the house barely in time to escape descending the hill inside his shack.

This treatment served as a warning to others and law and order was established in a short time. The Vigilants, which included the foremost men in the village, did not cease their activities until the claim-jumpers became good citizens or left the place.

McCauley also mustered in a number of residents of the northwest territories during the Riel Rebellion, but the fact was the fighting did not extend to this place. Many northern residents were kept in readiness for any trouble that might arise, and the old fort in the shadow of the Parliament Buildings was rebuilt for that purpose.

After serving three years in the capacity of chief magistrate of the town of Edmonton, McCauley was connected with a cartage company for fifteen years, and after that he became warden of the penitentiary. Since assuming charge of the Alberta prisoners he always became acquainted with even the most hardened criminals confined to his care.

If she trusts all men she is shy of experience.

Did Not Remove Stone In Bladder GIN PILLS Passed it.

JOLIETTE, P. Q. CANADA.

"During August last, I went to Montreal to consult a specialist as I had been suffering terribly with Stone In The Bladder. He decided on an operation and was assisted by another doctor. They said the calculus was larger than a bean and too hard to crush and they could not take it out.

I returned home suffering greatly and did not know what to do but was recommended by a friend to try GIN PILLS. I bought a box and found relief from the pain at once. I took a second and third box of GIN PILLS after which I went back to the specialist. He told me the calculus was reduced in size, still he could not relieve me of it although he tried for two and a half hours.

I returned home again and continued to take GIN PILLS as they reduced the pain very much, but I did not expect that they would relieve me of the stone but to my great joy, I passed the stone on October 3rd., and am now a well man and very happy.

I am sending the stone in to you so that you can see for yourself what a great work GIN PILLS did for me. GIN PILLS are the best medicine in the world and because they did so much for me, I will recommend them all the rest of my life."

J. ALBERT LESSARD.

What glorious news to those who are almost going insane from the pain of Stone In The Bladder! Here is ease and comfort! Here is relief! To preserve eggs—Pour 6 quarts of boiling water on to 3 lbs. of fine lime, 1 oz. of cream of tartar and ½ lb. of salt. When quite cold pour this over fresh eggs, carefully arranged in jars, and see that all are covered. Tie over with paper and stand on a shelf in the larder or in a cool storeroom.

For curly bacon cut it very thin and half cook it in boiling water, then cut it, fasten in shape with a toothpick and broil it over the fire.

To remove machine oil from materials in which the colors might run, use cold water to which has been added a teaspoonful of ammonia. Then wash with soap.

AN IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT

Regarding Canadian Pacific Change of Time, May 31st

In connection with the opening change of time on the Canadian Pacific Railway, effective May 31st, many improvements in train service has been made, notable among these being the inauguration of solid de luxe trains, carrying compartment-library-observation car, electric-lighting standard sleepers, together with standard dining car service between Montreal-Toronto-Detroit, Chicago, via Canadian Pacific and Michigan Central Railroad, commencing westbound May 31st and eastbound June 1st.

These palatial trains will be known as No. 19 and No. 22, the former leaving Montreal 8.45 a.m. arriving Toronto 5.40 p.m. leaving Toronto 6.10 p.m. arriving London 9.15 p.m. leaving London 9.23 p.m. arriving Windsor 12.10 a.m. leaving Windsor 12.25 a.m. arriving Detroit 11.35 p.m. (central time), leaving Detroit 11.55 p.m. arriving Chicago 7.45 a.m.

Train No. 22 will leave Chicago 9.30 a.m. (central time) arrive Detroit 3.55 p.m. leave Detroit 5.05 p. m. (eastern time) arrive Windsor 5.15 p.m. leave Windsor 5.25 p.m. arrive London 8.10 p.m. leave London 8.18 p.m. arrive Toronto 11.20 p.m. leave Toronto 11.40 p.m. arrive Montreal 9.00 a.m. These two trains will be operated through the Michigan tunnel between Windsor and Detroit.

The new Toronto-Winnipeg-Vancouver service should be greatly appreciated by the travelling public. No. 3, now leaving Toronto 10.20 p. m. will leave at 5.40 p.m. running through solid to Winnipeg and Vancouver, carrying only the highest class equipment.

New train known as No. 7, will leave Toronto 10.50 p.m. running through solid to Winnipeg, carrying standard sleeping cars, dining car, tourist sleeping cars, colonist cars, first-class coaches, etc. Equally good service returning from the West. Particulars from Canadian Pacific Ticket Agents, or M. G. Murphy, district Passenger Agent, Toronto.

Interrupted the Firing.

It is told of Lieutenant General Leonidas Polk of the Confederate army that he rode into the midst of an Indiana regiment late in the evening at Perryville. He had observed a body of men firing upon his troops and supposed that those firing were Confederates and were shooting by mistake. He rode over that way to order the firing to cease and found himself confronted by a Hoosier colonel. General Polk wore a dark blouse, and the dusk of the evening saved him. He was asked as to his identity when he ordered the firing to stop, but, making a threat to show them who he was, rode away. As soon as he reached a copse of wood he put spurs to his horse and rapidly drew away.

FANCY BUCKLES.

Costly Jeweled Effects Are Popular For Evening Slippers.

Evening slippers are all of the most elaborate type, and one might well ask, Were they ever before so beautiful! Jeweled buckles and even cameos ornament the toes of satin evening shoes, which harmonize so beautifully with the costume that they are really a part of it.

Women who are interested in dressy styles will find attractive designs in the shops. Sandals with jeweled straps and heavy oriental instep ornaments will appeal to those who make much of their boudoir gowns.

Women who go in for extremes will wear them without stockings, but the more conservative wear gauze silk hose in either flesh color or in a color that harmonizes with the boudoir gown.

POTATO AND OLIVE SALAD.

Cut into dice four good sized boiled potatoes and add fifteen stoned olives cut into good sized pieces and two hard boiled eggs also cut up. Sprinkle with salt, olive oil and vinegar and fold together, set on ice for an hour, add half a cupful of stiff mayonnaise, cover with what is left and put a few rings of olives on top. This can be made very attractive nicely arranged on a bed of lettuce leaves.

COOKING LETTUCE.

A Useful Vegetable That May Be Prepared In Many Ways.

The succulent lettuce is a vegetable of much adaptability. Of course as the basis of a salad it always has been and always will be invaluable. As a garnish for cold meats it will always stand first among vegetable decorations, but it also has many other possibilities.

Take several heads of heavy lettuce and boil them in gently simmering water. When done place in lengths on hot plates, pour over a brown sauce to which has been added tomato, and the result is a most delicate vegetable.

Another way is to cut out a little of the heart of the lettuce, placing in the hollow thus made a tomato. Cook until tender and then serve with a brown gravy.

A very pretty way to serve lettuce is to take a perfect head and curl back the leaves. Place under the lower leaves cucumbers cut in slices, under the next leaves slices of tomato and nearer the top a few nuts finely ground. Serve with salad dressing.

Quebec-Levis Railway Ferry.

The new car ferry that will transport railway trains across the St. Lawrence river, between Quebec and Levis, is not only equipped as an ice-breaker, but has a tidal deck, which can be raised or lowered within a range of 20 feet. This tidal deck has three lengths of track, each 270 feet long, and is capable of carrying a train of 1,400 tons weight. The craft was built in England for the Canadian Government.

Upholds Bread Sale.

Justice McPhillips, of the Appeal Court of British Columbia, in quashing a judgment in which a baker had been fined $10 and costs for selling two loaves of brown bread on Sunday, said: "In my opinion this was a prosecution that ought never to have been brought. Bread is a necessity. In the greatest of all prayers the Master taught us to say: 'Give us this day our daily bread.'"

If you cannot in the jungle,
Where the grass is rank and high,
Slay the monarch of the forest,
You at least can kill a fly
And in manner brave, but modest,

And severely wring its neck.

If you cannot beard the grizzly
In the fastness of its cave,
Cutting off its young existence,
And be listed with the brave,
You can throttle a mosquito
When it comes around to sing,
Teaching it some better manners
If you can but catch the thing.

If you cannot from the ocean
Pull the man devouring shark,
Leaving it to rot untended,
And be home again by dark,
You can exercise your talents
And be useful round the house.
If you think of nothing better,
Set a trap and catch a mouse.

In larger fields of conquest
You may be a dub for fair,
Missing all of the excitement
That the poets say is there.
In the little wayside corners
Is your place to stand the test.
You can always wash the dishes
When the madam needs a rest.

THE NEW KNOX.

Presbyterian College To Have Beautiful Home This Fall.

When next fall the new Knox College is opened in Toronto the Presbyterians of Ontario will be able to boast the possession of the finest example of collegiate Gothic architecture in Canada, and that they have added a new note to the beauty of the University College campus group. The general plan of the building is on the type of Oxford and Cambridge colleges, built on a quadrangle, one frontage on St. George street and one on the campus of the university.

The general division is that the academic portion faces on the campus and the residence on St. George street. The academic part includes the Caven Library, six class rooms, eight professors' rooms and a stock room to accommodate 75,000 volumes. In addition there is a great reading-room and a reference library where students can work unmolested.

The southern part of the academic portion is the chapel and convocation hall with a seating capacity of 500 people. Beneath the chapel is the gymnasium and shower baths, affording the student opportunities for physical development, which must go hand in hand with the spiritual. The residence part is made up of dormitories, and accommodates 120 students who wish to reside at the college. The dining hall is situated upstairs on the north end of the residential portion, and will accommodate 160 men. Beneath the dining hall are the stewards' quarters, and below them is the kitchen, storeroom, etc.

Between the dormitory and the dining hall rises the tower. It is very distinctive, being the only one of its kind in Canada. The nearest approach to it is the tower of Magdalen College at Oxford. In the tower is the great staircase, students' common room and reading rooms. In the top of the tower in an isolated position there will be an infirmary. The large house north of residence utilized as principal's residence, was once the home of Sir John A. Macdonald and afterward the residence of Sir Oliver Mowat.

The buildings will cost $550,000, apart from furnishings. The sale of the old site provided for the new site and gave $100,000 to the new building. $450,000 had to be raised from the church. Already $350,000 has been subscribed and it will not be difficult to get $100,000 more from the many friends of Knox in Toronto and in the province.

Knox College was born and cradled in a very humble home, and its early youth was sheltered in very commonplace surroundings. In 1844 the first session was held in the residence of Rev. Henry Esson on James street, Toronto. The second was held in a house on Adelaide street, and from 1848 to 1853 in a building on Front street, which is at present the site of the Queen's Hotel. In 1854 a site was purchased on Grosvenor street, called Elmsley Villa, the residence of Lord Elgin in Toronto, while he was Governor-General. This building with the wing added for students' residence cost the church $28,000. This remained the home of the college till 1875, when the college building on Spadina crescent was opened. This was erected at a cost of $120,000.

On September 26th, nineteen hundred and twelve, the corner-stone of the new building was laid.

His Waterloo.

In years gone by there was an election crook well known in certain circles in Canada who had a reputation of having voted sixty-five times in a single day, says a writer in Toronto Star Weekly.

One day he met his Waterloo. It was bound to arrive. He crossed to Hamilton to assist the Greys in a very critical election, and had succeeded up to about four o'clock in the afternoon in registering twenty or twenty-five ballots marked with the names of absentees, or dead people. Then some unlucky imp of fate prompted him to select the name "J. Jones" from his list of deceased voters. With that on his lips he entered the polling booth. "What name, please?" asked the returning officer. "J. Jones," answered Boulanger boldly.

Down the book ran the officer's finger and paused over an entry.

"James Jones, colored," he announced in good clear Saxon.

"Good night," yelled Boulanger and plunged from the booth. The scrutineers scurried dow tnhe road, towards the railway at the impersonator's heels. By some special blessing a freight train was moving out at a pretty good clip and Boulanger clambered aboard. No one dared follow, and he arrived safely at the outskirts of Toronto where he prudently made his way home.

A New Candidate.

A vacancy has existed for several months in the County Court Judgeship of Renfrew, and there has been much pressure brought to bear on the Government regarding certain aspirants. One thing insisted upon by the Minister of Justice is that the man chosen shall not be too old. A short time ago Mr. Gerald White, who sits for North Renfrew in Parliament, had an addition to his household in the form of a big bouncing boy. One of his friends congratulating him thereon remarked:

"Why, Gerald, he will be right in line for the judgeship."

"Yes," replied White, "and by the time he is of age I expect the Governmetn will be about ready to fill the vacancy!"

World's Largest Telescope.

A leading citizen of Vancouver has made arrangements to erect a medium telescope 10 feet in diameter at or near Point Gray, close to Vancouver. It will be the largest telescope in the world, the lens having a thickness of two feet or more.

NO SLUMS IN NEW YORK.

Verdict of an Expert After a Search Through the City.

I have made an amazing discovery. It is the result of three days and nights of going to and fro in New York—sometimes alone and sometimes with a wise but not cynical detective. And the amazing and disconcering discovery is this: There are no slums in New York.

You can find crime and criminals; you can find vice, poverty, drunkenness, disease, but you cannot find a slum—such slums as blacken and fester in Antwerp, Genoa, Naples, Paris, London and many another old world city. The reason is that you cannot have a slum without filth, and New York is a clean city. Neither crime nor poverty nor crowds make a slum. You must have filth as well, and that is what New York hasn't got. I looked for it east and west and north, from river front to river front. Everywhere, anywhere, were crime, vice, mean poverty. Everywhere thieves, rogues, outcasts, men and women isolated from their kind by sin or mere suffering, but no slums.

Dirt, of course, is relative, but the tenements—even the old nests of low houses lined with fire escapes—were habitable human dwelling places. And the night going detective declared he could show me nothing worse. I wanted to see the fetid caves where wretchedness lay moaning on garbage heaps, the windy garrets where it starved, and there were no fetid caves.

In the old streets and the dingy courts of Paris you can still find hundreds of them; you have but to walk peeringly through the street of the Three Gates or the street of the Iron Pot; you have but to go into the suburbs that lie outside the fortifications—for year by year the centrifugal force that stirs in every great agglomeration of human atoms has thrown Parisian beggardom into that dreary circumference.

But in the washed and lighted underworld of New York there are no slums. There is not one slum that half deserves the name. Wretchedness all you please; hunger in the streets and on the housetops, it may be, but none of those gangrened holes of filth without which no real slum can exist.

I speak almost with the decision of an expert, for I spent many years prowlingly investigating the slums that rot and blacken the surface of Europe from Moscow to Lisbon.—

A Good Reason.

"See here!" cried Close crossly. "Why do you persist in bothering me for money in this way?"

"I suppose," replied his wife, "it's because I can't think of a better way."

Result of Early Training.

"Poor fellow! He doesn't know how to treat people."

"What could you expect? He was raised in a prohibition state."

Just on Trial.

We know that wealth is not worth while,
But under certain circumstances
Perhaps we might accept a pile
And take our chances.

Helps a Lot.

"He couldn't see the point of my best joke."

"You should have thrown in a cigar."

Why He Was Confident.

"You seem to think you are right."

"I know I am."

"You have a great regard for your own ability, haven't you?"

"Not at all—merely an expensive lawyer."

Hersy.

"She drove him to drink."

"Didn't need a curb bit either, did she?"

There may have been such a thing as original sin, but most sin on exhibition is distressingly unoriginal.

A perfectly good lie sometimes fails to serve its purpose.

When women get the ballot probably a way of sending laggard husbands home automatically will be discovered and made legal.

WEALTH OF HAIR

Parisian Sage Makes Thin Lifeless Hair Soft and Abundant.

Beautiful hair, fluffy, lustrous, abundant and free from dandruff, is one of woman's greatest charms—it's her main delight—yet so many of the fair sex who would be most attractive but for their streaked, thin and lifeless hair, go on thinking there is no remedy. Quickly put aside such thoughts. Beautiful hair is largely a matter of a little care and attention. Parisian Sage rubbed into the scalp and applied to the hair with a sponge or cloth will work wonders. Do it daily for a week, then occasionally, and you will be surprised and delighted with the result—not only will the hair become abundant, soft, fluffy, radiant with life, but really doubly beautiful.

Parisian Sage supplies hair and scalp needs. It surely removes dandruff with one application and cleanses the hair of all dirt and excessive oil. It is not sticky or greasy, is delicately perfumed and contains nothing to injure the hair or scalp. All drug and toilet counters sell it in fifty cent bottles. Look for the trade mark—"The Girl with the Auburn Hair."

Delighted users pronounce Parisian Sage the best, most pleasant and invigorating hair tonic made. Try at least one bottle. The Warne Drug Co. will refund the money if you are not satisfied.

SPECIAL CORNER FOR AFTER DINNER READERS

LINGERIE COLLARS.

The Season's Charming Styles Favor Long Necked Women.

A new collar, which covers much of the front of the figure from the neck to belt, will prove a genuine boon to the office girl, who goes straight from her downtown dinner to the theater. Its foundation is a four inch band of lace or embroidery fitted with darts to lie smoothly across the back and the shoulders and terminating in rounded scallops six inches above the waist line.

Bordering this band is a frill of plaited net or swiss, so broad at the shoulders that it extends well beyond them, but tapering to a mere thread at its ends. A second strip of plaited material, twice as deep as that on the shoulders, starts under the points and forms a wide jabot that covers the top of the girdle.

NEW NET COLLARS.

Some women—those whose necks are long and abnormally thin—add a high medici collar in the plaited material that ends in points just behind the ears. They attach this collar to a band of black velvet narrow ribbon, tied in front in a tiny bow. If the medici collar is not becoming and one prefers to veil the throat a stock and guimpe in white malines may be added.

The high collars of net illustrated here are wired to keep them in shape. They are mounted on net yokes which may be slipped inside the blouse.

One of the interesting developments of the spring styles is the blouse of chiffon or crêpe de chine which shows a little tucked vest of organdie or linen, with a folding or flaring organdie or linen collar.

The linen collar and cuffs are features of many of the street suits of taffeta, gabardine, serge and other heavy fabrics. The collar is made in many fashions, so that one becoming to every type of face can be found.

Black lace collars are seen on some of the evening frocks of white or light colored silk and satin. They have much dignity, perhaps not quite in keeping with some of the present styles, but good nevertheless.

Lettuce will keep crisp some days if washed and put into a cheese cloth bag and hung where it gets a current of cold air.

All Will Wear Khaki.

The Canadian troops will go into camp in khaki uniforms this year. This marks the passing away of the various uniforms which used to mark the annual training camps. In the past it was here a red coat, there an artillery man in blue with red stripes, the cavalry in dark blue with white or yellow stripes, the rifle regiments in black, the engineers in scarlet coats with plush trimmings, and so on. This is to be all changed and the corps will go into camp in the khaki uniforms only.

Lemon Tree Amid Frosts.

Mrs. Aaron Dennis, half a mile east of Burgessville, Ont., has amongst her collection of house plants a rare curiosity which she values very highly. It is a healthy lemon plant growing from a good-sized flowering pot. Its stalks are liberally supplied with needle-shaped prickles like those on our thorn trees and are over an inch in length. A year ago it blossomed, and now bears two large, well developed ripe lemons of a color almost as deep as an orange.

HELD BACK BY DEADLY ANAEMIA

Thousands of Growing Girls Yearly Fall Into a Hopeless Decline

Anaemia—the doctor's name for bloodlessness—holds back many girls from the path to bright, healthy womanhood. At that all-important time when their veins should be full of rich, red blood, anaemia, creeping on them stealthily, robs them of sparkling eyes and a clear skin. They become languid and exhausted at the least exertion, their backs ache, their hearts palpitate violently, appetite fails, and their complexion changes to a pasty yellow, or they become deathly white. No medicine ever offered the public has bestowed such important benefits upon anaemic girls as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They build up the body anew by making the rich, red blood that gives splendid health, bright eyes, a clear complexion and womanly brightness. Here is an instance out of many recorded thousands. Miss Delina Arsenault, Urbainville, P.E.I., says: "I suffered from an attack of anaemia which my friends feared at one time would prove fatal. I grew thinner every day, had dark circles around my eyes, could not sleep well at night and got up in the morning feeling tired and depressed. I suffered severely from headaches and pains in the back and limbs. I had to leave school, and was unable to do any work around the house. I had no appetite and frequently vomited when I did eat. I was under a doctor's care for eight months, but was growing worse and worse, and was almost in despair, when a friend advised me to give Dr. William's Pink Pills a trial. Anxious to get well, I decided to do so. After taking a few boxes I found a good improvement, and I continued taking the Pills until I had used nine boxes, when I was again enjoying perfect health, and I found on weighing myself that I had gained seventeen pounds. I have since enjoyed perfect health, for which I have to thank Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and strongly advise all other ailing girls to give this medicine a fair trial."

Every girl afflicted with anaemia, every woman who suffers from backaches and sideaches, and the other miseries that afflict her sex can secure new health and strength through a fair use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

WHEN THE GEESE GO NORTH.

A Study In the Wild Life of Canada's Marsh Lands.

"Honkey-honk, honkey-honk, honkey-honk." At the sound the marsh grasses stir, the sullen ice groans and moves slowly out on the current that has mastered it, the drab marsh-scape assumes a look of waking life.

The cries of the frantic voyagers grow up closer, more distinct through the lifting dawn, until that speeding wedge stands out against a background of rosy mauve; closer, closer, until the whining whistle of strong wings comes to the watcher, and between the long-drawn notes of the wild birds he hears the little muttered calls of assurance from the leader and the low answers of his followers.

That watchful old gander has piloted his flock many long leagues in search of the big, northern marsh field, and the flock has followed him trustingly as all day long, day by day, he has formed the apex of that swift-moving triangle as it sped the track of the sky at the rate of sixty miles or more an hour. He has breasted and split the air-currents for them, kept vigilant watch for them, guided them, assured them by low-voiced calls when, weary with the long flight, they have faltered a little in the line, and finally, at close of day, has led them down to safe feeding fields.

He has watched while they fed, standing a little apart from them with grey body erect and long neck stretched high as his sharp eyes probed the reedy grounds in search of danger signs. He has not fed until after they had fed and settled down with throaty murmurs to preen their wind-buffeted feathers and rest.

Now the long flock are speeding north again. As the mauve in the sky deepens to crimson, the grey leader gives a call that rings far out across the drab world of bog and water. He has sighted the far-stretching shallows that means their long journey done.

Now, wild and clamorous, ring out the cries of the birds as they voice their gladness; the long, double line of wings which move in perfect unison fan the air a little quicker as the old leader twists and drops closer to the black field beneath.

Far down, just outside a clump of rushes, the big gander has sighted some of his own kind and has heard their answering calls when he sent forth the welcome tidings to his flock. Now he twists closer in towards the rush-clump and honks again and the decoy geese below stretch their long necks upward and send him and his an invitation to settle among them.

The big flock is sweeping in now, sweeping closer, closer to the rush hide in which crouches the shooter, hoping and waiting. Three hundred yards from the blind the big birds pitch and come down and in against the light breeze on strong-set wings.

The shooter braces himself and lifts the heavy goose-gun, but he is to take no toll of the birds that have faced dangers to get back to their own. Just outside of the danger zone, the watchful old leader of the flock has scented danger. With a wild honk he twists upward and out, his frightened flock clamoring in his wake.

Higher and higher the wild geese ascend until far beneath them the wide expanse of marsh land sweeps like a great plain dotted with shallow lakes and veined with white water-courses, and just as the sun lifts above the scraggy woods far eastward, the old gander leads his weary, hungry followers down to the big mucklands where there is food and safety.

The wild geese have gone north.—A. P. McKishnie in Canadian Courier.

Out of the Mouths of Babes.

Mr. W. B. Yeats, when he lectured in Canada a few months ago, on "Beauty and the Theatre," invited his hearers to question him on any points arising out of his enunciation of his views. In Montreal a question brought from him the following remarks, which admirably epitomize the view point of the ultra-modern school of producers, headed by Gordon Craig, Max Reinhardt and Granville Barker: "You do not want to see two actors declaiming blank verse on a stage representing the turnpike which runs past your door, for no one ever does talk blank verse on a real turnpike. But if you merely suggest a shadowy and illusive road, then you secure the poetic setting in which blank verse seems natural and inevitable. A little girl friend of mine had the right idea when she broke into tears because her mother poured water into her doll's bath:

"'You shouldn't do that' protested the child. 'It's a toy bath, and I only want toy water in it'."—Toronto Saturday Night.

Historic Spot Now a Park.

Old Fort Howe at St. John, N.B., which played an important part in defending British settlers and British territory from the inroads of the Americans during the revolution, and was the site of the landing of the United Empire Loyalists in 1783, when three thousand of them came to Canada and founded the City of St. John, has been set aside as a natural park under the control of the Federal Department of the Interior. Hitherto it has been under the administration of the Militia Department. It will henceforth be known as Fort Howe National Park, and will be accessible to the public.

Bookkeeping Waste of Time.

Of Lord Strathcona, Agnes C. Laut writes in The American Review of Reviews: "There is a curious memory of him as a trader in Labrador. He would not keep books. If by spending all his time in trade, he could double, treble, quadruple returns, then he refused to waste time on work which 'a semi-colon' man, or a 'red-ink man' could do."

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

LOST IDEALS.

How our ideals fade away,
E'en vanish like the dew,
As down the shady side of life
The gliding act we do!
The things that once we looked upon
As all the cake and pie,
The only objects worth our while,
No longer catch our eye.

How earnestly we longed to be
In childhood's happy day
The man who stood outside the tent
And took our change away!
But greater still had been our joy,
Our pleasure more profound,
Could we have been the man inside
Who pushed the freaks around.

Then, growing older and a bit
Discerning in our likes,
Our hero was the pitcher then
Who put out men on strikes.
But quite above him in a class
Resplendent, all alone,
The pugilist who held the belt
Like some bright planet shone.

And then the cashier in the bank
Who turned our checks to cash
And next the one in high finance
Who seemed to cut a dash.
The congressman, the governor,
Then for a time held sway.
But now in sliding down the hill
We watch them fade away.

His Difficulty.

"That man just can't keep out of debt."

"Can't he?"

"No."

"Well, he is different from me."

"You can, I suppose?"

"Well, you see, I just can't get in."

All One Way.

"There are two sides to every question."

"Are there?"

"There certainly are."

"May be so in theory, but it doesn't work out that way when I have a dispute with my wife."

His Profession.

"But why don't you work?"

"On account of not being able to find anything in my line."

"What is your line?"

"Being the European titled husband of an American heiress, madam."

Utility.

"His table manners are something frightful."

"Yes, but there is one good thing about them."

"What's that?"

"They produce results."

Picked Up a Few.

"What are you doing in New York?"

"Just getting impressions."

"Did you get any?"

"Well, I fell off a street car and was run over by an automobile."

The Amateur.

Oh, I would lie
Without a sigh
And get the best that could be bought
Of rod and reel
If fish and eel
Would only let themselves be caught!

Favored the Chef.

"Are you fond of art, Mr. Brown?"

"Yes, indeed."

"Which branch do you prefer?"

"The culinary art."

His Reason.

"He doesn't believe in divorce."

"Why?"

"Says he has tried it three times, and it doesn't render him immune at all."

Explained.

"What is having plenty of money?"

"Just having more'n the rest of the bunch."

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

The trouble with a get-rich-quick scheme is that it so often seems as if it were the other fellow who gets rich.

Friends are like money—you first have to know how to make them and then how to keep them.

Being interesting often depends upon who your audience is.

Most anybody can be peaceful, but it takes grit to fight.

Some seasons beautiful spring does seem to be afflicted with old fashioned fever and ague.

In the practice of kindness some people always include themselves and sometimes none others.

Anyway, the man who knows it all doesn't have to be shown.

The man who knows enough to keep his mouth shut generally draws healthful breath as well as a good salary.

A good disposition is more to be desired than a pull with the police.

If you don't want people to like you, criticize what they do.

SPRING GREENS.

Eat Plenty of These and Cheat the Doctor of His Fee.

THEY ARE BEST OF TONICS.

The Wise Cook Will Make Liberal Use of Them at This Season of the Year and Cut Down the Daily Allowance of Fresh Meat.

Early greens are in the market, and people who have the "spring medicine" habit may readily transfer their allegiance from the medicine bottle to dandelion greens, rhubarb, sorrel, etc.

One of the best of all spring tonics—that is to say, one of the best things for arousing a torpid liver—is the lemon. The juice may be taken in drinks with a little or no sweetening, or lemons may be baked and the pulp eaten. Orange and grape fruit juice are also excellent tonic foods, the latter being said to be invaluable for fever.

But of all the early season's foods the dandelion probably ranks first as a spring tonic. This is full of needed salts and bitters for the excitation of the torpid liver. It may be either boiled or steamed in the form of greens. It may be served with vinegar or with a white sauce, garnished with egg, or it may be served with a French dressing as a salad.

Next to the dandelion in tonic properties comes rhubarb. This contains an acid said to be an excellent "moderator." Rhubarb can be cooked in various ways.

SPINACH ITALIAN AND SPINACH SALAD.

Spinach is a green obtainable now throughout the year and preferred by many people to any other form of boiled greens. Early onions, watercress, romaine, chives and endive are also excellent things to partake generously of in the early months of spring. Radishes are not to be neglected, while lettuce and celery might well appear once a day on everybody's table.

The turnip and parsnip contain a peculiar oily principle which may account for their traditional value as an aperient and diuretic, while their juices are an old country remedy for coughs and hoarseness. The presence of starch and sugar would hardly account for these properties.

The potato, of course, possesses a decided nutritive value, but it also contains elements, among which is solanin, that are credited with diuretic properties.

The common cabbage is redolent with a sulphur compound which may possibly account for the value attached to it in scurvy and scrofula.

Spinach is a well known laxative—a property, however, which may be ascribed to the fine indigestible fiber which characterizes it. There is present also a peculiar principle as well as a quanity of iron in organic form.

The tomato exercies medicinal effects which are not completely explained by the presence of alkaline salts. There is a principle present which when taken in a concentrated state produces salivation and a free stimulation of the liver. On this account the tomato has been called vegetable mercury.

Carrots have a similar action and form a considerable part of the meals at certain health resorts in the belief that they materially assist in the treatment of derangements of the liver and of the biliary processes generally. The vegetable contains a definite principle, carrotin and a volatile oil, which may possess properties that have supplied the traditional curative qualities.

The Boston Cooking School Magazine suggests the following ways of cooking spinach:

To prepare a spinach salad chop exceedingly fine enough cooked spinach to make a cupful and a quarter, add one-fourth of a teaspoonful each of salt and paprika, a tablespoonful of olive oil and half a teaspoonful of lemon juice. Soften one-fourth of a package of gelatin in one-fourth a cupful of chicken broth or water and dissolve in one-fourth a cupful of boiling broth. Stir the dissolved gelatin into the spinach. Have ready six or eight timbale molds, fitted with rounds of paper in the bottom. Set a slice of "hard cooked" egg in the bottom of each mold and figures cut from thin slices of white against the sides; then fill with spinach. When cold unmold on thin shreds of cold cooked tongue. Garnish with heart leaves of lettuce. Serve sauce tartare in a bowl.

To serve spinach in the Italian style cook half a peck of carefully washed spinach in the usual manner, drain and chop fine. Melt one tablespoonful of butter, add one tablespoonful of flour and half a teaspoonful or less of salt and stir until blended, add half a cupful of rich milk or thin cream and stir until boiling, add the spinach and from half to a full cupful of grated cheese and stir until the cheese is melted and the whole very hot. Turn on to a hot dish; garnish with slices of hard cooked eggs and lemon.

Ignorance is the stepmother of argument.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Treatment of Bruises.

Bruises are not only very painful at times, but are disfiguring as well when on an exposed part of the body. They require quick action if they would be banished the hour they arrive. Once bruises begin to swell and take on a varied assemblage of colors it is almost impossible to do anything with them but let them run their course. Immediately after the hurt is the time to prevent them. In the first place, they should be given heat at once—that, just as intense as can be borne. For ten or twelve minutes lay hot cloths on the bruised flesh, replacing each cloth with a fresh one as soon as the heat in it lessens. Then dry the skin and bind loosely with a thin strip of absorbent cotton. Put together a mixture of one part alcohol and three parts water. Moisten the cotton with this and as fast as it dries moisten it again. The rapid evaporation takes away the inflammation and is also delightfully cooling. Nor is any other antiseptic needed, as the alcohol kills any germs that may be present. After a half hour's treatment stop for an hour or so. Then if there is any sign of swelling or redness repeat, but usually one treatment is enough.

Don't Swat That Fly

Mashing flies is unsanitary and dangerous because it always leaves the disease germs to be distributed through the house when dry.

WILSON'S FLY PADS kill both flies and disease germs, and they kill them all.

THOMAS BATTYE DIED IN HOSPITAL FROM THE EFFECTS OF FALL AT HOTEL

Thomas Battye, aged thirty-seven, unmarried, sustained fatal injuries in a fall at the Grand Hotel, Saturday evening and died at St. Joseph's Hospital Sunday morning, between eight and nine o'clock.

The funeral took place this afternoon from the Lane and Eano undertaking establishment to the Little Lake Cemetery. Rev. Canon Davidson officiated.

Battye who was an employee of the Bell Telephone Co. left his room in the hotel and fell from the second floor to the first, sustaining injuries to the head. The pulmotor was summoned and in a short time, Battye was again in his room. He was unconscious and some time later when his condition became more serious he was removed to St. Joseph's hospital, with Dr. McNulty in attendance. His condition continued critical and he passed away Sunday morning.

Some time ago, Battye was employed by the Canadian Express Co. During the winter he had boarded with John Huxley, Edinburgh Street. He came from England, where his mother now lives.

BELLEVILLE REGIMENT ENJOYED THEIR VISIT

Spent Two Pleasant Days As Guests of the 57th Regiment

Greatly pleased with the reception tendered them during their two days' visit in the city, the 15th regiment of Belleville, returned home last midnight. Col. Marsh, officer commanding the Belleville red coats assured the officers of the local garrison that never before had they had such a remarkably fine trip. They appreciated the cordial welcome and hoped at some future time to entertain the 57th regiment at Belleville.

The visitors, three hundred and fifty strong arrived here late Saturday night and paraded to Central Park, where the advance guard under Quartermaster Doyle had prepared Camp. Sunday morning both regiments paraded to St. John's Church, where Rev. Canon Davidson delivered an appropriate sermon from the text, "Iron sharpeneth iron; so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend." Proverbs 27: 17. The preacher pointed to the great benefits to be derived from military training. It made men strong and strong men could put grit into their comrades. Military uniforms were distinctive and soldiers were distinctive. Soldiers should be strong, brave, and self respecting These were qualities of helpfulness to men and which made an impression upon their fellowmen.

Canon Davidson urged that they not shrink from religion for religion had iron in it.

After the return to the armouries, the men were dismissed, the visiting officers being informally entertained by the garrison officers, some to an auto ride to Chemong Park.

The band of the 15th regiment gave a concert in Central Park in the afternoon before a very large gathering. Interest was added to the program by the selections of the pipers.

The music was continued Sunday evening at Victoria Park.

Monday morning after a parade, the visitors were entertained to a trip over the Lift Lock and at the ball game and this program was again carried out in the afternoon. In the evenig another band concert was given.

The officers of the 15th were entertained by their brother officers and the N.C.O.'s by the Sergeant's Mess while the bands were entertained by the local bands.

The visitors presented a very creditable appearance on parade, and their conduct was excellent.

CONSISTORY AT ROME

Pope Pius Creates Thirteen Cardinals.

BISHOPS CONFIRMED

ROME, May 26.—At a secret consistory held at the Vatican yesterday morning Pope Pius created 13 new cardinals. A number of bishops from various countries also were confirmed in their sees.

At the same time official announcement was made of the creation of Mgr. Belo, Patriarch of Lisbon, as cardinal. His name had been reserved "in pectore" at the consistory of 1911.

The ceremony, which was accompanied by the brilliance usual on such occasions at the Vatican, was preceded by a short allocation, after which the names of the new cardinals were announced as follows: Mgr. Louis Nazaire Begin, Archbishop of Quebec, Canada; Mgr. V. Guisasola Y. Menendez, Archbishop of Toledo, Spain; Mgr. Domenico Serafini, Assessor of the Congregation of the Holy Office; Mgr. Della Chiesa, Archbishop of Bologna, Italy; Mgr. John Csernock, Archbishop of Esztergom, Hungary; Mgr. Hector Irnee Sevin, Archbishop of Lyons, France; Mgr. Francis Von Bettinger, Archbishop of Munich, Batavia; Mgr. Felix Von Hartmann, Archbishop of Cologne, Germany; Mgr. F. G. Piffl, Archbishop of Vienna, Austria; Mgr. Philipp Giustini, Secretary of the Congregation of the Sacraments; Mgr. Michael Lega, Dean of the Tribunal of the Rota; Mgr. Scipio Techi, Assessor of the Consistorial Congregation; Rt. Rev. Francis Aiden Gasquet, President of the English Benedictines.

The Pontiff was surrounded by all the members of the Sacred College living in Rome and by those who are now here, including Cardinals Gibbons, Farley and O'Connell.

The Pope appointed Cardinal Francis Della Volpe to the office of chamberlain, in which position be will direct the affairs of the church during the conclave.

Cardinal Diomede Falconio, formerly apostolic delegate in Canada and the United States, also was raised to the mark of chamberlain.

The allocation of the Pope was a strong appeal for political and social peace through the restoration of religion and the influence of the church.

ORANGE GRAND LODGE TO MEET IN REGINA

WM. LEE
Toronto, Grand Secretary of British America.

COL. J. H. SCOTT
Grand Master of British America

FRANK SOMERS
Past County Master, Toronto, and honorary member of the Grand Lodge. He is over 80 years old and has been an Orangeman for more than half a century. He will attend the Grand Lodge convention at Regina.

The Manitoba School Question will undoubtedly be the predominant topic at the annual convention of the Orange Grand Lodge of British America which opens in Regina, on Wednesday, May 27th. Additional interest and zest will be given the discussion through the proximity of the meeting place to Manitoba. Then there will be an unusually large attendance of Western delegates who will have made a study of the question at first hand. The Grand Master, Col. J. H. Scott, Walkerton, who was recently appointed county judge of Lennox, will retire, and there is some doubt as to who his successor will be, though it is likely the present Deputy Grand Master, Dr. Ellis, a Westerner, will be promoted to the senior position. The Grand Lodge meeting will be preceded as usual by the annual conclave of the Black Chapter. Among Easterners who will go to the Regina meeting are Mayor Hocken, Toronto, publisher of the Orange Sentinel; Rev. Wm. Walsh, Grand Chaplain; William Lee, Grand Secretary; Harry Lovelock, Toronto; W. D. McPherson, K.C., M.P.P., and many other Orange dignitaries.

At least four docks were demolished and the loss is half a million dollars.

HOME RULE MEASURE NOW BEFORE BRITISH LORDS

Unionists Refuse to Debate Measure Without Further Information Regarding Amendment Proposals and End of Long Struggle Comes Suddealy—Defeat of Masterman Shakes the Government.

LONDON, May 26.—By a vote of 351 to 274, a majority of 77, the House of Commons yesterday afternoon read a third time the Irish Home Rule Bill and passed the hard-fought measure on to the House of Lords, where another effort will be made by means of an amending bill to bring the act into shape, which will secure it the good will of all classes of Irishmen.

The end of the struggle came quite suddenly, the Unionists refusing to debate the bill without further information as to the Government's intentions in regard to the proposed amending measure.

Premier Asquith lifted a corner of the veil, but though Andrew Bonar Law, leader of the Opposition, admitted that the Premier's words were as conciliatory as usual, he hastened to add that Mr. Asquith had not told them anything. To discuss the third reading under the circumstances would, he said, be futile and ridiculous. He added:

"Let the curtain ring down on this contemptible farce. It is only the end of an act and not of the play. The Government can carry the bill through Parliament, but the concluding act of the drama will be in the country, where an appeal to the people will not end in a farce."

Mr. Law then remarked that when the Government was unable to obtain a seat in Parliament for a member of the Cabinet, meaning Mr. Masterman, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, an appeal to the people was not far off.

After a brief speech by Premier Asquith, in which he defended the Government against the charge of ignoring the rights of the minority and redressing the balance of power between the parties by means of the Parliament act he explained that he was introducing an amending bill not because he thought that the Irish Home Rule measure was bad or imperfect, but because he was anxious for peace.

The vote was then taken and the announcement of the figures showing a majority of 77 for the bill brought out a great demonstration by the Nationalists and the Liberals. As one man they rose from their seats cheering and waving hats and handkerchiefs.

The division was taken strictly on party lines. The followers of William O'Brien abstained from voting, Mr. O'Brien expressing the view that the Premier's action was not straight dealing, either with England or Ireland.

Under the provisions of the Parliament act the bill becomes law after this stage, as it had already twice passed through all its stages in the House of Commons in two separate sessions, and the vote of the House of Lords therefore has no further effect.

The House was seething with excitement from the moment the Speaker took the chair. Members of the various parties indulged in loud outbursts of cheering when their respective champions entered the chamber, while at the same time mocking banter was shouted from the opposite benches.

Mr. Ganzoni, the Unionist who on Saturday defeated C. F. G. Masterman, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, in the bye-election at Ipswich, met with such an uproarious welcome on his introduction that he appeared glad to escape from the limelight.

The Rt. Hon. James Lowther, the Speaker, took an early opportunity of applying balm to the sores left by the violent incidents of Thursday last. He frankly admitted that he should not have used the expression he did when he asked Andrew Bonar Law, leader of the Opposition, whether he approved of the disorderly demonstration by the Unionist members. The Speaker appealed to the Premier to give the House some information regarding the bill to be introduced after the passage of the Irish Home Rule Bill for the amendment of that measure, so as to meet some of the objections of the people of Ulster.

GETS CONTRACT FOR CHURCH AT TORONTO

The contract for the new Catholic Church to be erected at the corner of Grace Street and Mansfield Avenue, Toronto, has been awarded to Richard Sheehy, the local contractor who contemplates starting the work in the near future.

The new church it is expected will figure among the finest edifices in Toronto. It will be of stone construction and will cost approximately $125,000.

APPOINTED REGISTRAR.

Capt. Hugh McCullough of Cobourg has received official notice from the Ontario Government at Toronto, of his appointment, as registrar for West Northumberland to succeed Dr. F. W. Field, resigned, who has held the position for some years.

Capt. McCullough was the Conservative candidate in the last provincial election at Cobourg, unsuccessfully contesting the riding against Sam Clarke.

VISITING RED COAT MET WITH MISHAP

Private Scott Sustained Injury to Shoulder.

Private Scott of G. Co., of the 15th, suffered a painful injury to his left shoulder on Sunday afternoon at the armouries. He tripped over a tent rope, falling on a tent peg, which resulted in his shoulder being painfully injured. Dr. Young attended him. It was at first thought his collar bone was broken, but examination revealed nothing of a fracture. He was able to leave for home with the regiment last night.

MILITANTS CRIED "SHOOT THE KING"

They Expressed Resentment at Interruption of March

LONDON, May 26. — Shouts of "Shoot the King" filled the hall in which a meeting of the Women's Social and Political Union, the militant suffragette organization, was held last evening. Every mention of King George's name was greeted with angry derision and prolonged hissing.

Mr. Mildred Ella Mansel, who served a term of imprisonment for breaking windows at the War Office, presided at the suffragette gathering. She alluded to the scenes at Buckingham Palace on Thursday, when 57 suffragettes, including Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, were arrested at the park gate, and declared that both the royal name and the royal office had been disgraced.

The speaker announced that quite a number of contributions had been received following the recent activities of the militants. One Glasgow woman sent $5,000.

"Some day an exasperated crowd will break into a procession of militants. What will then happen to you women nobody knows at present. You have to thank the police for being alive. You owe them a debt of gratitude."

Magistrate Hopkins of the Bow street police court thus addressed a suffragette who had applied for a summons against an unknown man, who, she declared, had struck her on the face when the crowd rushed the suffragette meeting in Hyde Park on Sunday afternoon, and the police came to the women's rescue.

Apparently all that is needed, in the opinion of some observers, for the suppression of the militants, is the withdrawal from them of police protection.

WHOLE FAMILY WIPED OUT WHEN HOMEBOUND FROM PLEASURE TRIP

North Bay Couple and Two Children are drowned when Canoe is Overturned—Dog Swims Ashore and Leads Men to Shore Where Three Bodies are Found.

Canadian Press Despatch.

North Bay, May 26.—Arthur Mansbridge, his twenty-one year old wife and their two small children were drowned, the whole family being wiped out in the midst of their holiday pleasure Monday evening. They lived in Lakeview Park, North Bay. Returning last evening from picknicking and fishing from a canoe in Lake Nipissing, the wind came up and water became rough. It is supposed the canoe overset and being unable to make their calls for help heard, they soon sank in the cold water. The children's pet collie pup swam ashore and early this morning attracted the attention of men at a roadmaking camp a few miles from here, and led them to the shore, where lay Mrs. Mansbridge, with both children clasped tight in her arms, all dead. Search is now being made for aMnsbridge's body.

Germans Watching Mediation.

BERLIN, May 26. — The German Foreign Office, while watching with great interest the progress of the Mexican mediation conference at Niagara Falls, and hoping that it will be successful in averting war, declares it has no positive information which would enable it to foreshadow the result of the meetings.

An impression, it was stated, had been created in German official circles by the latest news from Mexico that the Government of Provisional President Huerta would hardly be able to maintain its existence much longer.

BIG FIRE IN CLEVELAND

Million Dollar Blaze Started by Tramps.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, May 26.—One million dollars' damage has been done by a fire which broke out in the business centre of Cleveland shortly before 10 o'clock Monday night.

The fire broke out in the yards of the Fisher & Wilson Lumber Co., supposedly started by tramps smoking, and spread with lightning-like rapidity. Inside of half an hour the fire was beyond control. It spread across the Cuyahoga river and caught the Cleveland Elevator Co.'s grain elevator.

From there the flames spread to the lumber yards of Martin & Barress, which are situated directly beneath the Central Railway viaduct. At 11 o'clock the flames ate into the viaduct, part of which collapsed at midnight.

TWENTY-FIVE LIVES ARE LOST WITH LIGHTSHIP

Battered Hulk of Vessel Was Found Among Breakers.

HALIFAX, N.S., May 26. — The battered hulk of the new lightship, Halifax No. 19, was found among the breakers on Liscomb Island, five miles from the mainland Saturday afternoon. She struck during the dense fog which has enshrouded the coast for several days and it is believed her crew of 25 Scotchmen are lost. Six bodies bearing lifebelts had been recovered up to Saturday night by the steamer Dufferin. Both lifeboats which the vessel carried were also found. A search of the little rocky island in the vicinity was made in the hope that some of the crew may have been able to get through the surf alive.

Word has reached the Canadian Marine Department here that the hull of the lightship was broken in two.

The ship was on her maiden voyage from her builder's yards at Paisley, Scotland, to take up her station off Sambro Ledges near Halifax harbor. Captain Macbeth and Chief Engineer McKenzie are the members of the crew known here. The men were shipped in Glasgow.

The Government steamers Stanley and Lady Laurier were ordered to search for possible survivors or for more bodies. Although the lightship was the last word in staunch steel construction and carried one 23-foot lifeboat and a powerful 24-foot motor launch, little hope is felt by the Canadian Marine Department that anyone of the crew escaped. Long rollers from the North Atlantic break over the jagged rocks with terrific force in the calmest weather.

The first intimation of the disaster was brought in by the Dufferin when she arrived with three bodies. She went back to Liscomb Island later in the day to continue the search and found another body.

JOE MARTIN TO CONTEST SEAT

LONDON, May 26.—(C. A. P. Cable.)—An interesting bye-election is expected in London early next month. Joe Martin, member for East St. Pancras, called a meeting of his association on Friday, when it was decided be should resign his seat and offer himself for re-election as an Independent Liberal and Labor candidate.

His resignation has followed the adoption of R. L. Reiss as the official Liberal candidate because Martin voted against the Government in the Marconi division in the House of Commons.

NO SIGN OF HAMEL

Disappearance of Aviator Remains a Mystery.

LONDON, May 26.—Hope for the safety of Gustave Hamel, the daring British aviator, has almost been abandoned, and it is feared be was drowned in crossing the channel.

Hamel left Le Crotoye, France, for Hendon, shortly after eight o'clock Saturday morning, and no word of him has since been received from any quarter. His course lay across the English Channel, and the distance of the flight was about 100 miles.

Torpedo boats and hydroplanes spent all day Sunday searching the channel for signs of Hamel's aeroplane, but failed to locate it or any sign of the aviator. During the search two naval hydroplanes were wrecked at Dover by the rough sea, but a rescue was effected by pilots.

Cartier Statue Nearly Ready.

MONTREAL, May 26. — A letter was received yesterday from Mr. G. W. Hill, A.R.C.A., the sculptor who is executing the statue of Cartier and the other allegorial figures which will surround the base of the monument, from Brussels, that his work is completed with the exception of one figure, representing the military.

Huerta Is Satisfied.

MEXICO CITY, May 26.—After a conference with President Huerta, the Minister of the Interior, Ignacio Alcocer, said:

"The President is highly satisfied with the latest news from Niagara Falls. It seems that we are near a satisfactory arrangement with the United States."

A CAUTION ABOUT CALGARY OIL.

REPORTS INDICATE that a genuine oil strike has been struck at Calgary. Already there is a fever of excitement to invest in oil stocks, start new companies and acquire holdings. The general public is rather wilder than ever and the situation has never been equalled in the west. Stocks which opened at $1 par a week ago, are now being exchanged at $8 to $10, and within a week over twenty new companies will be offering shares to the public.

A brisk business is being done in leases and no level in real estate can be secured. The financiers are rapidly annexing the pick of the leases and confining their activities to leases alone. Large blocks of shares are being bought by speculators to sell in other large centres of population throughout the continent, and many of the companies which were first in the field have now withdrawn their stock from sale.

A careful enquiry revealed the fact that the directors of the Calgary Petroleum Products Company, owners of "Discovery" well, are not selling their holdings, which now are at $110, and W. S. Heron, pioneer of the Alberta oil field, is quietly picking up all he can secure at this figure. His holdings comprise one-quarter of the entire stock and he is buying steadily. As owner of the east half of section one, township 20, range three, west of the fifth meridian, he stands to come out with about half a million dollars through sales. His leases are within a half a mile of the site of the "Discovery," and he is selling in legal subdivision lots. The first sale recorded was to two local capitalists, twenty acres for $24,000 cash, or $1,200 per acre. Another sale of twenty acres within 2,000 feet of Discovery brought $50,000 or $2,500 per acre, and one today brought a similar amount. As Mr. Heron owns much of the land lying south on the same incline, it is probable that he will become a millionaire before the week is ended. His holdings comprise from 16,000 to 20,000 acres. Oil continues to rise in Discovery well and has not been below 2,000 feet standing since the strike. It overflows about four or six times per day and occasionally sends spouts of oil a distance of sixty to ninety feet in the air. The company is installing tubing, and hopes within the next week or so to have the oil forced in a steady stream from the main bore.

The very fact that a good well exists is the reason why much ruthless exploitation is possible. Hon. Mr. Doherty should lose no time in enforcing his new False Advertisement Act, for there will be many wolves preying on the public by means of Calgary oil stocks. Moreover, in all the new companies prospecting for oil, there is a large element of uncertainty. Although they may be legitimate oil-prospecting companies, holding actual land and working oil drilling machinery, there is no guarantee that an oil well will be struck on the property. Just because a holding is a few rods from a good well is absolutely no reason that it will produce a good oil well. When the strike occurred in Pennsylvania many people lost all their savings by investing in oil sites that did not produce anything except dry, deep holes and a bitter experience. Yet these sites were close to the wells that have made Rockefeller's millions and Standard Oil's forty per cent. dividends. If anybody has money to throw away they may be lucky by taking a gambler's chance in Calgary oil fields. If they have not money to throw away but for sure investment our advice is only to invest in a company that is actually producing oil and to be sure that it is doing so.

THE MEXICAN PROBLEM.

HUERTA'S HOUSE OF SAND, says Colliers, is crumbling day by day. The capture of Tampico gave the Constitutionalists an important port on the Gulf of Mexico, completed their conquest of the north, drove Huerta's defense back on the line of Mexico City, and deprived him of important sources of revenue. There are no signs that any foreign power is coming to his aid, and the fall of his regime seems to involve little more than arranging an exit which will be safe and not too disgraceful. Now the work of reconstruction must begin. If the United States, acting as the first friends of the Constitutionalists, can supply the plans and practical methods for such a system of public instruction as has been put into force in the Philippine Islands, then Mexican civilization may in time be made over and faced toward the future. It is essential, however, that the old merciless exploitation of the peons be stopped. This will involve some such purchase and redistribution of the land as has been accomplished in Ireland and New Zealand. The concessionaire problem is one of great diplomatic delicacy, but may be approached by means of a just franchise-tax policy and rigid requirements as to conditions of employment. These measures will not appease the blood-and-iron fanatics, but the United States can do more for Mexico by carrying them to successful establishment than by leaving a trail of death and glory from Chihuahua to Campeche. Tyrannies rise only to fall, and the life of a nation must be based on justice. Is idealism equal to the task?

A BIG INCOME FROM THE PEOPLE.

TEN YEARS AGO the gross income of the C.P.R. was $43,000,000. Last year it was, in round figures, $140,000,000. To make that income possible through augmented business, the C.P.R. had to spend over $1[illegible],000,000, which however, did not represent any capital liability, and makes, therefore, no draft upon the general revenue. This expenditure, as the president admitted at the last annual meeting, was startlingly large: "but we cannot afford to stop," he added, in characteristic fashion. The income was big; but the president looked for an appropriate increase if the country was to meet their expectations in point of population and prosperity, and he had no doubt such would be the case, even if there was a temporary lull in business. With this increase, of course, the company would have to possess roadbed, equipment, and facilities to handle the traffic as against all comers. Of course, the expenditures of the future will be nothing like as onerous as those of the immediate past. At the end of this year, for instance, the company will be well ahead of its requirements. It is completing its programme adopted two years ago. There are certain improvements and betterments to engage the attention in the east, where congestion exists: but when the snow flies, the C.P.R. will have spent what, for it, will be the comparatively negligible amount of, say, $50,000,000 in the west this year.

OFFER MISUNDERSTOOD.

A TORONTO ENGINEER says the reward of $25,000 offered by the Ontario Government for the discovery of radium bearing ores is very much misunderstood.

The Radium Act defines the meaning of radium as follows: "Redium shall mean all deposits of carnolite, pitchblende or other ores or substances containing radium in sufficient quantity for commercial extraction." Radio-action minerals are exceedingly difficult to distinguish in the field. Whilst they are known to occur in various parts of Canada, it is quite useless to search for them without preliminary study.

He goes on to say:

> "I have before me, for instance, a piece of grey, more or less inundated sandstone from a Western State. Throughout this specimen are disseminated minute yellowish grains of carnolite (manic-oxide.) It would easily be overlooked out-of-doors. But its radio-activity is readily observed when it is brought gradually near a very simply-constructed electroscope.
>
> "Of course, the radium actually contained by these minerals is imponderable. The quantity of that element that could be extracted from many tons of carnolite, and other radio-active minerals, might not cover apin-head. Thus the element itself is not the direct, but the indirect object of search."

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE PROBATE of the will of the late Cy Warman, of the Grand Trunk, revealed the fact that his estate amounted to $498. Milton only got $25 for "Paradise Lost"; and Warman got, it was said, many thousands for "Sweet Marie" in the way of royalties; but even if the litterateur made pots of money, there is something (usually) Bohemian in his mental and emotional make-up, which forbids him keeping a bank book. There is, however, a biting irony in the circumstance that the man who portrayed, with swelling adjectives, the wealth of the country through which the Grand Trunk Pacific would run, was so distantly related to the "long green" to use the vernacular.

AT THE GREAT MEETING in the Russell Theatre at Ottawa held on Friday to choose a Conservative candidate, Mr. Burnham, stated that there was ample warrant for the Whitney Government to go to the country. The new Workmen's Compensation Act could not be enforced with public sanction, until it was approved by the people. In addition to that is the new policy of setting aside 30 millions of dollars for good roads. Without public approval no Government should carry out this policy.

A NEWS NOTE says aldermen of Ottawa have voted themselves an annual salary of $300 although the money has not been provided in the estimates. This is straight forward honest graft. They take $300 honestly and openly for services rendered such as they are. A remarkable piece of news from Ottawa.

Where Big Loans Come From.

The Journal of Commerce.

Canada secured $120,000,000 from John Bull during the first three months of the present year out of a total of $540,000,000 loaned by Great Britain. Canada apparently gets the preference.

Laurier Did It.

Dundas Star.

The Canadian Northern proposals do not satisfy the Liberals. This is no doubt strange, but did it ever strike you that they would not have been necessary had it not been for the incapacity of the Laurier administration.

A Deathly Pun.

Brockville Times.

The latest reports of the trial of Lieutenant Becker in New York point to the probability of Becker receiving a great shock within the next few months.

Nationality of Prince Alexander.

Canadian Courier.

Prince Alexander of Teck, designated as Canada's next Governor-General, is more than half English. His mother was Princess Mary of Cambridge, a granddaughter of George III. In 1886, the then Duke of Teck, as an Austrian officer, visited England and was present at a great Volunteer Review at Brighton. There he met the Princess Mary. After their marriage, they lived at Kensington Palace, where their four children, including Queen Mary and Prince Alexander, were born. In 1882 the Duke went to Egypt on the staff of General Lord Wolseley, and was present at the battle of Tel-el-Kebir. Subsequently he was gazetted a Colonel and a Major-General in the British army. His death took place at White Lodge, Richmond, on February 4th, 1900. The Duchess of Teck had died two years earlier. Thus through his father's marriage and adoption of England as his residence, Prince Alexander is English by birth and training. He was educated at Eton and Sandhurst. His marriage with H. R. H. Duchess Alice of Albany was in line with his complete severance with the Duchy of Wurttemberg.

THE MULE

By Walt Mason

A cheerful critter is the mule; his disposition's bright and gay; and when the weather's crisp and cool he says, "Hee-haw!" and runs away. His "Hee-haw" cheers us like the deuce, it's such an optimistic shout, and when he turns that slogan loose, it jars the welkin inside out. At midnight, when the world is still, the mule, from out the barnyard strayed, comes close up to the window sill, and tries to make Caruso fade. We must admit he cannot sing, however earnestly he tries, but he has such good traits, by jing, that we forgive his frantic cries. How patiently he drags the plow, how earnestly he'll strive and strain, and swallow grub that horse or cow would pass up with a high disdain! He toils to bring his master dimes, so faithfully, the long day through; at night lies down and rolls three times, and then gets up as good as new. He doesn't stall around or shirk, though roads be long and days be hot; he's always ready for his work, and never dies unless he's shot. And yet we greet the mule with jeers, make him the butt of jockelets raw, because he has too many ears, and cannot sing like Ellen Yaw!

Birthdays of Note

TUESDAY, MAY TWENTY-SIXTH

The Hon. James Moffat Douglas, Dominion Senator from Saskatchewan, was born seventy-five years ago today in Roxburghshire, Scotland. In his early years he was a minister of the Presbyterian Church and held charges in Uxbridge and Cobourg, also serving as a missionary in India for six years. He retired from the ministry in 1896 and devoted himself to farming, being elected the same year to the House of Commons. In 1906 he was called to the Senate, where he is now one of the most useful members. He still farms extensively and has a fine property at Tantallon, Sask.

Also born to-day:—

W. M. German, M.P., born Prince Edward County, 1851.

Prof. R. Tait McKenzie, Philadelphia, born Almonte, Ont., 1867.

Hayter Reed, Montreal, born L'Original, Ont., 1849.

GETTING TURNED DOWN

WHEN you see a mongrel pup disappearing down the road with a tin can tied to his tail you air pretty sure to notice two things. One is the pup's apparent desire to get somewhere real quick and the other is the strong aversion he seems to have towards the can that bumps and clangs playfully behind him. The fact is he does not love the can, not the least little bit, He may be ever so strongly attached to it, but he doesn't love it. To him that can is a sure indication that he is not wanted back yonder. He's been turned down and it's a cold unfeelin' world.

I guess we all can sympathize with the pup because we've all been turned down one time or another. We've been made to feel that we wasn't wanted back yonder and we've gazed back through the blue chill haze and felt, like the pup, that it was a cold unfeelin' world.

Nobody likes to get turned down and you'll notice the men who turn applicants away from their offices with a kindly word are usually men who have fought their way up and know how it feels to get turned down, themselves.

"Is that so! I hadn't an idea it was that long. What made you give that up?"

"I had a family on my hands and needed more money. I didn't run again, you remember, because I wanted to be attorney for the new street railway company."

Kerr seemed to be revolving something in his mind, for it was some time before he reminded Gilbert of a step in his rise which he had not mentioned.

"I thought you was lawyer for one of them crowds that was fightin' for a franchise."

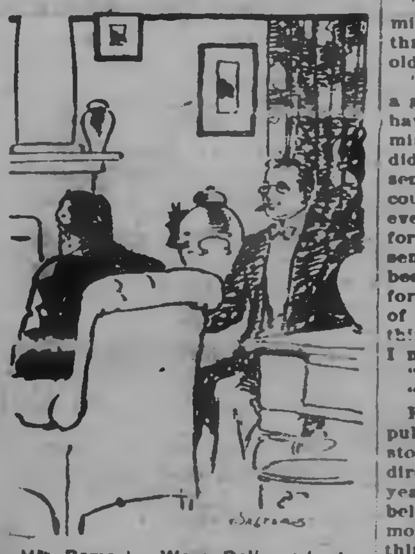
"Well, we got the franchise."

That was what Kerr wanted to bring out.

"Exactly. And you're still their lawyer."

"Yes."

"And for the water company," mused Kerr. "And for the 'lectric light company. And you still come to see me, Amos."



His Remarks Were Delivered at Random.

"Why, yes, Mr. Kerr, I'm not unmindful of—"

Kerr seemed to throw off some of the gloom in which he had appeared to be wrapped as he interrupted the attorney.

"This time, Amos, I've come to see you. It's the first time I've ever been in this house."

"Well—Mr. Kerr—I—" stammered Gilbert.

The boss pulled himself together in his chair, sat up straight and looked at Gilbert.

"But you've got a telephone." Then he added in a gentler tone: "That's all right, Amos, I've always understood." It seemed to be with an effort that he continued. "I'm going to tell you some things that you know, and some things that you don't know, and some you've guessed, and some I've thought nobody'd ever have to know. 'Bout the time you come here I was married, and my wife died on giving birth to a girl."

"Gloria."

"Yes, Gloria. I was just gittin' into politics. Things might 'ave been different if my wife had lived. It didn't seem long before there I was with a big girl on my hands—me, David Kerr." The old feeling of power surged through him as he added with spirit, "If it had been a boy!"

This thought held him silent for a minute, and when he took up the thread of his story again it was the old weary tone.

"Well, it wasn't. There I was with a girl on my hands. Her mother didn't have any relatives. Her father was a minister, same's my father was. I didn't have anybody, either, I could send her to. I kept her as long as I could, but by that time my house—even in the country—warn't a fit place for a child—specially a girl. So I sent her away to school and she ain't been back since. I reckon Belmont's forgot about her. I gave her plenty of money, but she never knew anything of my transactions. She thinks I made it all in real estate."

"Then she doesn't know—"

"That's the hell of it—she don't."

Kerr could sit still no longer. He pulled himself out of his chair and stood with his back to the fire and directly facing Gilbert. "All these years I've acted a 'le. I've made Gloria believe I'm the leading man in Belmont. I am—but not in the way she thinks. It wasn't because I loved her; I can't say I do, 'cause I don't know her well. I ain't been east to see her for a couple of years. It was pride made me tell her that; that's what it was, pride. I wanted my girl to have what I'd missed. I didn't want her to know."

He lapsed into silence, which he finally broke himself with the explanatory remark:

"Gloria thinks I'm the social leader of Belmont; that the whole town hangs breathless on what I say shall be the fashion at pink teas."

"Hasn't she often wanted to come back?"

Kerr was not to be hurried. He began to pace up and down in front of the fireplace. When he paused, the lawyer, to secure a continuation of the story, said:

"Well?"

"This morning she came home."

Now Judge Gilbert understood; yet he could scarcely believe it possible.

"What! Gloria here!"

"Yes, here," echoed Kerr. "Come home, that's what she calls it. She's been visiting school friends since she came back from Japan, and had just started to California when the party fell through when they'd got to St. Louis. So she jumped on the train and came to Belmont unannounced—to surprise me."

So here was Gloria in Belmont. It was more than embarrassing. Gilbert recognized that it was tragic. Kerr never mentioned his daughter, and Belmont had almost forgotten her existence. Much that the boss had told the lawyer was news to him. Gloria Kerr, the little girl, had been allowed to slip out of his mind and he had come to regard the political leader, just as every one else did, as a thing apart, as a power almost as impersonal as the force of gravity or the freezing of water. The easy boss was regarded as just as much a Belmont fixture as was the river which flowed past the town, and those good people who laid aside the rose-colored spectacles of Belmont's laissez faire doctrine felt that it would be just as easy to remove one as the other.

The lawyer in Gilbert now rose to the surface and he began to question Kerr just as he would a client. The girl was here. The only thing now to discuss was what to do with her.

"She can't help but learn the truth!" Gilbert exclaimed at last.

He sank back in his chair, overcome by the weight of the problem. On the wall, where he could see it, hung the picture of his own daughter, Julia, now away at school, and the bitterness of the whole thing was brought home to him all the more poignantly because he, too, was a father.

The hopelessness of Gilbert's tone when he declared Gloria would learn the truth if she remained roused Kerr to his old self. When he had entered the room he seemed crushed beyond recovery. Now he suddenly developed all the spirit, all the calm resourcefulness, which he had ever displayed when listening to the report of some political revolt which would call forth hitherto latent strength.

"She must not know," he replied with all his old dominance. "Listen to me, Amos Gilbert—that girl must be recognized. I know what people say of me, and I've abided by the verdict. I ain't been no hypocrite. I've played a man's game, and I've dealt with men. I ain't asked nothin' of your women folk, but now I do. I'm bringing Belmont a girl any of you could be proud of. She's got to be took up by the right people—I've kept her away all these years, and she don't know my story, and I don't intend she shall. She's the equal of any girl in Belmont, and, by God, she'll have an equal chance."

"What can I do?" asked Gilbert.

It was for this Kerr had waited. It was for this moment that he had called the past to mind. He had wanted Gilbert to have before him the many obligations under which he rested. It is true that he could have commanded, but he was too much the easy boss to issue orders where he could hold forth a glittering reward as the price of valuable services. To the ward heeler the word of the boss is a fetish to be blindly worshiped. To his few leading lieutenants the command is coated with sugar which has a negotiable value. Gilbert having asked what he could do brought Kerr at once to the arrangement he had planned whereby the lawyer would profit through the introduction of Miss Kerr to society.

"I've made bargains all my life, Amos,—tonight I make one with you. Prosecuting attorney, judge, corporation counsel, with all the money you've made—"

Formation of Long Island.

According to geologists, Long Island affords particularly clear evidence as to the history of the great continental ice sheet which covered the northern states many thousand years ago. The southern margin of this great ice sheet extended to Long Island, it is said, and remained there for a long time, depositing a thick body of intermixed bowlders, sand and clay as a terminal moraine, which is now the "backbone" of the island. The ice moved southward and brought these materials from the north, dropping them at its melting edge. This peculiar method of deposition developed a very peculiar topography, consisting of an irregular aggregation of hummocks and hollows, which have produced the many beautiful details of configuration that make the higher parts of Long Island so attractive to lovers of nature. The most notable of these hollows in the morainal ridge is the one holding the picturesque Lake Ronkonkoma, which lies in a depression fifty feet below the surrounding ridges. Several other similar pits are eighty to eighty-five feet deep, and several of the large, irregular hollows are several miles in length.—Argonaut.

Nature's Little Ship.

While man makes the largest ocean vessels, nature makes the smallest. This is a species of jellyfish, found only in tropical seas, which has a sail. The part of the fish under the water looks like a mass of tangled threads, while the sail is a tough membrane shaped like a shell and measuring quite five inches and sometimes more across. The fish can raise or lower this sail at will. Wise sailors let this curiosity of nature alone, for each of the threads composing its body has the power of stinging, the results of which are very painful and often dangerous. This power defends it from porpoises, albatrosses and other natural enemies. It has no other means of locomotion than its sail, and when seen skimming bravely along the surface of the water it looks more like a child's toy boat than a living creature out in search of food.—London Opinion.

Going Fast.

Once there was a hypochondriac who used to think that he was dying about three times a week. One day he was driving out in his automobile, and one of these spells came over him. On the road ahead of him he happened to see his family doctor speeding along in his roadster. He felt so sick that he applied all his power in order to catch up with the doctor as soon as possible.

But the doctor saw him coming, and he used all the gas he had to get away from him. For about three miles they had a close race. Finally, however, the doctor had some tire trouble, and the hypochondriac drew up alongside.

"Doctor," he shouted, "stop a minute! I am dying! Darn it all, I'm dying!"

"You must be," grunted the physician. "I never saw anybody going so fast as you are."—New York Globe.

Because of Terrible Backache. Relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"I suffered from displacement and inflammation, and had such pains in my sides, and terrible backache so that I could hardly stand. I took six bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and now I can do any amount of work, sleep good, eat good, and don't have a bit of trouble. I recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to every suffering woman."—Mrs. HARRY FISHER, 1642 Juniata Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Another Woman's Case.

Providence, R. I.—"I cannot speak too highly of your Vegetable Compound as it has done wonders for me and I would not be without it. I had a displacement, bearing down, and backache, until I could hardly stand and was thoroughly run down when I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It helped me and I am in the best of health at present. I work in a factory all day long besides doing my housework so you can see what it has done for me. I give you permission to publish my name and I speak of your Vegetable Compound to many of my friends."—Mrs. ABRIL LAWSON, 126 Lippitt St., Providence, R. I.

Danger Signals to Women

are what one physician called backache, headache, nervousness, and the blues. In many cases they are symptoms of some female derangement or an inflammatory, ulcerative condition, which may be overcome by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Thousands of American women willingly testify to its virtue.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, May 25.—Prospects of a record breaking yield in Oklahoma and Kansas today forced prices down in the active options of wheat. Quotations of May tightened, but trading in that delivery was at a minimum. The market closed somewhat irregular, ⅛c to ¼c net lower to ⅛c advance. In corn the outcome varied from ⅜c decline to ¼c gain. Oats wound up ⅛c to 1¼c dearer, and provisions strung out from a setback of 15c to 17½c to a rise of 6c.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, May 25.—At the Montreal stock yards, west end market, the receipts of live stock for the week ending May 23 were: 1050 cattle, 500 sheep and lambs, 3100 hogs and 1200 calves. Offerings on the market this morning amounted to 800 cattle, 250 sheep and lambs, 1700 hogs and 550 calves.

In cattle the feeling continued firm and prices were unchanged owing to the small supplies. A number of carloads of pressed beef have been brought in of late direct from Toronto. Trade was fairly active, with sales of full carloads of choice steers at $8.25 to $8.50 and good steers of 1100 pounds brought $8, while fair stock sold at $7 to $7.50 per 100 pounds. An increased demand was reported for good butchers' cows and bulls. A stronger feeling developed in the market and prices for Ontario stock advanced 10c to 25c per 100 pounds over Wednesday. The demand for packers was good and an active trade was done, with sales of selected lots at $9.10 to $9.25, sows at $7.10 to $7.25 and stags at $4.55 to $4.65 per 100 pounds, weighed off cars.

The trade in small meats was fair and prices ruled steady. Yearling lambs sold at $8 to $8.50 and ewe sheep at $6.50 to $7 per 100 pounds, while spring lambs brought from $4 to $8 each, as to size and quality.

Four Killed In Gang Fights.

NEW YORK, May 26.—The police and the district attorney's office yesterday are investigating seven homicide cases reported within the 36 hours up to midnight Sunday night. Four of the seven victims are dead and the other three are not expected to live. The dead lost their lives in gang fights. According to the police, this is the largest number of homicide cases in the same length of time in many years.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

An expert cook says that the secret of roasting meats is to keep a small enameled dish, partly filled with vinegar, in the oven when roasting meat of any kind.

Any upholstered furniture, whether covered with cloth, damask or chintz, will look much the better for being cleaned occasionally with bran and flannel.

Matting may be cleaned by washing it with water in which bran has been boiled, or in weak salt water. Dry it well with a cloth.

Old Things Are Better.

"I mean to write a sermon on this text some time," said the prettiest woman in the group. "We are all going crazy nowadays over novelty—new fashions, new inventions, seeing new places. But I tell you the old things are half the time better—the old friends, always the good old furniture, which is so often discarded for newer patterns not half so really nice. And I love a good old dress that I am used to and that has become a sort of part of me. And old shoes—is there anything on earth quite so comfortable and delightful as a pair of soft, flexible old shoes?"—Leslie's.

MURDERER SURRENDERS ON MINISTER'S ADVICE

Nearly Starved and Frozen After His Hiding in the Bush, Slayer of Daughter and Son-in-Law, Only Regrets That He Did Not Kill Two Others Before He Was Captured.

GRAVENHURST, May 26. — Contrary to police expectations and to his threat that he would never be taken alive, William Ruttan, the Muskoka bushman and trapper, who, on Wednesday morning, shot and killed his daughter, Mrs. Alfred Coutermanche, and Geo. Coutermanche, at their home at Housey's Rapids, quietly surrendered to Inspector Greer, of the provincial police, and Constable Fielding, of Bracebridge, at his home at nine o'clock Saturday morning.

Half famished, his clothes in tatters, and his face and hands torn by the heavy bush of the district, the murderer presented a pitiable appearance when taken in hand by the police. Through Friday's heavy rainstorm, Ruttan lay concealed in the bush, and he told his wife Saturday morning, that once, when his pursuers were within twenty-five yards of him, he was forced to swim the Buck river to escape detection. Though he was soaked to the skin, and the raw air brought on a heavy frost Friday night, Ruttan was forced by the presence of three watchers on his house, to lie in the bush but a few hundred yards from his home, all night. At five o'clock the watchers were themselves forced by the cold air to seek shelter in Henry Cook's residence and the murderer crept into the shelter of his barn, within a stone's throw of his house. After half an hour in the barn Ruttan risked everything and crawled through the cellar window into his home, where he ate ravenously. While he was warming himself at the stove, Provincial Detective Greer, Constable Fielding and three other armed men returned to resume their vigil on the house and the murderer's escape was cut off.

His wife said that it was primarily the message of their minister, the Rev. Findlay Crowther, which persuaded her husband to surrender. "Mr. Crowther told me to tell my husband it would be far better for him to surrender to the law, and I did."

Ruttan says his only regret is that he did not succeed in killing his son-in-law, Alfred Coutremanche, and Henry Cooke, a neighbor.

SOME HINTS FOR BUTTER MAKERS

1. Cool the cream from the separator as soon as possible to 55 degrees F. or lower.

2. Never mix warm cream with cool cream.

3. Mix all the cream to be churned in one vat or can at least 18 hours before churning.

4. Ripen at a temperature of 70 to 75 degrees F. from six to eight hours, stirring frequently during this period.

5. Cool cream to churning temperature as soon as ripe.

6. Let cream stand eight hours or more (over night) at the churning temperature.

7. The temperature of churning should be such as to make the butter come in from 35 to 40 minutes, usually 55 to 60 degrees F.

8. If it is desired to use artificial coloring, it should be added to the cream just before churning.

9. Stop churning when the granules are about the size of peas, varying to wheat, and draw off the buttermilk.

10. Wash the butter once with pure water at the churning temperature, agitating three or four times, and drain.

11. Wash a second time with water about four degrees above churning temperature, agitating seven or eight times, and drain.

12. Add the salt wet while the butter is in granular form, using about one to one and one-half ounces for each pound of butter, according to the demands of the market.

13. Work the butter just enough to distribute the salt evenly.

14. If the butter is to go on the market it should be put up in neat attractive packages.

East African Highlands.

The young Englishman, be he officer or settler in the east African highlands, cuts a hardy figure. His clothes are few and far between. A sun hat, a brown flannel shirt with sleeves cut above the elbow and open to the chest, a pair of thin khaki knickerbockers cut short five inches at least above the knee, boots and a pair of putties comprise the whole attire. Nothing else is worn. The skin, exposed to sun, thorns and insects, becomes almost as dark as that of the natives and so hardened that it is nothing to ride all day with bare knees on the saddle—a truly Spartan discipline from which at least the visitor may be excused. — Strand Magazine.

A Dear Dog.

Fred Kelly was negotiating with a street dealer for an Airedale pup.

"How much?" asked Kelly.

"Three dollars."

"Well, I'll be along this afternoon again, and I may buy him."

"Better take him now. He'll probably be $5 by then."

"Why the raise?"

"Oh," said the dealer, "probably I'll become attached to him by that time."—Saturday Evening Post.

ORIGIN OF THE PEARL.

The Ancients Thought It Was a Drop of Dew From Heaven.

No record exists or even tradition as to the discovery of the first pearl. The mystery of its origin has doubtless contributed in no small degree to render it the prime favorite that it has ever been in the eyes of the orientals.

From time immemorial the nations of antiquity have used the pearl to decorate their persons and adorn their temples and we find many curious beliefs existing as to its origin. The one most prevalent in Pliny's time was that pearls were formed from the dews of heaven, falling into the open shells at breeding time, and it was in allusion to this pretty conceit that a noble Venetian lady named Corraro had a gold medal struck (bearing the date 1620) on the reverse side of which is an open shell receiving the drops of dew from heaven which form into pearls as they fall. The motto was "Rore divino" (by the divine dew).

In these more practical but less poetic days the generally accepted theory is that some foreign substance, possibly even a grain of sand, having by accident entered the shell of the oyster, a certain amount of irritation is induced which causes the exudation of a pearly secretion (known as nacre), and this effectually covers up the intruder, and also that with the growth of the oyster the pearl increases in size.

The pearl, unlike all other gems, requires no assistance from man to enhance its value, or from art to add one iota to its perfect loveliness.—National Magazine.

Mourning Smokes.

Speaking of the old "church warden" or "yard of clay" pipes, it may not be known that in the remoter country districts of Lancashire the "church warden" figures prominently at funerals. On the return of the mourners to the late home of the deceased a box of "long clays" is unsealed and the pipes handed to the male members of the company, who, ringed before the fire, indulge in the memories of old days called forth by the occasion. The circle of long clay pipes, with the circling clouds of smoke, harmonize well with the solemn suits of black and the subdued dignity of the company. At breaking up the pipes are snapped in significance that the occasion for their use is ended.—London Chronicle.

In Good Company.

A contemporary wants to know what's become of the old fashioned man who used to say, "I says, says I."

When last seen he was standing on a street corner in close conversation with the old fashioned man who says, "Sezee to me, sezee."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Home Secrets.

Teacher—Tommy, next time you are late bring an excuse from your father.

Tommy—Who? Pa? Why he ain't any good at excuses; ma finds him out every time.—Boston Transcript.

Mr. T. Whibbs of the G.T.R., spent Sunday and the holiday in Lindsay.

Reports from Chemong state that numerous families are at their cottages for the summer months.

The service at George Street Methodist Church Sunday morning, was inspiring and of a patriotic character. The pulpit was draped with a handsome Union Jack, which was presented to the church by Captain W. R. G. Higgins, Lieut. Hagerman, and Color-Sergeant Brown, of No. 7 Company. The flag was used for the first time Sunday morning.

The Rev. Mr. Peever gave an eloquent sermon, touching on the leading problems such as Bi-lingualism, Immigration, and Labour, and made a powerful appeal to all to be worthy citizens of a glorious Empire, with a prayer for a continuation of the hundred years peace.

The choir sang patriotic hymns, and the solo of the anthem was most effectively and feelingly taken by Mrs. Renwick.

Miss N. Ferris and Mr. Brydon, of Toronto, were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Downs, 782 Water St., for the week-end.

CHILDREN'S EYESIGHT

PEBLO

It is astonishing the number of children who suffer from the effects of eyestrain, and many of them are unjustly blamed for being unambitious or mentally stupid. It has been shown by authentic investigation under municipal direction that from 20 to 30 per cent. of the children in public schools have defective vision and should wear glasses. We make a specialty of examining children's sight by the most improved scientific methods, and if your child does not need glasses, we will tell you so frankly, and make no charge for the examination. But if your child should need glasses, we will guarantee that the glasses we fit are the proper correction, and will give perfect results. Our 10 years of successful optical business in this city is the guarantee we offer you.

We carry a special line of children's spectacle frames in heavy weight, in Gold Filled and Aluminum.

CONFIRMATION AT SACRED HEART

Thirty-nine Girls and Twenty-nine Boys

His Worship Bishop O'Brien, D.D., celebrated the 8.30 mass at the Church of the Sacred Heart, Sunday morning and assisted by Rev. J. J. O'Brien and Rev. J. V. McCauley; administered the Sacrament of Confirmation to thirty-nine girls and twenty-nine boys.

In the afternoon the children again assembled in the Church together with all the children from the Sacred Heart School and Acts of Consecration were read to the Sacred Heart of Jesus and the Blessed Virgin Mary by E. Foley and M. Martyn respectively., The afternoon ceremonies closed by Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament during which all the children united in singing the O Salutaris and Tantum Ergo.

Next Sunday at the Church of the Sacred Heart a large number of children will receive the first Communion.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

WHAT IS LOYALTY AND RESPECT WORTH?

Editor of the Review:

Sir:—

The action of the Examiner in offering a prize to induce the inhabitants of the city to show proper respect to their own invited guests, and the representative of their King, and Government, can only be explained on the ground of gross ignorance. A greater insult to the citizens themselves or to their invited guests could not be devised. Mut to make matters worse, and to rob the proceedings of even the semblance of decency, the prize is limited to five dollars. Think of it, and weigh your sense of self-respect against the Examiner's few dollars. Could it not add 25 cents more, or why did it not take up a collection? Poor Peterborough! Are you to become the laughing stock of Canada? Five dollars for our loyalty and respect combined.

Yours truly,
FAIRLY FLABBERGASTED.

FOURTH ROUND, GOLF.

The fourth round of the Stratton Trophy, all games must by played off by May 30th.

POLICE STOPPED THE DISTURBERS

A Little of Everything in Holiday Program.

Italians who had been drinking, were disorderly in a Victoria Ave. house last evening and the police were called.

The two principals of the fracas waged a merry battle for possession of a hatchet which when thrown narrowly missed hitting one of the policemen. Detectives Newhall and Meagher, however, soon stopped the row. Some of the participants will be summoned to Police Court as a result.

The holiday celebration also included a bar room fight last night to which the police gave attention.

Several of those who celebrated during the day were fined in Police Court this morning. The round up included a blacklister.

CLEAN UP DAY AT LINDSAY

Local Athletes Were Well to the Front.

The tournament at Lindsay yesterday proved an attraction for local athletes and their presence in the little town to the north was by no means a discredit to Peterboro. Walter Flowers, Peter Spratt and Chas. Thorpe cleaned up everything in sight and the former as a result of his showing holds a silver cup for being the best all round man.

The following is the record of the Peterboro trio:

100 yards—Flowers, first.
Standing High Jump—Flowers, first; Spratt, second.
Running High jump — Flowers, first; Spratt, second.
Pole valut, (8 ft. 2 in.), Spratt, first; Flowers, second.
Running, hop step and jump, Spratt, first; Flowers, second.
Standing, hop step and jump — Spratt, first; Flowers, second.
Standing broad jump — Spratt, first; Flowers, second.
One mile—Chas. Thorpe, first.
Half mile—Chas. Thorpe, second.

Chas. Thorpe was presented with a cup for winning the mile event.

Ball Team Lost.

Peter Spratt had a picked team from the city with him and he attempted to clean up the baseball tournament. His efforts were futile however as the team went down to defeat at the hands of the Olympia nine. Roy Smith who did the heaving pitched good ball and with the exception of one error he received fine support.

The following figured in the box score:—

Spratt, c.; Smyth, p.; Parson, 1b.; Paton, 2b.; Barrie, s.s.; Dickie, 3b.; Denison, l.f.; Rose, c.f.; Carson, r.f.

OBITUARY

THE LATE MRS. HAYES.

Mrs. Clara Hayes, passed away at the family residence, 836 Water placeStreet Saturday night. The funeral took place this morning to St. Peter's Cathedral and Cemetery.

The late Mrs. Hayes had been in failing health for some time. She was the widow of the late Edward Hayes.

A grown up family survive.

THE LATE MR. PRICE

The funeral of the late Samuel R. Price, who died Saturday evening after a short illness, was held this afternoon from his late residence in Otonabee, to the Little Lake Cemetery.

The deceased who was 66 years of age, was well known and highly respected throughout the community. He was an ex-member of the 57th Regiment and also one of the veterans of the old Peterboro Cricket Club. He leaves to mourn his loss a sorrowing widow and three daughters and two sons. He was a son of the late Rev. William Price. Members of the Corinthian Lodge, A.F. A.M., attended the funeral in a body.

THE LATE MR. FAWCETT

Andrew Fawcett, aged 77 years, an old resident of this city, passed away in Nicholls Hospital on Saturday evening.

The funeral took place to-day from the residence of Mr. C. Whatley, 730 Harvey Street to the Little Lake Cemetery. Rev. R. B. Grobb officiated.

Twenty dollars a pound was the price paid a few years ago for aluminum. Today The "SALADA" Tea Co. are commencing to use it to wrap their well-known tea. So light is this wonderful metal that a single sheet weighs no more than a similar sized sheet of letter paper.

Sir James Whitney Also Appears at the Track

TORONTO, May 26.—The opening of the race meet of the Ontario Jockey Club at the Woodbine on Saturday was marked by several events which made it the most notable affair in recent years in Toronto. The guests of honor were the Duke and Duchess of Connaught and the Princess Patricia and their suite, and the historic King's Plate was presented to the winner by the Governor-General. Earl Grey, who was to have been present, was forced by illness to stay away. The reappearance in public of Sir James Whitney, after his illness, added another interesting feature to the function.

Harry Giddings won his third King's Plate under ideal conditions and before the biggest throng ever assembled at Woodbine Park. The easy victory of Bee Hive was his second in succession, and followers of the Oakville stable fondly look to see Harry Bassett II. make it three straight next May.

The eight starters that lined up made it look a respectable field, but the long straggling finish showed what a negative chance bad Porcupine and the others that were nearly a sixteenth behind.

Seventh race, six furlongs, purse $600, for three-year-olds and up—1st, Bolala; 2nd, Duquesne; 3rd, J. H. Houghton. Time, 1.15.

SON OF KOSSUTH DEAD.

Hungarian Patriot Took Father's Place at Latter's Death.

BUDAPEST, May 26. — Francis Kossuth, son of the great Hungarian patriot, died here yesterday, aged 73. He had been an invalid for many months, and his death did not come as a surprise.

In January last, during a crisis in his illness Kossuth was married on his sick bed to Countess Benyorsky, widow of his life-long friend. Such had been the wish of Count Benyorsky, made on his deathbed, and Kossuth and the countess, who intended to marry in March, hastened the nuptials when Kossuth's illness took a turn fr the worse.

Francis Kossuth took his father's place as leader of the Hungarians soon after Louis Kossuth died in 1894. Up to the time of his illness Francis Kossuth led his countrymen, in their political struggles, with vigor and much success.

undertaking. Just when things were literally looking rather black, however, the door was pushed open and a Chinese guide made an unexpected appearance and the prisoner was free.

Into Southern Mongolia she penetrated about 120 miles. Near the frontier there were inns, mere sheds where one could put up, but beyond there was sheer and open prairie. The people were purely nomadic. Not a village was to be seen but here and there usually not far from a well, were groups of tents, called yourts, which were made of filthy felt, stretched over wicker frames. Both tents and people were in an extraordinary condition of dirt, but the Mongol encampments were uncommonly picturesque in a primitive way."

"Never shall I forget," she says, "riding at sunset one evening into one of these camps. On the plains where the tents stood were thousands of wild and shaggy ponies, and a number of the men were rounding them up. Besides being about the finest horsemen in the world, the Mongols are wonderfully expert with the lasso. A little company riding at full gallop, absolutely reckless of danger, is a sight to be remembered. The women that evening were folding sheep when I came up with them. They seem to do nearly all the hard work, and the men are much more imposing people, although the women have a great love of pretty clothes and ornaments and gratify it on every possible occasion. A bride, for instance, is quite a mass of decoration."

Inclined though she is to minimize ther isks that attended her rovings, Mrs. Bulstrode admits that at least once here in Southern Mongolia, her adventurousness led her into a situation that might have proven critical.

"White at Ta-Bol," she says, "where, unfortunately, but a few weeks later, Mr. Grant was murdered, I found myself within a day's journey of the most important lamasary of South Mongolia, Hankarawa. Promptly paying it a visit, I walked in unexpectedly upon a ceremony never before witnessed by Western eyes and surprised some two or three hundred lamas, men and boys, all squatting on the ground in the sunny forecourt of a temple. The red, orange and pale yellow of their clothes suggested great borders of tulips ranged on each side of a wide, flagged path leading up to the chief lama who, seated on a low throne on the steps of the temple was presiding over the assembly.

"A little group of men stripped to the waist formed the centre of attraction, and these, it transpired, were candidates for a degree, and were being examined by the seniors, and cross-examined by their junior colleagues of all ages, each side backing its fancy with wild clapping and gesticulation. My unexpected appearance with a camera in their midst was apparently most disconcerting, and one and all, they instantly covered their heads with the dark red sashes which are worn while officiating and upon ceremonial occasions. Quickly recovering their equanimity, however, they unveiled again, and, looking somewhat sheepish, resumed their occupation, and offered not the least objection to my presence, or when I proceeded to take a number of photographs.

"Had I happened, however, to find them in a different mood, the chances are that I should not be here, telling about it so glibly."

Having seen enough to make her decide that the Gobi Desert task was not physically impossible to her, Mrs. Bulstrode returned to Peking to find out both from the British and Chinese authorities whether there was any chance of being granted a passport; it was at once evident that there was not, and a few days later orders went forth from the Legations that no foreigners were to travel north of the Great Wall, which meant that even Kalgan was out of bounds. Both the British Legation and the high Chinese officials were annoyed that she should have ventured into Mongolia without official sanction. "I know now," she said, "that they were right. If I had attempted to cross the desert in the unsettled conditions, constant fighting and so forth, which at the time prevailed, I should most probably have been killed."

So she changed her plans, and, in company with an Englishman belonging to the Chinese cusoms service, named Gull, set off for North Mongolia. The journey thither was a stiff and exciting one. To begin with they took train to Werkneudinsk, in Siberia, and then went up the Selenga river in a Russian steamer, a trip which lasted three days and a half, and so reached Kiachta, where they had a lot of bother with the Russian customs on account of the arms and ammunition they carried. Eventually, however, they hired a "tarantas," or cart, with three horses, and set out for Urga, the capital of Mongolia, and by far its most important town. This took them eight days, the rivers, the Hara-Gol and the Ura-Gol, being in flood and having to be forded, no pleasant job. They met Russian emigrants on the way to the Mongolian gold-mines and bartered tinned meats with them for fresh mutton. One rather funny incident happened over a deal in eggs. Knowing no Russian, little Chinese and only a few words of Mongolian, Mrs. Bulstrode was in the habit of making drawings of what she wanted. She drew an egg in an egg-cup, and was met with looks of blank surprise. Then her companion had a brain-wave. He flapped his arms as though they were wings, and cried "Cock-o-doodle-doo!" and eggs were at once forthcoming.

So they reached the Holy City of Urga, where this traveller saw at least one sight which she declares she can never forget. For in the prison at Urga, to which she, the first white woman to enter it succeeded in gaining admission only after the greatest difficulty is meted out what Mrs. Bulstrode thinks, and probably correctly, must be the most cruel punishment on earth.

"The Mongolias," she said, "have it in them to be most diabolically cruel and a more terrible fate than befalls the Mongol malefa[ctor] at Urga it is difficult of conception. Within a small compound fenced in by high, spiked palisades are five or six dungeons. There are human beings in those dungeons, who are shut up for the remainder of their lives in heavy, iron-bound coffins, out of which they never, under conditions or for any purpose, move. They cannot sit upright, they cannot lie down flat, and they see daylight only for a very few minutes when their food is thrust into their coffins twice in the 24 hours.

"These dungeons are pitch-dark," Mrs. Bulstrode added, "and upon entering the first one we could see nobody—only the coffin-like, iron-bound boxes on low trestles, each with a hole about the size of a man's head in the side. In the five dungeons I counted about fifty of these coffins, all occupied. What makes it all the more horrible, too, is that many of these prisoners are educated, cultivated men, Chinese merchants, who are imprisoned for political offences as well as the Mongols who are in for serious thefts or for such offences as shooting animals on the sacred mountain or murder. One unfortunate is said to have existed in this living tomb for twenty years, though, that seems scarcely creditable. With Mr. Gull as an interpreter I managed to talk with one or two of the Chinese prisoners, and found them in a deplorable condition and quite hopeless.

"Their abject misery," she adds, "made it easy to understand the light-heartedness with which three Mongol soldiers went to their execution a few days later. Six months previously they had murdered their general, and in the interval they had been dragging out a miserable existence in the coffins. They looked ghastly enough after their incarceration and ate greedily the food which was offered to them when they were taken out of the carts. One of them shouted ribald jibes to the mandarin who was present in his official capacity.

"Come out and watch us die," he jeered. "That is what you are here for. Don't stop skulking in that tent." One of the others remarked to the lama who held the sacred picture of Budda before his eyes a few minutes prior to execution, "I don't mind dying, but I want to be a soldier when I am born again."

The lamas, Mrs. Bulstrode declares, are the dominating factor of Mongolia. Every family contributes at least one son to the priesthood, which is said to represent approximately 65 per cent. of the male population of the country. There are said to be 30,000 lamas in Urga alone, whose great temple, too, is the place of worship of the supreme head of the sect, Bogdo, the "Living God" of the Mongolian Buddhists. As it happened, Mrs. Bulstrode arrived in Urga at the time of the semi-religious, semi-athletic festival of T'sam Harem, or sacred dance, when lamas congregate in vast numbers to pay tribute to Bogdo, whose private life is a bit of a scandal. Now a dissipated looking old fellow, and nearly blind, Mrs. Bulstrode gathered that Bogdo was selected in some fashion when quite a child and was specially brought up and trained in the function he was to exercise. Nominally he is supposed to be a celibate, yet he has a wife, and at the time of our traveller's visit the whole town was excited over the approaching birth of a son. Nor was any concealment of this anomalous state of things attempted, in fact, in the new temple which had just been built at great cost in the centre of the Holy City are two thrones, one for the Bogdo, and one of equal grandeur for his wife. Facing the thrones is an enormous figure of Buddha, the largest in the world.

The Bogdo, in fact, made anything but a favorable impression on Mrs. Bulstrode. "The Russians," she says, "take advantage of his great wealth and sell 'The Living God' costly motor cars and champagne, while his wife and her influence are the commonplaces of conversation. Yet when the Bogdo makes one of his rare ceremonial appearances in public the people fling themselves to the ground in an ecstasy of adoration, and even high mandarins tremble with excitement."

Mrs. Bulstrode returned by "orton" or posting stages, to Kiachta, a journey which took four days. Quite a lot of minor accidents happened as a result of the furious pace which the Mongolian "post-riders" kept up, and a couple of Cossacks, who overtook the tarantas at one post, had to be called on for assistance. They found the vehicle, however, beyond repairs, and the journey was completed in ox-carts, with solid wooden wheels, drawn by ponies. From Kiachta Mrs. Bulstrode went on to Werkneudinsk, when she joined the Trans-Siberian railway for St. Petersburg.

She is now in Brittany where she will set about writing the detailed story of her experiences. "Meanwhile," she said, "it may possibly be of interest to know that the total expenses of my trip were not over $1,600 for each of the two years that I was away."

"MY KIDNEYS HURT ME ALL THE TIME"

Gin Pills Cured Them. Free Sample Box Leads to Cure.

Only those who have been tortured with Kidney Trouble can appreciate how Mr. Trumper suffered. Being a railroad man, he was called upon to do all kinds of heavy work. The constant strain of lifting, weakened the kidneys.

I received the sample box of Gin Pills and was greatly benefitted by them. My kidneys were in such bad condition I could not lift or stoop without pain. In fact, they pained me nearly all the time. I have taken three boxes of Gin Pills, working all the time at heavy work on the railroad and did not lose a day.

FOUR WINTERS OF RHEUMATISM

Cured of Sciatica And Muscular Rheumatism By "Fruit-a-tives"

RIDGETOWN, ONT., MAY 21st, 1913.

"Fruit-a-tives" cured me of Rheumatism. It was the only medicine that made any impression on me. I was a terrible sufferer from Rheumatism. I was laid up for four winters with Sciatica and Muscular Rheumatism, and was completely crippled.

Some neighbor of mine told me that "Fruit-a-tives" helped him, and I started in to take them. I used "Fruit-a-tives" faithfully for two years, taking them every day as I saw they were doing me good, and the results were marvellous.

For over two years, I have been completely free from any Rheumatic Pains whatever, and I give "Fruit-a-tives" the credit." W. H. RACHER.

PETES DIVIDE HOLIDAY BILL WITH SMITH'S TRIBE

Won Morning Engagement by Healthy Hitting and Tied Up Second Game in the Ninth With Some More, Only to Lose Out in the Tenth.

ONE poke into safe territory in the ninth innings of the afternoon struggle yesterday would have made the Petes winners of the holiday bill. That one poke did not materialize, and the fans had to be content with an even break, the locals carrying off the morning encounter by a score of 7-1, and losing the afternoon battle to Erie 8-6. It was only after a game fight that Curley Blount's much improved hirelings conceded victory to the invaders in the afternoon. They made matters so interesting in the ninth frame that after two had died, four hits, two of them doubles, accounted for four runs and a tie score. The Yanks came strong in the tenth, however, and with the aid of two passes by Schettler, an error and a bingle, shoved two runs across the pan and away went the old ball game. The rally in the ninth period was one of those old time affairs, which made the fans sit up and utilize their lungs, thorax, arms and everything else, and the energy although it did not bring ultimate victory was not wasted.

The morning game was a direct contrast to the afternoon set to, as Mr. K. Belting, our esteemed tutor of all that pertains to Sweden, uncorked a new line of professional tutorship and taught the Yankees how to hit them not when they meant something. The Swede, although touched up for seven bingles, kept them well scattered, and only in the first innings did Heinie Smith's fellowmen score. In that inning Belting issued a ticket to the first man, merely for hospitality's sake, and along came a husky Home Ruler by the name of Shaeffer, who smote the pill for two bags. Shaeffer, by the way led the league murderers last year as a member of the Guelph Club, noted for its classy uniforms of ancient blue. The Yanks were never dangerous after the first innings.

The game was played in a drizzle of damp. The ninth frame was pulled off in a healthy downpour of the crop producing variety, but it was not productive of any crop of runs for the Yanks. Our own Mr. Mully Miller, whose style at the pan is all his own, collected three healthy bingles during the game, while Curley Blount, Gorman and Miller scored a deuce of runs each.

The locals grabbed their runs in the third, fifth and seventh. Gorman got a life on an error in the third, went to third on Miller's single and scored on Belting's sacrifice poke to left. Blount struck out, but Dunn let the sphere get away from him, and Curley did not stop till he had hit second. Byrne sacrificed Miller home and Blount scored on Welsh's bingle. In the fifth, Miller singled, but was doubled up on Belting's grounder. Blount walked, pilfered second and scored on Byrne's two base clout. In the seventh, Gorman got on via the boot route, swiped the keystone sack and scored on Miller's poke. Belting laid one down to Morris, who threw badly to the plate, and Miller scored, Belting going to second. Behan foozled Byrne's roller and Belting scored.

In the morning game the fans had their first chance to look over Welsh, the new left gardener secured from Fort Wayne. The newcomer showed loads of speed in the outfield and had a bingle at the opportune moment. In the afternoon he had two clouts and a neat catch.

Afternoon Game.

Sterling can blame no one but himself for the loss of a heartbreaking struggle. The big fellow was suffering from a sore foot. He lacked control and was continually in trouble. In the second frame, his own bad throw to first, a pass and three hits netted the Yanks three runs. In this frame Kelly Harris hit for three sacks with two and nothing on him. The Yanks collected another in the third when Gygli the first man up, was passed, Shaeffer singled, Harris was passed and Wiltse sent a long sacrifice fly to Wilcox. Another was counted in the sixth when Wiltse, the first man up walked, went to second on Fitzpatrick's infield out and scored on Dawson's single. In the eighth Behan, the first man up was passed, was sacrificed along and scored on McNeil's wallop.

Blount Stole Home.

The locals started in as though they were going to make matters interesting for Fitz. Blount poled a long fly to left, but Byrne and Welsh singled, the former being out stealing and the latter being caught off first base. There was nothing more stirring until the fourth, when Blount poked one through second, went to second and third on infield outs and stole home. Blount's steal was the niftiest piece of work pulled during the day. He caught Fitzpatrick on the double wind up and did the Kelly to perfection.

In the fifth Fox singled and scored on Miller's double. It was in the ninth that the locals uncorked a revengeful spirit. Wilcox singled and went to third on two outs. Kelly, who replaced Miller when he was injured, walked, and Schettler, hitting for Sterling, poked out a double to left centre, scoring Kelly and Wilcox. Blount then doubled along the third base line, and Schettler scored. Joe Byrne came through with the punch that sent Blount over with the tieing run. Joe pilfered second, but was left stranded when Welsh grounded out.

The Yanks got real mad in the tenth, and Schettler, who was sent to the mound, was very kind hearted. Schettler looked as though he was cold when he went in. He passed Harris, Behan sacrificed and Wiltse singled, scoring Harris. McNeil was safe on a fielder's choice. Wiltse, who had gone to third on an overthrow, being caught at the plate. Dunn walked and Wilcox fumbled Dawson's fly, McNeil counting. The locals went out in order in their half of the tenth.

In the eighth inning Miller was forced to retire from the game. While tagging McNeil at the plate, his right hand was badly spiked.

Manager Blount's Bee Hive to home in the fourth inning of the afternoon battle was a nice piece of work. He caught McNeil and Fitzpatrick in slumberland.

Curly crossed the pan on four occasions, smote out a single and double, Jesse Jimmied two sacks and accepted five chances. Fair for one day. Eh?

Frank Fox glued his mitts to fifteen chances without the sign of a boot and had a clout at the leather.

Joe Byrne got down pretty soft. Only three chances all day. Joe occupied himself in the spare moments by poling out three hits and two telling sacrifices.

Mully Miller is the hard luck guy. Just when he renewed acquaintances with his batting optic the sturdy backstop almost parted with a digit. He was spiked in the afternoon game and will probably be out for a few days.

Hospital list—Sterling, a bad foot, Creswell in bed, Mully Miller spiked hand.

The morgue—Old Folks Templin, Louie Cook and Peanuts Cancella.

Inquests are being held over Umpires Walsh and Evans while Umps Raley has jumped—not of his own accord.

Creswell would have looked nice as a pinch pitcher, if the term is o.k. in the tenth. The locals are without a port wing man at the present.

Dawson the Yank's Centerfielder is one of the shiftiest in the league.

Gygli at first is no laugh. He's a real scream as a first sacker.

Shaeffer is the same old clouter. The master murderer of last year's circuit still leans on 'em like a real hitter.

All that Knute Belting wishes for now is a crack at the Reislingites.

No one felt more disappointed over his inability to locate the objective point than Bob Sterling did himself. The big fellow will surely do better.

How many players would have expressed it to second, when Dunn dropped that third strike in the morning game, as Curly Blount did ?

Umps Miller, he with the basso voice, looks like the best bet in this league. The deep voiced, quiet, but stern official, shaped up like a real manipulator of the indicator. Mr. U. Miller sure has some voice, but outside of that he has real genuine important judgment and that's what counts.

His umps was struck on the mask by a foul of the vicious variety. It shook him up some. He was also the recipient of two fouls, placed on his noble chest. He shook 'em all off and just to show the fans that his cellarlike voice had not been punctured he came right back with ball-rl-rl-rl. Get away or I'll bite you.

That fellow Welsh is a rare-bit. His stab of Dunn's line drive in the morning disaster was great.

Mr. Morris who slabbed for Erie in the morning was previously box-scored as Morse. If the latter be his name, there is little in one after all, as the Yank had nothing in the code that was a secret.

Fitpatrick hurled nice ball in the afternoon up till that glorious ninth.

Wednesday's game at Riverside Park, will start at 2 o'clock to allow the Erie team to connect with the 4.33 C.P.R. train.

SUSPENSIONS WERE LIFTED

Manager Smith and Catcher McNeil Granted a Respite

FINES OF $50 AND $75

The morning encounter on the holiday was delayed, awaiting instructions from President Fitzgerald. Manager Smith and Catcher McNeil of the Yanks drew suspensions of one week and two weeks respectively as well as fines of $25 and $50 for their little tit bit with Umps Evans at Ottawa on Saturday, but via the long distance phone, the president in conversation with George O'Neil, owner of the Erie Club, raised the suspensions, but increased the fines to $50 and $75. Umpire Miller, who had instructions concerning the suspensions, objected to Manager Smith playing, but after a conference it was decided by consent of Manager Blount and the local directors that Smith be allowed to play. A wire confirming the telephone message was received at the grounds about the seventh innigs.

GEORGE STREET NINE DEFEATED Y. TEAM

With both teams hitting freely and working the outfielders hard, the Church League was opened on Saturday afternoon at the Nicholls Oval when the George Street team trimmed the Y.M.C.A. nine by 15 to 8.

Batteries:
George Street—Smith and Darling.
Y.M.C.A.—Kinnear and Horsfield.
Umpire—Loucks.

The game between St. Paul's and St. Andrew's did not materialize. St. Andrews decided to drop out of the league. Another team is being secured to take the place of St. Andrews.

THE FIRST WOMAN TO LOOK UPON WORLD'S MOST AWFUL PUNISHMENT

Graphic Story of Queer Adventures Among Brigands, Pirates and Murderous Native Fanatics is Told by Traveller, who has Just Returned from a Two Years' Journey Through the Wildest Regions of Mongolia and the Least Known Parts of China.—Horrors of the Prisons at Urga, Which no White Woman had Previously Entered and Where Educated Men are Imprisoned for Life in Coffin-like Boxes which they Never Leave, and in which they Can Neither Sit Upright or Lie Full Length. Unwashed Mongols Who Fear to Use Water Lest they Become Fish in the Hereafter.

London, May 26.—It is getting so that no one is longer surprised at hearing that an English woman is setting out alone for, or just returning alone from, some wild, uncivilized and little known region of the globe in which no traveller's life is safe. Since Mrs. French Sheldon set the example by adventuring through Central Africa the name of the fair ones who have followed her example has become legion and the list is being increased every day. It seems only yesterday, in fact, that the papers were full of the adventures of Mrs. Marguerite Robey who played the part of a "medicine woman" in the heart of the Congo and averted war between two powerful and savage tribes by arbitrating twixt their respective chiefs, and those of Miss Beatrice Grimshaw, among the cannibals, sharks and reptiles of Papua. Since then we have had the experiences of Mrs. Amaury Talbot among the expert poisoners and torturers of the African district of which her husband is District Commissioner, and seen the beautiful Countess Molitor setting off, almost blithely, in an attempt to cross the great desert of Arabia where no European is known to have set foot and where almost certain death awaits the explorer.

Worthy in every respect to be classed with the intrepid women mentioned is the latest feminine traveller in wild places. Mrs. Beatrix Bulstrode, an Englishwoman who has just returned to this country after wanderings that have lasted for nearly two years in the least known, and, to a foreigner, most dangerous corners of the Chinese Empire and through Mongolian wastes where rarely a white woman has been seen before, and where extinction in a variety of forms has to be taken into account by the traveller. Her adventures there include the discovery of what surely must be the most terrible form of punishment in the world and some of the queerest religious rites in existence, wanderings in regions infested with brigands of the "White Wolf" breed and over seas swarming with pirates, and long and lonely journeyings through a land where civil war was raging and over ground that had been recently strewn with headless corpses.

Tall, fair and extremely good-looking, with masses of brown hair, intelligent eyes with determination in them and a bearing that suggests great placidity, balanced by a keen sense of humor, Mrs. Bulstrode considerably surprised her interviewer by declaring that, far from being an experienced globe-trotter before she started off to wander far from the beaten track in China, she has, apart from some months in Canada and an intimate acquaintance with nearer Europe, travelled no further east from her native land than Genoa, the birthplace of another traveller not wholly unknown to fame—one Christopher Columbus.

"But China always has had a fascination for me," she said, "and when the death of my husband made me long to put familiar scenes behind me and seek distraction in change, I decided to satisfy my old craving and put in a few months—I planned for six at the beginning—in travelling through some of the less known parts of China, and, if it were humanly possible, getting to Northern Mongolia by the caravan route across the Gobi Desert."

So off she started in September, 1911, landing at Hong Kong, and before the end of her journeyings had travelled the whole length of China and right across the Flowery Kingdom from south to north, a distance of some thousands of miles, not to mention some 700 in Mongolia. From Hong Kong she went by sea to Fuchow. Then, mostly in a sedan chair, she wandered in Southern China, and had a lot of queer adventures. Later, in a thirty-year-old ocean tramp whose captain frankly owned her unseaworthy, the Englishwoman sailed once more, bound this time for the mouth of the Yangste-Kiang, and soon became aware that the possibility of their being robbed and perhaps murdered by pirates was causing her skipper keen anxiety. Such a proceeding, on this route, it seems, generally begins with a mutiny by the native crew, when the vessel is captured and hove to, and adherents of the mutineers appear as if by magic in native craft, and strip ship and passengers of all their valuables, the voyagers being uncommonly lucky if they escape with their lives.

This time no such attack occurred, however, and a few days afterwards Mrs. Bulstrode was off on her 1,200 mile voyage up the great river of China first in her "sampan" with a crew of native oarsmen, and then in a British steamer officered by worthies who irresistibly suggested Cutcliffe Hyne's famous Kettle and McTodd. She spent her first Christmas in China on this ship in a fashion which doubtless will make an interesting chapter in the chronicle of her adventures which Mrs. Bulstrode now proposes to write. Thus she penetrated west to 60 miles above Ichang, and then, returning to Hank-Kow, made her way north to the capital, and eventually set out from Peking for Southern Mongolia travelling in a Peking cart and accompanied by two coolies. Mrs. Bulstrode had picked up only a smattering of Chinese, and so during the whole of her wanderings among the Mongols the little party had to depend mainly on the sign language.

In Mongolia it was that her queerest adventures befell the traveller, and it is for this reason that her doings in China itself have been summarized here in so sketchy a fashion. Perhaps the most vivid impression of the inhabitants of Mongolia which she brought away was their invariably filthy condition, for the Mongols, it seems, do not wash from one year's end to another. Quite possibly you wouldn't either if you held a similar belief to theirs, for the Mongols, according to Mrs. Bulstrode, are firmly convinced that if they make too lavish a use of water in this incarnation, they will be fishes in the next, so they naturally take no chances. They believe, by the way, in the almost instant transmigration of souls, and consequently are almost entirely careless of their dead. "They throw them out on the hillside," remarked Mrs. Bulstrode, "where dogs and vultures promptly eat them. 'What does it matter?' they say. 'The body is only a new case for the spirit.' No doubt this is another reason why they never wash their 'cases.'"

All during her travels in Mongolia, Mrs. Bulstrode wore riding breeches and a long coat and rode astride, and this led to her being almost invariably mistaken for a man, a thing probably all to the good so far as her safety was concerned, and that now and then had amusing results. Being a remarkably good-looking woman she naturally made an uncommonly personable man, and more than once she got the Mongolian variety of the "glad eye." At one point, too, she made quite a complete conquest, a most attractive Mongol girl, who belonged to a lama, falling an instant victim of her "masculine charms," and insisting on carrying on an ardent flirtation. Referring to her attire, Mrs. Bulstrode remarked, "You trust your luck pretty much in Mongolia. You don't do any undressing. You put on your big fur coat, slip a revolver under the pillow and go to sleep."

Mrs. Bulstrode, (feeling, she says, like a Gilbert and Sullivan pirate,) carried, in slings and holsters, two Colt revolvers, a shot-gun and a Mouser, and thought it prudent, now and then, to demonstrate that she could use these weapons. "I am far from being a crack shot," she says, "but I have practised quite a lot, both with a rifle and with a pistol, and I usually can hit what I aim at. So, on one occasion when feeling a little doubtful about the attitude of the people among whom I was travelling, and an eagle swooped conveniently low, I shot it, and the moral effect seemed to be good." She makes little of the dangers attending her wanderings among the Mongols, who she says are easy to get along with if one is careful to stroke them the right way, but the fact remains that a short time after she passed through Ta-Bol in Southern Mongolia, an Englishman named Grant, who was in the telegraph service, was butchered there in cold blood for the sake of his food and stores.

It was while on her way from Peking to Kalgan, on the way to Southern Mongolia, that an unpleasant adventure befell the traveller. She had made a halt at the famous Ming tombs for the purpose of seeing them, and leaving her men outside with the animals, she struck a bargain with the official guardian of the entrance (who tried, without success, to cheat her,) and entered the sacred precincts. At the inner gate or doorway of one of the principal temples she was stopped by another stout fellow who demanded a dollar.

"It never does to let a Chinaman think he can bully you," said Mrs. Bulstrode, "and as I happen to be a fairly large person myself I simply refused to give him the money, pushed past him and went in. Then, of course, he'd got me. He simply turned the key, and there was I securely locked in an almost pitch-dark temple, the only visitor to the place that day, and with no means of getting out till the door was unlocked again."

It was not a pleasant situation by any means, but it is characteristic of Mrs. Bulstrode that she lost no time in speculating on what was going to happen to her, but promptly began trying to discover how she was to escape. Two or three plans that seemed to promise well she tried, but none of them could be utilized. The only way that looked at all promising was to mount an infernal staircase in the temple and then to scale a thirty foot wall which offered only the slightest assistance for such an

FINE SHOW AT THE GRAND OPERA HOUSE

The Rialto Review, a very clever Tabloid Musical Comedy Company opened a week's engagement at the Opera House yesterday, when they more than pleased the large audiences matinee and night. Their initial offering was a very pretty and clean cut performance of "Donny Brook Fair" in which a group of very pretty girls made up a real good Harmony Chorus in support of the following vaudeville acts, which by the way is the best ever seen in Peterboro even at higher prices, and include Mr. Wm. O'Clare, the young Irish singer, and yodler of the Chauncey Olcott type, assisted by his Shamrock Girls. A very clever and funny team is that of De Loss and Pearl who style themselves as Dynamiters of the Blues. They proved to be all they claim. Another bright feature is the pretty Dancing Trio, "Stone & Desmond Sisters" who are possibly the leaders in that line, while Miss Grace Farnum the Prima Donna Soprano of the company seems to be in a class by herself. All in all it is the best Tabloid Musical Comedy Company that has ever visited Peterboro and would shame many of the higher price attractions. They appear here all week.

Are You Going to Muskoka This Summer?

If so take the 10.20 a.m. fast express from Toronto, daily except Sunday, via Grand Trunk Railway and arrive Muskoka Wharf 1.45 p.m. where direct connections are made with steamers for points on Muskoka Lakes. This train carries Parlor Library Buffet car and first-class coaches and passengers are assured of a comfortable ride along the most interesting route to Muskoka Wharf, which is the original gateway to the far-famed Muskoka Lakes.

The curative odor of balsam and pine, and the preponderance of water area to land surface, together with the high altitude (1000 feet above the sea) render hay fever an impossible condition and perfect immunity from this annoying ailment is assured.

Return connection is made with train leaving Muskoka Wharf at 10.30 a.m. daily except Sunday, arriving Toronto 2.56 p.m.

Tourist tickets at low fares are now on sale to Muskoka Lakes points, good for stop-over and valid to return until December 30th, 1914.

If you are contemplating making a trip ask Grand Trunk Agents for full particulars or write C. E. Horning, District Passenger Agent, Union Station, Toronto, Ont.

Liability is Limited.

WASHINGTON, May 26.—Practically nothing may be recovered by those who lost relatives or baggage in the Titanic disaster, as a result of a decision yesterday by the Supreme Court.

The court held that the liability of the Oceanic Steam Navigation Co. against the $13,000,000 in claims against it as owner of the Titanic is limited in the suits in the United States by the American limited liability law of 1851 to the statute of salvage recovered and the freight and passage money, received on the Titanic's voyage.

Long Wait Rewarded.

FAREWELL CONCERT BY TEMPLE BAND

Will Leave Thursday Midnight for Their Trip

The Temple Band leaves to-morrow night on the midnight train for Montreal, where they will give a great musical festival and board the Alsmia, sailing at day break on Saturday.

Before leaving to-morrow night they will give a farewell concert to the citizens of Peterboro at 8 o'clock at the Temple. All are cordially invited. No admission. A free will offering will be taken to help the band in defraying their expenses.

Adjutant McElhiney sent out on Saturday about two hundred appeals for assistance, but is feeling disappointed at the poor response, seeing it will benefit the city and citizens generally, as well as help the organization to better do their work when they return.

The Adjutant is very thankful, however, for those who have helped, and he appreciates it very much indeed.

The programme for to-morrow night's concert will appear in Thursday's issue.

DUKE RECEIVES PEACE ENVOYS AT GARDEN PARTY

Canadian Press Despatch.

Toronto, May 27.—Twenty-three hundred acceptances were received for the garden party given by Sir John Gibson at Sir Edmund Osler's residence late this afternoon. For fifteen minutes just before the guests arrived the Duke of Connaught received and chatted with the Mexican peace delegation who with their families numbering twenty or thirty persons arrived from Niagara Falls just before noon.

Through some remarkable oversight when the distinguished foreigners arrived at the station, there was not a single representative of the City of Toronto to meet them.

PRESENTATION TO MRS. MANSELL AND MISS FOOT

On the eve of her departure from Peterborough, the Ladies' Aid and Missionary Society of Charlotte St. Methodist Church presented Mrs. Mansell with an address and a handsome solid silver toilet and manicure set with engraved monogram on each piece. The occasion was to give Mrs. Mansell some token of appreciation of her work in Charlotte St. Church. Mrs. Mansell was also the recipient of an initealed umbrella and address from her Sunday School class who part with a beloved teacher with sincere regret. Miss L. Foot, who has been untiring in assisting Mrs. Mansell in her duties, was presented with a pearl and Peridot Pin by the ladies and with a beautiful necklace with cameo and pearl pendant by Mrs. Morrison's Sunday School Class and also with addresses. They leave this afternoon for Toronto and later Cleveland where they will reside.

Acting Crown Attorney is Taking up the Matter With Coroner Greer

Acting Crown Attorney Wearing will confer with Dr. Greer, coroner in the case of S. T. Battye's death, this afternoon and there is a chance that an inquest will be opened. If it is decided to probe the circumstances surrounding the fatality the body which was laid at rest in Little Lake Cemetery will be exhumed. The action of the crown attorney is prompted by talk which is going around to the effect that an investigation was warranted by the unusual death.

Coroner Greer when spoken to by the Review representative stated that he was satisfied death was purely accidental. He explained that Battye had been put to his room by the Grand Hotel employees but that he evidently refused to remain there. He was intoxicated at the time. The coroner stated that the railing over which Battye fell was a regulation hand rail, the same as is used in all hotels. Battye fell half over the rail leading from the third flat to the second and slid down it till the turn in the railing was reached where he fell headlong to the floor below. Death resulted from a hemorrhage of the brain. The coroner stated that in his opinion the hotel officials were in no way liable to action for damages.

The case was not reported to the crown attorney at all.

The expenses of burying Battye were paid by his fellow employees on the Bell Telephone construction gang.

TWO ACCIDENTS PROVE FATAL

BROCKVILLE, Ont., May 27.—Two tragedies marked Victoria Day in Brockville. Harold Barton, aged 22, employed as salesman, became entangled in the gearing of a test car of the Atlas Auto Co., on which he was joy riding with four other young men, and received a fractured skull, besides other injuries. Barton died at an early hour yesterday without regaining consciousness. George Collins, a veteran member of the fire department, was missed Monday night from duty. His body was found floating in the river.

AGREED THUS FAR

Mediation Gives Promise of Success

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., May 27.—Substantial agreement on many of the main points involved in the mediation conference has been reached by the American and Mexican delegates.

The discussion yesterday covered the actual terms and details of many of the things deemed necessary to the pacification of Mexico. The mediators and the opposing delegates were decidedly optimistic. An early agreement is now looked for.

The situation was summed up in the following by Justice Lamar upon the authority of the mediators:

"We have begun to discuss the actual terms and details of a plan of pacification. On a number of them we find ourselves in substantial agreement. Others are still under discussion, and as to them there has been no disagreement. It will, of course, be improper for us to specify the particular points we have discussed or those upon which we have agreed, or those we will consider further."

From the mediators themselves it was learned later in the day that some vital points had been discussed in to-day's developments. These are understood to include the manner in which the present regime in Mexico City would give way to a new provisional government.

That Gen. Huerta had given his consent to the program thus far outlined here was one of the reports, from reliable sources, upon which some of the optimism displayed by all parties to the conference was believed to be based.

The Mexican delegates as well as the Americans are anxious that the transition in Mexico City shall be smooth and unattended by any disturbances. So they are approaching the question of personnel for the new government with extraordinary care and a consciousness of the sensibilities of the Mexican people.

MURDER VERDICT

Inquest Into Tragedy Reveals Evidence of Foul Play

CHATHAM, May 27.— At the inquest last night into the death of William Donnelly, whose body was found floating in the creek under the C.P.R. bridge near Princess street, last Wednesday morning, before Coroner C. R. Charteris, the jury found that Donnelly came to his death by being struck on the head by some person as yet unknown. The murder is supposed to have been committed last Tuesday night about 10 o'clock. Jacob Libertus, colored, stated that when he had passed the vicinity of the tragedy that night at that hour, he saw the outlines of three men on the bridge. The men were using loud and angry language. Dr. R. V. Bray, who conducted the autopsy, testified that Donnelly had a gash in the head back of the left ear, probably caused by a pair of steel knuckles.

FORTY HORSES ARE BURNED WHEN FIRE DESTROYS STABLES

Business Section of Atlin, B.C., is Wiped Out by Flames—One Death is Recorded in Cleveland Conflagration—Forest Fires Begin Devastation in Nova Scotia—Rocket Causes Blaze in Wallaceburg.

HAMILTON, May 27.—Fire of unknown origin broke out about midnight in the premises of the Wood Milling Co., Main street east, between Catherine and John streets. Behind the plant was a big two-storey frame stable, which was completely gutted, in which thirty or forty valuable horses were burned to death.

The four-storey brick building of the Wood Company was at an early hour yesterday morning about destroyed, and the flames were threatening the whole of the business block next to it.

The building is next door to the partly wrecked Waldorf Hotel, where the new Connaught Hotel is to be erected. In the big business block are located the W. E. Sanford Clothing Manufacturing Co., the McPherson-Glassco Co., wholesale groceries; the Bank of Nova Scotia, the paint factory of Bleicher and Reche. This is the same block in which the big fire occurred a few months ago, in which the H., G. & B. station was burned down.

The entire fire apparatus of the city is at work at an early hour, including the steamers, and extra hose was sent for, in the prospects of a big and stubborn fight.

Atlin, B.C., Fire-Swept.

VANCOUVER, B.C., May 27.—The business section of Atlin, a mining centre in northern British Columbia, was wiped out by fire Sunday, starting in the Kershaw Hotel. That building, the Vancouver and Northern Hotels, postoffice, Government telegraph office, and ten stores, mostly on the north side of Main street, were consumed. Loss, $100,000 or more, practically no insurance.

Fire in Coast Coal Mine.

VANCOUVER, May 27.—Fire of incendiary origin yesterday destroyed the tipple of the South Wellington Mine, owned by the Pacific Coast Coal Co., with a loss of $20,000. The work of rebuilding has been commenced and a new tipple is expected to be in operation in ten days.

Farmer's Barn Burned.

KINGSTON, Ont., May 27.—Heavy electrical storms passed over this district yesterday morning. A barn and two sheds owned by Edward Harker, one mile north of Sydenham, were struck by lightning and destroyed with a loss of $2,000.

Forest Fires in Nova Scotia.

HALIFAX, N.S., May 17. — Forest fires began their annual devastation Monday when, driven by a fifty-mile gale, they swept from the woods back of the villages of Peucell's Cove and Ferguson's Cove two fishing and summer hamlets on the western shores of the Northwest Arm and Halifax harbor, destroying a church and a half dozen houses, and threatening the destruction of the great fortifications.

Life Lost in Cleveland Conflagration.

CLEVELAND, O., May 27. — One was burned to death in the conflagration, which wrought damage estimated at $1,500,000 in the lumber yard district along the Cuyahoga river Monday night. While policemen were clearing the damaged central viaduct, an unknown man became confused and leaped from the bridge into the centre of the flames, 75 feet below. He was incinerated.

Fire Near Moncton.

MONCTON, N.B., May 27. — Fanned by a high wind, fire which broke out at Berry's Mills, eight miles from here, Monday afternoon, destroyed seven buildings with a loss of about $10,000. A fortunate change in the wind saved the village.

Rocket Causes $15,000 Fire.

WALLACEBURG, Ont., May 27.—As a result of a rocket falling on to a stack of flax belonging to the Canada Flax Mills Limited, their entire crop of flax of three years of which only part had been threshed, was burned Monday night. Loss about $15,000. No insurance.

MILITANTS REFUSED BAIL AFTER THRILLING DISCLOSURES

Five Women in London Police Court Had Entire Apparatus For Blowing Up Buildings.

LONDON, May 27. — The suffragette prisoners arrested by the police during a raid on a west-end flat on May 21 were brought before the Magistrate yesterday, and after seeing the exhibits he took such a serious view of the case that he refused all offers of bail. They were charged with conspiracy. The five women who had previously refused to give their names yesterday identified themselves in the court as Mrs. H. F. Alice Hall, and Miss Emmeline Hall, Grace Roe, Julia Jamieson, and Ellen Armes. The exhibits seized in the flat included a new shrapnel grenade of ingenious manufacture, coils of fuse, and plans of hous with instructions how to reach them, and as to the usual movements of the police in the vicinity.

Memorandums were found in the flat regarding payments to militant suffragettes and also concerning travelling expenses, including the journey from Paris to England of Miss Christabel Pankhurst.

Emmeline Hall and Grace Roe became so uproarious in the prisoners' enclosure during the hearing that they had to be removed, and during the process kicked and shrieked at the top of their voices. Emmeline Hall shouted:

"I have been forcibly fed twice daily, and am nearly dead as a result."

She seemed half demented as she struggled with the police. Her hat was torn off, her clothes disarranged, and her hair dishevelled.

"You beasts*" she shrieked as she was carried out of the court to the cells.

One development of the women's war occasioned much comment yesterday. This was the announcement of Mrs. George Fred. Watts, widow of the Academician, that she feels compelled in consequence of the outrages committed by the militant suffragettes to close to the public the collection of her husband's paintings and sculpture.

HAMILTON MAN SECURED AS MANAGER OF PUBLIC UTILITIES

C. L. Howse Gets Position at Salary of $2400 --- Will Start July 1

At a meeting of the Water Commissioners last night, the application of C. L. Howse, E.E., of Hamilton, for the position of manager of public utilities was favored and this morning Mr. Howse accepted the position. The salary is $2400 and duties commence July 1.

Mr. Howse has been with the Hydro-Electric department at Hamilton and has had general experience which the Commissioners feel, qualify him for the position here.

Strong comments on the high-handed methods, extravagance and laxity of energy were heard at the meeting when Superintendent Fawcett of the Water Works came in for considerable discussion. Unfortunately Mr. Fawcett was unable to be present.

The Superintendent while praised for his work while here, was disciplined for his extravagant methods and ill temper by Chairman T. F. Matthews. Both other members Messrs. Moore and Hicks expressed themselves in the same terms.

The discussion arose when the matter of appointing a manager for the Utilities Commission was being discussed.

"Mr. Fawcett has stated that he would resign if another man were appointed over him," remarked W. H. Moore.

"Well, it might facilitate matters then," remarked Mr. Matthews.

"Mr. Fawcett has done a great deal of good work and is an excellent man but for those faults," said the Chairman.

"What about keeping Mr. Haley of the department on the pay roll ?" asked Mr. Moore.

After a few minutes discussion it was decided to keep Mr. Haley as he could come in handy if a change were made. Mention was made about two leaves of a journal being missing but very little was said in regard to the matter.

ENGINEERING WORK WILL NOT BE CARRIED OUT UNDER ONE ENGINEER

Mayor Buller Submits Figures and Says Combination Scheme Would Save Nearly $3000 Each Year but Commissioners do not Fall in Line

The proposed reorganization of the engineering departments of the city was turned down by the Water Commissioners last evening. Mayor Buller and Alderman Duncan, Anderson and Johnston waited on the commissioners for their final action.

Mayor Buller submitted figures whereby the saving would be nearly three thousand dollars each year.

"We are laying great stress on the working out part of this plan," said Mayor Buller, in introducing the matter to the members. "We are not forcing the Commissioners to take this matter over.

"You are very conservative in your estimates," remarked Chairman Matthews. Mr. Hicks also agreed with the chairman. "It's the systemizing of the system," contended the Mayor.

Mr. Moore was of the opinion that the work would be too much for the one man. It was better to defer the matter for a couple of years. In two or three years they would be in better shape to talk about the matter.

"Your argument to me is like one we had about buying a paving plant," remarked the Mayor.

"Better let it go for a couple of years," said Mr. Hicks.

Ald. Johnston pointed out the great benefits they would obtain by the move. The Hydro commission was still in its teens.

"It's very much in its infancy," remarked the chairman.

"Oh, not much," answered Ald. Johnston.

"It's only the fringe of the garment," said Mr. Moore smiling at his colleagues.

Ald. Duncan gave his views, which upheld the argument of the Mayor and Ald. Johnston.

"I assume then you don't look favorably on our scheme," said Ald. Johnston.

"I think you are right, Mr. Johnston," said the Chairman as the matter was dropped.

"We are not going to run this place on village basis any longer," concluded the Mayor.

The Mayor's Statement.

The following statement presented by the Mayor, gave the estimated cost of maintaining the water, power and Board of Works departments, so far as engineering work was concerned; the cost of maintenance for each department, and the saving by the suggested combination.

ERIE TOOK THE FINAL BY 3-1

Visitors Were Always Leading as They Outhit the Petes --- Smith's Men Had 13 Hits off Louie Schettler

Riverside Park, May 27. — The Petes should win this afternoon's fixture, according to form. On Monday they proved themselves mudlarks of the first rank, and the club's best bet, Louis Schettler, is on the mound. Brown, who finished up Monday afternoon's game by pitching the tenth, was on the rubber for Erie, with McNeil behind the bat. The storm at noon left the field in bad condition, and oil was used to dry up the paths by burning. Loads of sawdust were dumped around the bases and at short. Louie Schettler's little boy appeared in a Pete uniform. He will act as mascot for the club.

Swartling, the new initial sacker, looked good in his uniform. He will not play for a few days.

The teams lined up as follows:

Erie: Dawson, c.f.; Dunn, l.f.; Gygli, 1b.; Shaeffer, 2b; Harris, r.f.; Behan, s.s.; Wiltse, 3b.; McNeil, c.; Brown, p.

Petes: Blount, c.f.; Byrne, 3b; Welsh, l.f.; King, s.s.; Wilcox, r.f.; Fox, 2b; Gorman, 1b; Kelly, c.; Schettler, p.

Manager Smith of the Erie Club, did not appear. There was only a handful of fans on hand when Umps Miller called the play.

First Innings.

Erie.—Dawson walked. Dunn went out, Schettler to Gorman, Dawson going to second. Gygli was thrown out at first by King. Shaeffer was passed. Harris scratched a hit and Dawson scored. Behan flew to Blount. One run, one hit, no errors.

Petes—Blount flew out to Dunn. Byrne hit through second. Welsh fanned, after poking out two long fouls. Byrne was forced at second on King's grounder.

Second Innings.

Erie—Wiltse was out, King to Gorman. McNeil scratched a hit to short. Brown singled to left. Dawson was out, Fox to Gorman. Dunn flew to Blount. No runs, two hits, no errors.

Petes — Wilcox singled to right. Fox fanned. Gorman singled to right on the hit and run. Kelly lined one at Wiltse who stabbed it. Schettler struck out. No runs, two hits, no errors.

Third Innings.

Erie—Gygli struck out. Shaeffer flew to Blount. Harris singled over short. Behan was thrown out by King. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Petes—Blount went out, Behan to Gygli. Byrne drew a pass. Welsh forced Byrne at second. Welsh stole second. Wiltse threw King out. No runs, no hits, no errors.

Fourth Innings.

Erie—Wiltse flew out to Wilcox. McNeil was safe on King's error. Brown hit to Schettler, who threw to King, who doubled Brown at first. No runs, no hits, no errors.

Petes—Wilcox walked with three and two on him. Fox sacrificed Wilcox to second. Gorman popped to Wiltse. Kelly hit to right centre, scoring Wilcox. Kelly stole second. Schettler fanned. One run, one hit, no errors.

Fifth Innings.

Erie—Dawson flied to Welsh. Dunn scratched a hit. No one covered second and Dunn went to third when Kelly's throw went to centre. Gygli singled to right and Dunn scored. Gygli was out stealing third. Shaeffer doubled to left. Harris flew to Welsh. One run, three hits, no errors.

Petes—Blount walked. Byrne attempted to bunt and lifted it to Brown, who doubled Blount at first. Welsh went out, Behan to Gygli.

Sixth Innings.

Erie — Behan was out, King to Gorman. Wiltse scratched a hit to Byrne. McNeil singled through second. Brown scratched another single. Dawson flew to Gorman. Dunn flew to Gorman. No runs, three hits, no errors.

Petes—King fanned. Wilcox rolled one to Gygli. King grounded to Shaeffer. No runs, no hits, no errors.

Seventh Innings.

Erie—Gygli doubled to left. Shaeffer sacrificed, Gygli taking third. Harris hit to Schettler, and Gygli was caught at the plate. Behan hit through King. Wiltse singled to centre, scoring Harris. McNeil went out on a roller, to Schettler. One run, two hits, one error.

Petes—Gorman singled to right. Kelly was safe on Behan's boot. Schettler hit into a double, Kelly being forced at second. Blount was robbed of a hit by a one handed stab by Gygli. No runs, one hit, one error.

Eighth Innings.

Erie—Brown went out, Schettler to Gorman. Dawson died via the same route. Dunn flew to King.

Petes—Byrne went out Behan to Gygli. Welsh singled. Shaeffer made a great stab of the hit, but failed to get it over to first. King drove one right at Dunn, which he speared. Wilcox walked. Fox flew to McNeil. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Ninth Innings.

Erie—Gygli was thrown out by Fox. Shaeffer struck out. Harris singled to centre and stole second. Behan fanned. No runs, one hit, one error.

Petes—Gorman out, Shaeffer to Gygli. Kelly singled to left. Schettler lined out to Dunn. Blount was hit. Byrne out, Behan to Gygli. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Final.

HOME RULE ISSUE RESTS

Bill Will not Come up in Lords Until June 22

LONDON, May 27.—Political writers yesterday on both sides anticipate little towards peace in the promised amending bill, and the minds of the members of Parliament are rather turned towards their constituencies.

Lord Crewe has announced he will not put down the second reading of the Home Rule bill in the Lords before June 22, so there will certainly be a breathing space of a few weeks, except for what may happen outside of Westminster.

The Standard (Conservative) claims to have reliable information that the Liberal party agents having gone over the ground with a view to the possibility of an early election, predict 35 Liberal gains and 28 Liberal losses, provided the Liberals came to an arrangement with the Laborites to avoid triangular contests and also commence an aggressive campaign concerning "the army plot to thwart the aspirations of the democracy."

HIS LIFE FOR A CONFESSION

Becker Offered Commutation if He Will Tell

NEW YORK, May 27.—District Attorney Whitman, it was stated yesterday afternoon, is ready to recommend commutation of the death sentence in the case of Becker.

This is contingent upon a complete confession on the part of the former head of the "strong arm squad," that shall involve all "men higher up" in the police "system," with whom he divided graft collected in the Tenderloin.

Strong intimations were made yesterday that Becker was not only willing, but anxious to make such a confession. It was stated he had begun to lose heart, and had little hope as to the outcome of the second appeal.

WOMAN MUST DIE IN ELECTRIC CHAIR

NEW YORK, May 27—Sentence of death in the electric chair at Sing Sing in the week of July 6, was pronounced here yesterday on a woman. Mrs. Madelina Fercia, aged 45, convicted of stabbing to death Carmelo Canestrale, who refused to marry her after he had betrayed her, and she had given him her savings.

She is the first woman sentenced to capital punishment from New York in fifteen years.

CIVIC ECONOMY.

SO THE CITY COUNCIL is going to get the firemen to flush the streets early in the morning. No doubt this is economical, but we think if it is economy they want they would themselves get out and hose the mud off the pavement, they would be reserving of a little praise. What good is a City Council if it wastes all its time in talk? Private citizens have to sprinkle their own lawns, why do not these economical public men flush George Street?

This is the way the City Council is economical. They buy a sprinkling apparatus to sprinkle George Street. They buy a team to pull it, and of course have to feed the team. They hire a man to drive it, and fortunately he feeds himself. The sprinkler doesn't clean the pavement, so they hire a man to run a scraper up and down the street. They expose this man to disease, but that does not matter. Now, there are two men, a sprinkler and a team on the job, and George Street, with all of them, is no model of cleanliness, whereas one man, a team and a flushing wagon would keep the pavement clean, free of dust, and the flusher costs about the same as a sprinkling wagon. These flushing wagons are in use in Ottawa, Toronto, Hamilton and other cities. They flush the streets clean of manure and dust in the same operation as sprinkling. The City Council could have the paved streets clean and dustless by using flushing wagons and save the wages of one man at the the same time. But will they do it?

LLOYD GEORGE'S BUDGET

THE BUDGET of the English Chancellor of the Exchequor, David Lloyd George, is the greatest that has ever been presented to the British House of Commons in regard to the amount of money involved. This large expenditure, embracing over one billion dollars, which must be raised from taxation and duties is occasioned by the two main points of the English programme, that is, the socialistic legislation and the requirements of the navy. Lloyd George's social legislation involves among others, such things as old age pensions, state insurance, education and public health, money for which has been raised by new departures in methods of taxation, which to many careful thinkers appears revolutionary. First, his land tax has been aimed to do away with the large landed estates, succession duties have been steadily increased so that they will ultimately bring in two million pounds a year more than they do under the present law. The trend of this taxation has been to throw an undue proportion of the burden of taxation on a very small proportion of the total population. Thus, the large succession duty taxes will fall mainly upon about 100,000 persons, out of a population of some forty-five millions. Some experts hold that death duties of this nature are a serious depletion of the Nation's working capital. Others say concerning the income tax, that what is given to the poor with one hand is taken from them with the other, for those that were overburdened with additional taxation would reduce their expenditure by the discharge of a gardener or a dependent of some sort. Death duties up to a certain point are quite legitimate. So long as they do not cripple industries or capital, they are as just a tax as any. The wealth acquired has been made in the country and often has not paid its proper share of taxation. Many men receive incomes on which they should pay a tax, but which they evade. A tax on the passage of estates in some measure obtains what the state could not obtain during the life time of the owner. However, there is a limit to this method of taxation, as there is to the total of taxation, if it is to have no bad influence on the finances of the country, and it is probable that the British Liberal Government in their desire to put in operation a great deal of social legislation have placed too serious a burden on the tax producing capacity of the British Isles. Commenting on the present budget of the Asquith Government, the New York Sun says:

> "So even some radicals have stopped to think. London Truth talks of it as robbing Peter to pay Paul. It adds that as Paul has acquired the habit of helping himself ad libitum out of Peter's pocket, with Mr. George's help, 'the habit may grow on him to a demoralizing extent.' The Spectator points out that in the long run it was overtaxation that crushed the Roman Empire. The system of doles bread and the circus —sapped the energy and independence of the working classes, while the middle class was destroyed by paying for it. The invading barbarians found a "kept democracy and an army of officials." The army of officials is one of the evil results of Mr. George's social service policy. Tens of thousands of men and women are diverted yearly from production into officialism. The people of England are rapidly undergoing a sort of dichotomy, a reorganization into two factions, the plundered class and the pampered class."

ST. CATHARINES complains of the number of destitute families sent there to secure work on the new Welland Canal. The complaint may be well founded for we have heard it said that misery likes company.

THE BRITISH MAGAZINES IN CANADA.

IN 1907, The Honourable Rodolphe Lemieux, who was then Postmaster General effected an agreement whereby the British Post Office undertook to accept British magazines for transmission to Canada at the rate of 1d a pound, instead of the Postal Union rate of 4d a pound, Canada bearing the whole cost of the ocean carriage. The result of this arrangement was a phenomenal growth in the circulation of British magazines in Canada. These were able to compete successfully with American magazines, many of which are of a quality and attitude undesirable in this country. The British magazines coming to Canada have been on the whole of a high class. They are actuated by a policy that is British and Imperial, not anti-British and Republican as some American magazines are. The cost to Canada of the ocean carriage of British magazines amounted to £50,000 in the year 1912, and so great has been this cost that the present Canadian Government have intimated their intention of terminating a bargain that throws so heavy a burden on this side of the Atlantic. It has been suggested that an Empire Development Board and Fund be established which would share the burden of ocean carriage of British magazines to Canada. Quite recently a meeting was held in the British House of Commons to discuss Canadian magazine postal rates, and a motion was passed urging the British Postmaster General to do everything possible to retain the present penny per pound rate. Owing to the importance of such a rate to British magazines and of their desirability in Canada, it is quite possible that the British Government will strike a new arrangement whereby Canada will not be deprived of British magazine literature.

THE BRITANNIC REVIEW.

THE FIRST NUMBER of the Britanic Review has been received by the editor. This magazine is devoted to imperial questions and a portrayal of their latest developments. It discusses questions affecting the Empire, such as Naval Defence, the Naval Policies of the self-governing Dominions, Imperial Trade, Preferential Agreements, Munroe Doctrine, and all those great questions that help in a large measure to keep the idea of Empire before the people. This magazine is well arranged, and announces its policy as one supporting an Empire of autonomous states. There are other magazines devoted to Imperial politics which possibly have not the same settled programme to advocate. The advent of this one will be a distinct benefit to the important questions with which it deals. These problems are so very great, so far reaching in their influences, that careful consideration from several points of view is necessary to get anything like a practical solution of them. Magazines of this nature keep imperial questions alive, when other problems would, for the time being, exclude them from the thought of men. They show what progress is being made and are a factor in preventing retrograde imperial policies, either in the United Kingdom or the Colonies.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

OF ALL the insane and useless practices that of mutilating works of art by the suffragettes is the ne plus ultra a classical way of saying "the limit."

"GOOD BY, friend, I hope we'll meet again before we die," said one bibulous individual on Victoria Day to another. Evidently there was some doubt that they would not meet when they did die.

A REPORT says that a Lindsay man was robbed of $55.00 by highway men. The important question is, how did a Lindsay man ever get $55.00 in one sum?

Ontario Will Do It Shortly No Doubt.

Montreal Herald-Telegraph.

The Ontario Department of Agriculture has discovered that dandelions in lawns may be killed by a spray made of a solution of iron sulphate. If they will now only find how to make sweet peas climb up their own stalks, Westmount's happiness will be complete.

But This Is Different.

Brockville Times.

The Hon. W. S. Fielding refused to serve on the Montreal Herald-Telegraph-Witness when he found out that Sir Hugh Graham of the Star was behind it. But the Hon. G. P. Graham doesn't appear to have any such fine scruples.

Union Jack Is Ireland's Official Flag.

The green flag bearing a harp—whether with or without the crown—is not the official flag of Ireland. The green flag was the rebel flag of 1798, and it bore the harp, but no crown. If there is what may be called the official flag, as distinct from the Union Jack, it is a blue flag, having upon it a golden harp, surmounted by a crown. Ireland was represented at the funeral of Queen Elizabeth by a flag of this kind.

We Would Prefer to Assault Him.

Montreal Gazette.

In an Ontario city a man who threw a suspected burglar out of his house was fined for assault, and in Montreal a householder who hustled an intruder out was warned that in future in such circumstances he must first notify the undesired person to depart. It appears that an Englishman's home is not his castle when it is located in Canada.

The Duty of Quebec.

G. Dallaire in Le Devoir.

We have no reason to reproach the people of the west for their initiative and their activity. No, we must imitate them. The land of Quebec is worth as much as that of the West. In fact, the land of Quebec, if properly cultivated, produces still more than that of the west. What should be done, then? Colonise, colonise, colonise; Colonise not only in words, in theory, but in practice; give the lands to the settler; assist him, abolish his obstacles instead of increasing them; encourage him by giving him a chance to live in his first years instead of compelling him to live in misery.

How Greek Games Originated.

London Chronicle.

The origin of Greek ball games, so Herodotus learned from the Lydians, was a prolonged famine in Lydia. For some time they endured it, but at last they invented dice, knuckle-bones, the ball, and all other games except draughts. One day they played these games so as to keep their minds off food; the next day they took food and did not play. This alternation eked out their provisions for eighteen years, at the end of which time, the situation still being desperate, half the population emigrated. One can only suppose that the ball games were not very athletic; otherwise the increased appetite given by them must have undone much of the saving.

WE MORALISTS

By Walt Mason

We like to regulate our neighbors, and mark for them the way; we would prescribe their fun and labors; their penalties and pay. We always have a text to back us, whatever stand we take; and morbid doubts can never rack us, or make our conscience ache. For we are all so strictly pious, and free from spots and mire, that e'en the angels can't deny us the halos we desire. And since we have no streak of yellow—that much is understood—of course we chase the other fellow and try to make him good. We don't resort to moral suasion, or methods mild like that; we give his head severe abrasions and try to break a slat. We show the road that you should travel, and if you halt or fail, we slug you with a chunk of gravel, and send you off to jail. We're bound to make this sad world better and life a joyous hymn, e'en though we have to place a fetter on every human limb. In olden times the pious hermit was satisfied to train his spirit, or whate'er you term it, in solitude and pain; but now the good man ups and hollers, and makes a mighty noise and wants to put his chains and collars on all the other boys. And if this fable I am handing seems to you Greek or Dutch, and fails to hit your understanding, I cannot help it much.

Birthdays of Note

WEDNESDAY, MAY TWENTY-SEVENTH

Lt.-Col. Andrew T. Thompson, editor of the Canadian Military Gazette, and for some time M.P. for Haldimand, was born at Ruthven Park, Indiana, Ontario, forty-four years ago to-day. His father was for many years before him a member of the House of Commons. He himself became a barrister and practised successively at Cayuga and Ottawa. During his Parliamentary career which extended from 1900 to 1904, he was one of the Liberal whips and was said to be in training to succeed Sir Frederick Borden as Minister of Militia. However this may be, he was defeated in 1904, largely because of his military leanings. As a soldier he has occupied a prominent position. He was one of the officers in Queen Victoria jubilee contingent, was second in command of the Canadian contingent at the coronation of King Edward and was deputy adjutant general at the Quebec Tercentenary celebration.

Misleading Bookkeeping.

Even bookkeeping is not an exact science. For behold! how often is it that one man will put into the expense account a given expenditure—say, the rebuilding of a machine—thus reducing his profits by this amount, while another will put such an item to the asset account, and each can advance weighty arguments and reasons as to the logic of his methods. But the net results of operation will differ widely with the same actual occurrences, so that even bookkeeping may be said merely to present results dependent upon the aspects of the situation as rendered by those who have the authority or opportunity to interpret.—Benjamin A. Franklin in Engineering Magazine.

Points of the Crescent Moon.

Why does the moon sometimes appears with points turned upward and at other times downward? There is one cause only—the rotation of the earth. If the moon rises with points turned upward then, when it sets, the points must turn downward—that is, the western horizon meets the points in its apparent approach; they point toward it, apparently downward, in the western sky.—New York American.

Felt the Power.

Bill—Music has a wonderful influence over us.

Jill—I know it.

"Did you ever feel the power of a singer over you?"

"Sure! I married one!" — Yonkers Statesman.

HOME STUDY

I reckon the feller who takes the most comfort out of his home is the one who does a home study stunt in his off-hours. By home study I'm not meanin' a course in a Correspondence School where ye light yer pipe, put yer feet on the mantle and master engineerin' and mechanical drawin' from leather-bound books. I mean the study of what's in the home, the study on how best to get what's needed in the home, the study of wife, baby and gran-dad.

Anythin' wuth knowin' is wuth knowin' well. Ain't that right? I've knowed people to live together all their lives and not really know each other. Their time was too much taken up with tryin' to decipher outside problems, I take it. Arter all the good things of life air often closest to us. Trouble is, we ain't seein' 'em.

TRENT CANAL
Section 3, Severn Division
NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS

Sealed Tenders, addressed to the undersigned and marked "Tender for Section No. 3, Severn District, Trent Canal," will be received at this office until 12 o'clock noon on Thursday, June 18th, 1914.

Plans, specifications and form of contract to be entered into can be seen on or after this date at the office of the Chief Engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, Ottawa; at the office of the Superintending Engineer, Trent Canal, Peterborough, Ont.; and at the office of the District Engineer, Public Works Department, Midland, Ont.

Copies of plans and specifications may be obtained from the Department on the payment of the sum of fifty dollars. To bona fide tenderers this amount will be refunded upon the return of the above in good condition.

Parties tendering will be required to accept the fair wages schedule prepared or to be prepared by the Department of Labour, which schedule will form part of the contract.

Contractors are requested to bear in mind that tenders will not be considered unless made strictly in accordance with the printed forms, and in the case of firms, unless there are attached the actual signature, the nature of the occupation, and place of residence of each member of the firm.

An accepted bank cheque on a chartered bank of Canada, for the sum of $55,000.00 made payable to the order of the Minister of Railways and Canals, must accompany each tender, which sum will be forfeited if the party tendering declines entering into contract for the work, at the rates stated in the offer submitted.

The cheque thus sent will be returned to the respective contractors whose tenders are not accepted.

The cheque of the successful tenderers will be held as security, or part security, for the due fulfilment of the contract to be entered into.

The lowest or any tender not necessarily accepted.

By order,
L. K. JONES,
Asst. Deputy Minister and Secretary.

The DAUGHTER of DAVID KERR

By Harry King Tootle

Illustrations by Ray Walters

Copyright by A. G. McCLURG & Co., 1912

At this Gilbert made a disparaging gesture which caused Kerr to add, "in fees—with all the money you've made, you still fall short of the riches that'll purchase real freedom. I know how you stand, and things are pretty much in the balance.

"Think what it means to your daughter, money." As he spoke he pointed to the girl's picture. "It's leisure, travel, friends abroad, an assured future. I can give them to you, I, David Kerr; and I will—on one condition. Gloria Kerr must have the place she thinks is hers in Belmont."

He paused to let the lawyer grasp the importance and the value of such an undertaking, and then disclosed the means by which the fortune was to be secured. If a man should ever pay another out of his own pocket for such a service he would be a philanthropist and not a political leader; Kerr was certainly not the former, and his life training had never caused him to separate a dollar from his own bank account when he could extract it without pain—to him—from some one else.

"For this one thing," he exclaimed, "I give freely into your hands any franchise you may draw for the stockyards belt line railway. Disguise it as a street railway line to run down Maple avenue. Make what bargain you like, five hundred thousand, a million dollars, it's worth it. And always remember, I'm back of you."

The possibilities of the scheme overwhelmed Gilbert. What he was to do for Kerr, even the fight for the franchise, did not enter his mind. He was busy thinking of the freedom he could purchase in so short a time. All that he had ever dreamed of could be brought to pass. Kerr, who knew almost to a dollar the financial standing of every man in Belmont, was well aware that Gilbert had been hard hit in several stock exchange transactions, so badly in the last one that he had called upon the boss for assistance. Yet he had just told Kendall that he would have nothing more to do with that kind of work. He had begun to develop a conscience—for Julia's sake, perhaps, for his daughter's future—and here came Kerr who wanted him to go down once more into the maelstrom of shady politics for the sake of his daughter.

His gratitude for what Kerr had done for him was great enough to cause him to do anything for Kerr's daughter he could, but since the boss had put it up to him and he had back of him all the boss's power, he began to wonder why he should not accept the opportunity to make a fortune quickly. It had been held out to him as meaning leisure, travel, friends and a roseate future for his Julia. He longed for those things for himself, no less, and here was the chance of his lifetime. He would know how to make those Chicago schemers pay well for the legal advice he would give them.

"It won't be easy," said Gilbert finally.

Kerr had won his first victory. The lawyer had surrendered.

"That's why I came to you," was the boss's answer, a reply charged with subtle flattery. Gilbert really did represent in his autocracy the best element; a smug set, perhaps, but still the best. To other lieutenants were delegated hammer and tong jobs; Gilbert was the instrument when finesse was required.

"There's a certain element, Mr. Kerr, it will be hard to win over—that wholesale clique. You have no direct dealing with the men, and—well—that is—you see, they don't know you and they might not be interested in Gloria. They're a clannish lot."

"I've fought many a fight, Amos, but never one like this. If it develops into a real fight, I still hold the whip hand." He raised his right arm menacingly, his hand clenched to a pugnacious fist. "Let any silly girl sneer at my daughter, let any ninny of a boy be uncomplimentary, and I no sooner hear of it than I'll put the screws on—and then God help 'em. They don't know me! Well, they may yet."

"When can Mrs. Gilbert meet Gloria?"

"I brought her with me—she's in the carriage."

"She came with you!"

"Yes. I told her we were going to the theater. Then we stopped here on important business."

"Bring her in. I'll call Mrs. Gilbert."

While Kerr went for his daughter, the lawyer called his wife into the library and explained the situation to her as best he could in so brief a time. He only told of Gloria's belief in her father's social importance, nothing of how he had promised to introduce her. Of course his wife would never know his wages for acting as Gloria's sponsor.

"What a remarkable thing to do!" exclaimed Mrs. Gilbert when she finally realized Gloria's position.

"I think Kerr was crazy, Julia, ever to start it, but here she is in our house and we must help carry out the deception."

"But Dr. and Mrs. Hayes?"

"Who made Hayes coroner?"

"But Mr. Wright? Will he meet David Kerr?"

"Mr. Wright's our guest and he's a gentleman, dear."

Here was something Gilbert had not thought of. Perhaps fate was playing into his hands. He hoped so anyway. David Kerr would meet on neutral ground the man who had already caused him some uneasiness. Since the boss never called on any one, and since Wright surely would not go to see him, this was, when all was said and done, to be an important meeting.

CHAPTER IV.

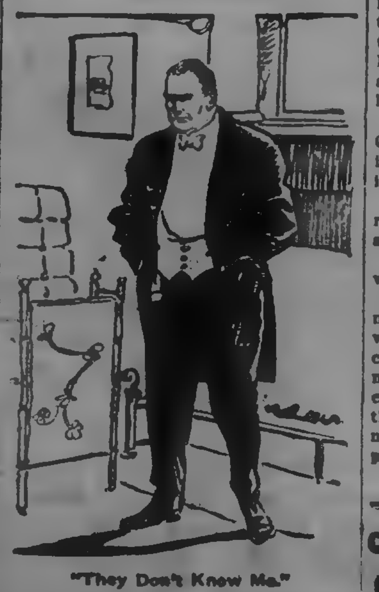
Gloria could not understand why she was not of most importance, and was not a little piqued at the long wait in the cold while her father was with Judge Gilbert. Her only consolation for being late to the theater was that every one would be there to see her arrive. She knew that when she entered the box every one would turn to look at her. A harmless little thought certainly for so pretty a girl as she. She tried to beguile the time by questioning Tom, but the driver had suddenly lost his tongue, due to Kerr's order issued privately, and talked only indifferently on indifferent topics. He was grossly ignorant concerning matters which to Miss Kerr seemed of vital importance.



"They Don't Know Me."

At last came her father with the announcement that she was to come in to meet Judge and Mrs. Gilbert. The girl was torn with conflicting emotions, being anxious to get to the theater and at the same time desirous of seeing how many years ahead of Locust Lawn was this house which she had been invited to enter. There was no reason why she could not do both, since meeting Judge and Mrs. Gilbert could mean only a few minutes' more delay. They could then hurry to the theater, and if she was pleased with these new acquaintances she would urge them to join her. Loyal though she was, she would welcome any one who would be a diversion. Gloria was quick to notice a faux pas, and certain of her father's slips of grammar and lapses from punctilious etiquette had made her wish some companionship less blunt.

At the door she was met by Judge Gilbert, who welcomed her to Belmont with great cordiality. Here was a man who understood the niceties of life. Gloria's heart went out to him almost as much for the manner of his welcome as for its genuine warmth. As David Kerr had done when he had entered the house, the daughter gazed about her as she passed through the hall, and all that she saw was given the stamp of her approval. It was just another step in her growing appreciation of Belmont as it really was. She noted also the familiar terms on which Judge Gilbert and her father were. She had never doubted her father, yet this was a pleasing affirmative vote in her theory of Belmont life which had not been without its contradictions that day.

"I wonder if you remember Mrs. Gilbert?" said the judge as he ushered Gloria into the library. At her entrance, Mrs. Gilbert, a really gracious woman, came forward to greet her.

"How do you do, Miss Gloria?" she said, "it's a pleasure to find that you've come back to Belmont."

"I'm charmed to meet you, Mrs. Gilbert. Indeed it is nice to be at home once more and I'm so glad to have you say so."

The next bit of conversation puzzled Gloria not a little. She remarked it at the time, and even thought of it once after she had returned to Locust Lawn that night.

Judge Gilbert said quietly to his wife, "Mr. Kerr, dear."

At this Mrs. Gilbert turned, bowed slightly and merely said, "Good evening, Mr. Kerr."

"How d'ye do, ma'am," replied Gloria's father, to his daughter's surprise and also somewhat to her disgust. Mrs. Gilbert's greeting had been extremely brief, but her father's had been extremely provincial. Not only was it a slipshod manner of speaking, but it had been accompanied by a bow which Gloria thought uncouth. Her father had written once or twice about Mrs. Gilbert, and Gloria, after the manner of society, was fain to enlarge upon the number.

"It's been my one wish to meet you, Mrs. Gilbert," said the girl. "I went away when I was so young that I can't honestly say that I remember you, but in his letters father spoke so often of you and of visiting here. Didn't you father?"

Thus appealed to, Kerr was forced to reply.

"Yes—Oh, yes, Gloria, but never mind that now."

Judge Gilbert was quick to come to the rescue, and forestalled further embarrassing remarks by saying:

"I suppose it will be a novelty for you, Miss Gloria—living in the country."

Gloria laughed, and her answer contained due notice of what she intended to have in the immediate future.

"Father hasn't a motor car—yet, and I don't know how I'll like it."

"You'll get used to it," was Mrs. Gilbert's comment. "Locust Lawn is lovely in summer."

"But it isn't summer yet. And it makes it inconvenient when one wants to go out in the evening. I've often wondered why father didn't have a town house. He goes out so much and must be in Belmont so late at night that to my mind a town house would be a necessity. But there he sticks in the country like an old poke."

Her idea of her father's duty to himself was so strong that she turned to him to tell him just what she thought of him. During her speech Kerr had been exceedingly uncomfortable, but there was no way to stop her.

"That's just what you are, father," Gloria asserted stoutly, "for sticking in the country when you go so much in society—an old poke."

Again Judge Gilbert came to the rescue. "You forget he doesn't go out as much as when he was younger."

"Exactly. I don't git out like I did when I was younger," Kerr repeated.

"I think every one will have to like me very much," Gloria complained with a whimsical air of doubt, "to come 'way out to Locust Lawn to see me." She knew well that they would come, but a town apartment, something modern, loomed large in her mind. These remarks were only the pioneer work preliminary to a siege.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Biliousness.

Coffee does not, as a rule, tend to cause indigestion or affect the nerves. Its ill effects are due to the fact of its causing biliousness. Persons of what is known as a "livery" type had better avoid it altogether if they have found it to have this result. Yet they might as well ascertain first as to whether it was the coffee or the milk which they took with it which accounted for their discomfort.

It is a mystery as to why persons who cannot on their own assertion take hot milk without upsetting their livers should drink it when its taste is disguised by that of coffee. The milk is there just the same, and the after effects are bound to be as bad as if taken by itself.

Let such persons take their coffee thin, making it with water and adding only as much milk as they would put into their tea, and it probably will turn out that they can take it without any bad after effects.

HEAT MAGAZINES.

A Device That In the Future May Do Away With Stoves.

Heat magazines are now being built to be a substitute for stoves. The particular purpose for which they have been designed is to use electricity to store up heat in the hours when the demand for electric power is small and when consequently electricity may be supplied at a very greatly reduced rate. This is usually between midnight and 5 o'clock in the morning when few electric lights are being used, few motors are in use and most of the great plant at the electric power house is idle.

Then during the hours of daylight and evening the heat magazine can be made to give out its warmth. The magazines are big steel boxes about the size of a large stove.

In the center is the apparatus to turn electricity into heat and round this are masses of metal that absorb heat. These are built to withstand heat up to 1,000 degrees. All around these heat storage blocks is very heavy insulation to keep the heat in, in the same way that the heat is kept in a fireless cooker.

When it is desired to have the magazine give out its heat a damper is opened and a passageway thus provided for air to enter the magazine, become heated and pass out into the room. The damper can be used also to regulate the amount of heat coming out.

Electricity is ordinarily too expensive for house warming use, but it is coming into practice in some localities where the power is cheap.—Saturday Evening Post.

Be careful not to keep vegetables in a warm damp place else they will surely mold.

You Are Cause and Effect.

You are the effect of a cause.

You are yourself that cause.

You are an acme of things accomplished and an encloser of things to be. What you were yesterday, plus your efforts, is the cause of what you are today. ## HUGE STEAMER SINKS BARGES

NEW YORK, May 27.—The great steamship Vaterland, which took nearly two hours to dock when she came to this port on her maiden voyage recently, sunk two coal barges as she steamed out of her berth yesterday.

Backing out under her own steam, her momentum carried her across the Hudson and she slipped in between two piers, where the coal barges, carrying 500 tons of coal each, were tied. Both barges went down almost at once, but no lives were lost.

Had To Forfeit Bail.

MONTREAL, May 27. — John H. Roberts, secretary of the Dominion Temperance Alliance, had to forfeit $400 bail yesterday morning for the non-appearance in the court of special sessions of two men who had been used as detectives by him in cases against the cabarets. The two men are Michael Sannes and Leonard Carstens. These two were charged by the liquor men with attempting to defeat the ends of justice by offering to accept bribes.

When Soldiers Were Flogged.

It would have needed a very alluring form of advertisement indeed to attract men to the English army a hundred years ago. Writing of that period a writer says: "Flogging was almost universal. The maximum number of lashes were gradually reduced from 1,500 to 300, but the notion that discipline could not be maintained without summary punishment continued to be believed, and Wellington himself dealt with flagrant cases by hanging the culprits upon trees in the public roads. One result was that only men belonging to the lowest classes would join the army." In 1771 a sentinel in the guards was flogged in St. James' park so severely that he subsequently died raving mad. His offense consisted of saying that "there was no more encouragement for a good soldier than for a bad one."

NORTH MONAGHAN COUNCIL DEAL WITH ASSESSMENT APPEALS AND BY-LAWS

Deputation Asks That Roadway to T.A.S. Park be Improved

The North Monaghan Council met as a Court of Revision, at the town hall on Monday at two o'clock with all the members present. Reeve Howden was elected chairman on motion of Messrs. Dobbin and Robson. In the first appeal, that of Mrs. Mary Coogan, no action was taken.

In the next appeal that of Archibald Black, against non-ownership no action was taken, the property being assesed to the owner G. Strain.

John Casey Masterson, appealed against being assessed as a public school supporter. The assessor had made the change previous to the return of his rolls, hence no action.

John Cox appealed against being assessed for five acres formerly owned by the Cox estate and leased by him. Mr. Cox stated that the property had been purchased by Albert Vass. Moved by Messrs. Forster and Young that the change be made as requested. James Drain appeared on behalf of the Separate School board of Peterboro and filed several appeals for parties wrongly assessed for school taxes. Several deputations were present so the court adjourned for a short time to hear them.

After hearing the deputations the Court resumed business. Mr. Herman Wilson appealed to the court to have the assessment of Thos. Darke and Fred Barker included in his assessment. Mr. Wilson explained that these two men had moved away and the property was in his possession. Moved by Messrs. Forster and Robson that Mr. Wilson's request be granted.

M. S. Donoghue, appealed and asked to be assessed as a separate school supporter. Moved by Messrs. Young and Dobbin that the appeal be granted.

John Dwyer appealed to have lot 36 on McGill Street, assessed to Alf. Lehane; also that his school tax be payable to the separate school. Moved by Messrs. Robson and Forster that the appeal of John Dwyer be granted.

Alex. Chouinard, Wm. A. Haslam, Daniel O'Connell, for $100 assessment on lot also one-quarter interest in syndicate amounting to $125; Mrs. M. De Carlonis, appealed and asked to be assessed as separate school supporters. Moved by Messrs. Forster and Young that the appeal of Alex. Chouinard, Wm. Haslam, Daniel O'Connell's appeal on lot for $100 and Mrs. Mary De Carlonis appeal be granted.

An appeal was presented that the Orange Hall be exempt from taxation on account of the Salvation Army using the same for religious purposes. Moved by Messrs. Forster and Young that this appeal be granted.

Moved by Messrs. Young and Forster that the assessment roll be accepted and confirmed and that the assessor be paid his salary, $95.

The Council having completed their work adjourned.

General Business.

Council then met and general business was dealt with. The reading of the minutes was dispensed with, and a delegation from St. Peter's T.A.S. was received.

The delegation was composed of the following: Rev. Father McColl, Jas. Drain, P. Kane and C. A. Kelly.

Rev. Father McColl asked Council to do something with the road leading into the T.A.S. Park so that the same would be in passable condition for vehicles to drive into the park. The reverend gentleman explained that a number of lots had been sold and that, if the road were put in proper condition, that he thought quite a number of cottages would be erected in the near future. He also made a suggestion that the best way to improve the road might be to drain the same on the north side of the concession line to the river. By so doing the excavation for the drain would help the turn pike of the roadway especially in the low, wet places.

P. Kane also spoke in regard to this road. He explained how that people driving and desiring to go to T.A.S. Park had been trespassing on Mr. McDonald's property by not being able to drive into the same over the public highway. Arrangements were made with Mr. Kane that the North Monaghan Council together with the T.A.S. delegation meet at 2 o'clock, Saturday next at the Dominion Bank Chamber and proceed by automobile supplied by the T.A.S. delegation to view this road and see what is best to do.

Sidewalks Wanted.

A deputation composed of the following gentlemen urged that sidewalks be built as soon as possible on the subdivision known as the De Laval Gardens: Messrs. C. H. Pennefather, C. J. Carroll, Herman Wilson and Victor Wilson.

Mr. Pennefather said gentlemen in Hamilton had been induced to purchase this property but that the sale of the same had been held up on account of not having sidewalks built. He urged that Council take immediate action and have plans and specifications prepared and tenders asked for as soon as possible.

The petition calls for sidewalks to be built on the north and south side of King George Street from Lock St. to Park St., on the north and south sode of Wilson Ave., from Lock St. to Park St.

Moved by Messrs. Forster and Young that the above mentioned sidewalk petition be left in the hands of the clerk to report on and to see that the same is according to law and if so, proceed to advertise for tenders immediately.

Moved by Messrs. Forster and Young that the road commissioners for last year be reappointed.

Mr. Bradburn township treasurer notified the Council that Mr. McIntosh, tax collector had over-paid the amount of roll by $20.11. Moved by Messrs. Young and Robson that Mr. McIntosh be refunded the $20.11.

By-law no. 682 for a grant of $600 from the department of Public Works Ontario, was given a third reading, and on motion of Messrs. Forster and Young.

Moved by Messrs. Dobbin and Robson that the clerk write Messrs. Peck and Bennett and thank them for their influence in securing for the township the sum of $600 toward the purchase of a stone crusher.

The shooting by-law was then introduced, regularly read and passed on motion of Messrs. Young and Forster. The number is 686.

Camping by-law No. 687 was read and then passed on motion of Messrs. Young and Robson.

Moved by Messrs. Dobbin and Robson that the reeve, Mr. Young and the clerk be a committee with full power to act for the purchase of a stone crusher for the township.

Moved by Messrs. Dobbin and Young that the next Council meeting be held on Monday, June 8th, at the Court House at 2 o'clock. Council then adjourned.

Camping By-Law.

At the request of the Council, the clauses of by-laws governing shooting and camping are published:

1. No person shall be permitted to place or erect upon any Highway of the said Township any tent, shack or other such erection, or to reside temporarily or otherwise upon any of the Highways in the said Township.

2. Any person guilty of a violation of this By-Law shall on conviction thereof be liable to a fine not exceeding Fifty Dollars and costs, and in default of payment thereof the said fine and costs may be levied by distress and sale of the goods of the offender and in case of there being no distress or no sufficient distress out of which the same can be levied the said offender may be committed to the Common Gaol of the County of Peterborough for any period not exceeding twenty-one days unless the fine imposed and costs (if any) including the costs of the distress and of the committal and conveyance of the offender to the said Gaol are sooner paid.

Shooting By-Law.

1. Guns or other Fire Arms may be carried and discharged for any lawful purpose by bona fide residents of the Township of North Monaghan upon lands owned or occupied by them respectively, and by other persons with the express permission of the owners or occupants of the lands upon which the same are carried or discharged.

2. Save as above set forth the discharge of Guns of other Fire Arms in the said Township of North Monaghan is hereby prohibited.

3. Any person guilty of a violation of this By-Law shall on conviction thereof be liable to a fine not exceeding Fifty Dollars and costs, and in default of payment thereof the said fine and costs may be levied by distress and sale of the goods of the offender and in case of there being no distress or no sufficient distress out of which the same can be levied the said offender may be committed to the Common Gaol of the County of Peterborough for any period not exceeding twenty-one days unless the fine imposed and costs (if any) including the costs of the distress and the committal and conveyance of the offender to the said Gaol are sooner paid.

COMPLETE PROGRAM FOR RECEPTION TO THE DUKE

Governor General and Party Will Arrive at C.P.R. Station at 10 a.m. and Will be at Central Park, Thirty Minutes Later

The programme arranged for the visit to Peterborough on June 1st of His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, Governor-General, is as follows:

The Royal Party will include the Governor-General, Their Royal Highnesses the Duchess of Connaught and the Princess Patricia, Miss Yorke, Lady-in-Waiting to her Royal Highness the Duchess of Connaught, Hon. Katherine Villiers, Lady-in-Waiting to Her Royal Highness the Princess Patricia, Lieut-Col. F. Farquhar, D. S.O., Governor-General's Secretary, Capt. the Hon. G. Boscawen and Capt. A. Graham, Aides-de-Camp, Major Sir Edward Worthington, M. V.O., Medical Officer, and Mr. Arthur F. Sladen, C.M.G., Private Secretary.

At the C.P.R. Station.

The Governor-General and party will arrive at the Canadian Pacific Railway station at 10 o'clock a.m. Immediately on arrival they will be received by His Worship Mayor Buller, Alderman A. H. Stratton, Chairman of the Reception Committee, Col. E. B. Clegg, senior officer of the Peterborough garrison, Col. the Hon. S. Hughes, Minister of Militia, the members of Parliament, Mrs. Buller, Mrs. Stratton and Mrs. Clegg. The members of the City Council and the members of the Reception Committee who are not aldermen, with their ladies, will be present at the station and will remain with the Royal party on the drives and while they are in the city.

Inspection of the Guard.

A Guard of Honor one hundred strong from the 57th Regiment under the command of Capt. McLean, will be drawn up in the yard north of the station with the 57th Regiment Band, and will be inspected there by His Royal Highness. Space on the platforms at the station will be reserved for the Royal Party and in the yard for the guard.

The First Ride.

After the inspection the first ride will be taken. This is laid out to take half an hour, which will give time for people who are at the station to see the arrival to go to the Central Park and be there when the Governor-General arrives at the Park. The routes of the drive will be as follows: From the C.P.R. station along George Street to Crescent St., through the Little Lake Cemetery, Crescent St. to Romaine St., Romaine St. to Aylmer St., Aylmer St. to Lansdowne St., Lansdowne St. to Park St., Park St. to Townsend St., Townsend St. to Stewart St., Stewart St. to Hunter St., Hunter St. to Park St., Park St. to Gilmour St., Gilmour St. to the Monaghan Road; Monaghan Road to Weller St., Weller St. to Park St., Park St. to Brock St., Brock St. to Reid St., Reid St. to McDonnell St., McDonnell St. to Aylmer St., Aylmer St. to Hunter St., Hunter St. to George St., George St. to the Central Park, about seven miles.

At the Central Park.

At the Central Park the Collegiate Institute Cadets, the Boy Scouts and the Veterans will be drawn up. The children of the Public and Separate Schools will also be present in the space reserved for them. Upon the arrival at the Central Park the Governor-General will inspect the Cadets, etc. The party will then go to the platform which will be erected, and as soon as they are on the platform the school children will sing the National Anthem. The address from the Corporation of the City of Peterborough will be read by the Mayor, and His Royal Highness will reply. The school children will then sing "O, Canada." Following this the members of the City Council, the County Council and other public bodies and the city, county and government officials and their ladies will be presented to Their Royal Highnesses.

Those to be presented will bring with them two cards with their names.

After the reception Their Royal Highnesses will spend ten minutes in the Armouries where they will be received by the officers of the garrison and the Daughters of the Empire.

The Second Ride.

A ride will then be taken, the route of which will be as follows: From the Central Park along George St. to Argyle St., Argyle St. to Water St., Water St. to Inverlea St., Inverlea St. to Dennistoun Ave., Dennistoun Ave. to Smith St., Smith St. to East Nicholls Park and through the Park and to Concession St., Concession St. to McFarlane St., McFarlane St. to the Trent Canal, along the Canal to the Lift-Lock.

Inspection of Lift-Lock.

The Lift-Lock will be inspected and Their Royal Highnesses will be taken over the lock in the Government steamer Bessie Butler.

Return to G.T.R. Station.

From the lift-lock the Royal party will proceed along the canal to Maria Street, Maria St. to Burnham St., Burnham St. to Hunter St., Hunter St. to Water St., Water St. to Brock St., Brock St. to George St., and George St. to Hunter St. The party will go west on Hunter Street and if Charlotte Street can then be used, by way of Aylmer and Charlotte Sts. to the Grand Trunk Station, but, if Charlotte Street is not then ready for use, by way of Stewart Street and either Charlotte or King Streets to the Grand Trunk station.

Decorate! Decorate!

While it is expected that flags will fly in all parts of the city, it is hoped that the residences and places of business along the streets through which Their Royal Highnesses will pass will be well decorated for the occasion, and that they will be given a right royal reception.

Kryptok Bifocal Lenses

Kryptok lenses are the most remarkable recent invention in the Optical line. Each lens is a solid, unbroken surface. There is no cementing to cloud the glasses, to offer lodging places for dirt or to disfigure the appearance. The eyesight of youth is reestablished, and to all appearance KRYPTOKS are the same as young folks' glasses, with nothing to distinguish them from the latter except your own pleasant knowledge of their wonderful far-and-near qualities.

We have the exclusive right to sell these lenses for this city and vicinity.

Ask for booklet describing them.

GENIAL GEORGE WAS BANQUETED

Happy Time Around Festive Board at White House

George O'Neil, the genial and popular owner of the Erie club, was the guest at a banquet tendered him at the White House Monday evening by the directors of the local club, and the fans who journeyed to Erie for opening day. President Denham, Mayor Buller and others spoke, and all were high in their praise of Mr. O'Neil as a sportsman of the highest merit. That George is one of the best thought of magnates in the minor leagues is a well known fact as he holds a record for good fellowship and cleanliness in battle which is without the slightest sign of a blot. His aim, according to the speakers, was to win by all means within the bounds of fair play, and not to gain victory by any other means. Erie is fortunate in having such a capable director and the speakers shared the opinion that the Yankee City would enjoy a successful venture as a result of its debut in the Canadian League.

Mr. O'Neil made a fitting reply and thanked the local sports for the good time they had provided him during his visit here. He was very enthusiastic over the future of his own club as well as that of the league.

The banquet commenced about 8 o'clock and Host Chris Graham's offerings were of the choicest, while the table decorations were very elaborate.

PARK STREET LADIES' AID

Officers Are Installed by the Rev. Mr. Conners

At the annual meeting of the Park Street Church Ladies' Aid, yesterday afternoon, the president gave an address and the officers were installed by Rev. Mr. Conners as follows:

Hon. Pres.—Mrs. Conners.
President—Mrs. Nicholls.
Vice-Pres.—Mrs. W. H. Moore.
Rec. Sec.—Mrs. B. Martin.
Fin. Sec.—Mrs. J. Stiner.
Treasurer—Mrs. A. Merrett.
Pianist—Mrs. S. Thomas.
Auditors—Mrs. O. S. Matchett and Mrs. F. Thomas.

Mrs. Nicholls, Mrs. Moore and Mrs. Martin were re-elected to office.

Assault Charge.

An Indian named McCue of the Chemong Reserve will appear before Magistrate Edmison on Friday morning at 11 o'clock on the charge of common assault against another Indian of the same place. Information was laid by Constable Jacobs.

Charity Board.

At the Charity Board meeting last evening, it was decided to accept the offer for wood for the season, of G. Galvin at $6 per cord. Mr. Miller was instructed to make arrangements for fifty cords of slabs.

DRIVING AUTOMOBILES.

People who purchase automobiles this year are reminded by the Chief of Police of the regulations regarding any one under the age driving a car. Some, it is said, are allowing their children as young as fifteen and sixteen to drive their autos.

TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION.

Editor, The Review,

It having come to the attention of the officers of the Citizens Temperance Committee and to the officers of the County of Peterboro Temperance Association, that an effort is being made by supporters of both political parties to secure pledges of support from temperance electors for possible political candidates, the officers of both Associations desire to request supporters of the Temperance cause to refrain from pledging their votes or influence until the candidates of both parties are finally in the field and their respective attitudes on the temperance issue have been fully and definitely ascertained.

HUNTING THE WOLF IN RUSSIA; IT IS FLEET, FIERCE AND STRONG

Hunting wolves with dogs is one of the most engrossing and exciting of the winter sports in Russia, and in the pursuit of the full grown wild beast three types of dog are used—the ordinary foxhound pack, the borzoi, or Russian wolfhound, and the bear hound, a type which is becoming rarer all the time. The Russian imperial hunt, which is situated at Gatchina, about thirty miles from St. Petersburg, is the scene of most of these sporting events.

The method of hunting is to employ a "ring" or locate the animal by means of his tracks in a certain portion of the forest, the mounted huntsmen remaining quietly about, with groups of borzois in leash, three together. The next step is to send the foxhounds into the forest to force the wolf to break cover, and on his appearance the wolfhounds are slipped. If the quarry can survive two miles of hard pressure he will have outlasted the pace and staying powers of his pursuers, but if not the wolfhounds will have pulled him down. They can make no impression on his hide, however, but must wait until the first horseman comes up. The wolf is either killed then by knife, or his legs and jaws are bound up, and he is taken back home and exhibited a few days in captivity, when he is turned loose to furnish sport at a future time.

In the London Times N. Kravtchenko tells of a hunt in company with a grand duke, in which one of these full grown vicious brutes proved too much for the hounds:

We had reached our stations and became accustomed to patient, motionless waiting when far away was heard the voice of a hound on the scent. Soon a whole chorus joined in, and a little later the wood in front of us began to fill with noise, and then suddenly, not far from us, appeared a huge full grown wolf.

He seemed to be absolutely undisturbed and trotted off as if nothing particular was occurring, but in reality he was traveling at great speed and had almost covered half the distance when the grand duke unleashed upon him. Like lightning the wolf turned and retreated, but the dogs were quicker. "Let go!" shouted the grand duke, and my leash quickly followed. Every moment I thought the dogs would roll the wolf over and pin him. But the task was evidently no easy one. The wolf went on and on. Now and then he would turn his head when some more enterprising hound pressed him with his attentions. It seemed that there was nothing particularly menacing in the act, but so quickly did the mighty jaws snap that we could only tell as one hound after another fell away with ripped sides that it had been far more than a mere head shake. The incredible strength and agility of the beast and the apparent ease with which he dealt with six of the mightiest and best borzois of the grand ducal kennel compelled one's respect and admiration.

But now came a whirlwind directly in his path—two borzois, dark as night, galloping toward the pursued, intent at the risk of their lives to overturn him. I thought to see him torn to pieces in a few moments. But it is not in vain that according to the rules of wolf coursing a grown wolf has the honors of the whole kennel—all the borzois on the field must be unleashed—for besides his strength the grown wolf is extraordinarily agile and intelligent. All these qualities he displayed to the full before me. For the first time I saw a grown wolf at bay, and I was no longer disposed to feel any surprise that so many dogs should be unleashed against one beast. Without changing his course or his gait, suddenly, under the very noses of the borzois that were rushing upon him, he turned to the right and headed straight toward us. Some dogs, trying to turn quickly, fell, but jumped up again and gave chase. But the wolf, it seemed, continued on his course at the same quiet gait, as if he felt no need to expend his strength on such foes.

Not far from me the dogs almost overtook him. I thought that one had gripped him, but he turned his head, and those terrible fangs of his again did their deadly work. Saplings of birch and oak, the outposts of the forest, were already nigh. The dogs made a last desperate effort and almost surrounded him on the very edge of the wood. We saw how they all came together, and then we heard the howl of one dog after another as the wolf snapped them off and his gray body disappeared in the thicket. Then the borzatniki began to call their dogs together and to gather up the wounded.

So we coursed the grown wolf. In twenty-five years the Pershino hunt has taken only fifty-six of them, whereas the number of cubs and yearling wolves that have been taken by the grand duke's borzois is 625.

Too Much Cavity.

One afternoon an esteemed citizen went into a barber shop to have his briers reaped, but no sooner had he taken a seat in one of the chairs than he dropped off into heavy slumber. Apparently the shave artist was having his own troubles in manipulating the customer, and after making several attempts he thoughtfully paused.

"Excuse me, sir," said he, gently shaking the man in the chair, "but would you mind waking up? I can't shave you while you are asleep."

"Can't shave me while I'm asleep," exclaimed the victim, with a wondering expression. "Why not?"

"Because," explained the barber as softly as possible, "when you fall into slumber your mouth opens so wide that I can't find your face."

Check those Colds in the Head with FOSSAL BALM

As you know, "catching a cold" simply means allowing the germs of a cold to catch you.

Usually these germs, which abound wherever people congregate, gain their first foothold in the mucous membrane lining the nasal passages. Here they multiply if unchecked, and quickly set up an inflammation. Then follows that smarting, burning, stuffed up, "headachy" feeling—that cold in the head that is so depressing and so likely to develop into something more serious.

Fossal Balm goes right to the spot, kills the germs and checks the cold. Fossal Balm is an antiseptic, healing ointment, put up in a collapsible tube with a long, nozzle-shaped opening. This little nozzle, inserted in the nostril, carries the Fossal Balm well up into the passage, where it quickly spreads over the inflamed membrane, destroys the germs that are causing the trouble, soothes the irritation, clears the passages, and gives grateful and lasting relief.

Get a 50c tube of Fossal Balm from your Druggist or write for it direct to us. National Drug & Chemical Co. of Canada, Limited, Montreal. 4

SECRET OF SUCCESS.

Go to It, Young Man; but, Beware, It May Not Work Every Time.

"Now, tell me," he said, "what are your prospects?"

"My prospects," I replied, "are excellent."

"That may be, but if you wish me to sanction your engagement to my daughter I must ask you to be a little more specific. At present all I know is that you are at the bar. What exactly are your prospects there?"

"Prospects," and I leaned back to his armchair, "are, in essence, nothing more than a state of mind. The word is derived from the Latin 'prospicion.' I look forward, and what I see when I look forward constitutes my prospects. Now that, of course, varies from day to day. When I am blessed with a good digestion, bounding pulse and high spirits I see a great and glorious future before me. When my liver is out of order I know I shall never succeed. At the present moment your excellent wine and cigars have induced the most hopeful condition of mind in me. My prospects just now are excellent."

He rose and extended his hand. "Young man," he said, "take her and blessings on you both. I believe you have a great career before you. A man who can confuse ideas so dexterously, a man who can avoid a plain and simple question with such agility, a man who has the tremendous impertinence to talk to his betters as you have had the assurance to address me is destined to acquire a lasting fame as a barrister. Your prospects—I believe you—are excellent."—Weekly Telegraph.

Apprehensive.

A customer had ordered lunch in a restaurant at 2 o'clock. He waited half an hour without result.

"Waiter!" he called out. "What time do you close?"

A Deficient Fad.

"So you don't approve of this dancing craze?"

"The only thing I have against it," replied Mr. Growcher, "is that it doesn't go far enough. It hasn't yet enabled a man to get up in the morning and go tangoing to work with the same elastic step he displayed the night before."—Yonkers Star.

Criticising Father.

"Father used to have to hurry through his work in order to get to the golf links in the afternoon," said Maymie.

"Yes," replied Maude, "and now he has to hurry away from the dancing party in order to get his breakfast and go to work in the morning."—Washington Star.

Veiled the Portrait.

This concerns a portrait in Portugal. There was in the salon of honor of the Congregation of the Faculty of Medicine at Lisbon a portrait of the former king, Dom Carlos I. The permanent retention of this portrait troubled the slumber of the minister of instruction of the republic of Portugal, who, however, had no power to demand that it be removed. So he expressed to some members of the faculty the desire that this reminder of sovereignty should be covered with a veil, and this has been done.—Gazeta de Noticias of Rio de Janeiro.

WAFTING SPELL OF PETES, NO MISTAKE

Good Stick Work is Continued and Tony Dorbeck Bites the Dust Before Blount's Biffers --- Tracey Had the Upper Hand Throughout --- Score Was 5-1

OUR esteemed resident Mr. K. Tracey starved the brethren from across the border yesterday afternoon and had them eating what he chose to serve up. The eats were few and far between, being four in number, so Heinie Smith's Erie crew failed to fatten their batten averages and incidentally were defeated by a score of 5-1 in a real tidy engagement of Father Chadwick's great pastime. Outside of Mr. Tracey there were others who helped to keep up the batting average of the boarding house prune in this city who deserve some credit for the lemon flavored taste which existed in the organisms of the Erie crew.

Messrs. Welsh, Byrne, King, Wilcox, Gorman and Kelly smote the Spalding invention when smotes meant runs while Curly Blount and Frank Fox smothered prospective Erie smotes by nice fielding.. In fact the whole team was there forty ways and played ball which would make a blind man wonder why the printers persist in setting the name of this fair city at the bottom of the Canadian League standing. We're not so far behind as it looks from where you sit though, as only a mere trifle of three glorious but not numerous victories prevent Peterboro from being inserted in fourth position. And by the way the lads are romping we should not take long to get there.

As previously inferred Mr. Tracey slabbed great ball. He had the ball answering to his mitt in great style and it broke disastrously for Heinie Smith's confreres. During the nine innings only thirty of the invading unit faced the local hurler. Of that number none was walked, one got a life on an error and four bingled. Of the five who reached first one scored and the rest were left stranded on pillow No. 1.

Kelly the local catcher shaped up in good style behind the platter and held Tracey up like a veteran. He nipped two would be thieves and only hard luck prevented him from getting Gygli in the fourth spasm. Besides, the renowned Hebrew backstop had two wallops.

King despite the fact he worked with a badly swollen hand had a good day at short having seven chances without a blow. He went out into left and grabbed one. Fox robbed Harris of a hit in the second by a hand pick up, while Welsh pulled one down from out near the brewery barns.

Started Early.

The Petes introduced their war clubs right off the reel and Lofty Dorbeck's offerings were given an awful smearing in the opening stanza. Byrne poked the agate along the third base line and scampered to third when Dawson allowed Welsh's chashing single to get away from him. King cleaned the sacks with a poke over third. He went to third on Wilcox's bunt, which went for a hit, but was nipped at the plate when Dawson, after catching Gorman's long fly, threw beautifully to the plate. In the fourth Wilcox doubled, went to third on a sacrifice and was nailed at the plate when he attempted to come home on Gorman's roller. Gorman went to second on Kelley's hit along third but was caught at the plate when he tried to score on Tracey's hit to short left. In the fifth the home boys got one more when Blount walked, went to second on an error, was sacrificed to third and scored on Welsh's long fly. In the eighth two more were added on Welsh's bingle, Behan's error, King's single and Gorman's sacrifice fly.

The Erie gang got their lone tally in the fourth on Ggyli's hit, his theft of second and Shaeffer's every day clout.

Tracey robbed himself of a triple in the second when he failed to touch first. His hit reached the score board and was a mammoth clout.

If you want to know the Baseball scores, the Fans at 435 will give you the information.

Dorbeck displayed some poor work in the box yesterday. He crossed in front of Gorman in the sixth while the latter was running to first and Gorman who should have been an easy out was declared safe under the interference clause. Again in the first he picked up a bunt which was heading for the foul line, when he had no chance of getting the runner. In the fifth he heaved one towards second with Blount standing on the sack. It rolled to the outfield. Lefty made up for his sins somewhat by clouting out two hits.

The box score would indicate that the Eries had a big day in the field as 20 assists are shown. Three of those assists are accounted for in returning the ball to first base when Tracey was declared out for no ttouching first, three when Fox was run down between second and first, two when Wilcox was thrown out at the plate and one when Wiltse' perfect peg to catch Gorman was spoiled by Dorbeck's interference of the runner. Therefore the single assists are reduced to 11.

Tracey failed to touch first on that long pole to centre but Gygli did not play the ball perfect, Behan's peg in the third and Wesh should have been safe. Otherwise his umps Mr. Miller was o.k.

Three Petes were thrown out at the plate during the game.

Dawson made a great catch of Gorman's clout in the first while Blount pulled down one off McNeil's club which looked as though it would fall safe.

Swartling the new first sacker will probably figure in today's encounter. The big fellow managed the Covington Club of the Federal circuit last year till the club was transferred to Kansas City.

The Petes looked better with the stick than they did on the holiday morning and can be counted on to make that bunch of crowing Cockneys step all the way to win the series.

Kelly pulled down a foul fly up against the stand and fell against the screen after the catch.

COMMENT

As You Like It

Hugh Swartling, the big first sacker, reported to Manager Blount last evening. He is not feeling fit yet, as he was ill for a few weeks and may not start this afternoon. Last year he managed the Covington Club in the Federal League. When the club was transferred to Kansas City he still retained the reins of pilot. In 1912 he was with Zanesville in the Central League. His batting average is quoted in Reach's Guide at .235 for 25 games and his fielding average, .982. Swartling is a giant in make up, being over six feet. He is built big all the way through.

Umpire Miller, who handled the series with Erie, leaves for Hamilton, where he will take charge of the St. Thomas-Hamilton series.

The Petes go to London to-morrow and it is to be hoped that President Fitzgerald will shift Walsh to some other clime.

C.N.R. GUARANTEE OCCUPIES DAY IN HOUSE OF COMMONS

Hon. Dr. Pugsley Gives Notice of An Amendment to Reduce the Stock of the C.N.R. to $30,000,000 and to Have Government to Take an Option On It—Equivalent to Receivership, Says Meighen.

OTTAWA, May 27.—The greater part of yesterday's session of the Commons was spent in committee considering the C.N.R. bond guarantee resolution, clause by clause.

Mr. Pugsley began yesterday by questioning the accuracy of a statement made by Solicitor-General Meighen last Thursday. Mr. Meighen, according to Mr. Pugsley, had stated that all the British Columbia town sites were included in the holdings of the C.N.R. Townsites Company. He read from the trust deed of 1913 to prove that only Port Mann was included. He also read from the same trust deed to shew that Mackenzie and Mann might withdraw any farm land in operations of the trust deed upon payment of $15 per acre and any urban property upon paying $150 per acre.

Mr. Meighen replied that all the British Columbia townsites were included. He said it could make no difference, so fa as the Government was concerned, whether any particular remained subject to the trust deed or went into the possession of Mackenzie, Mann & Co., Limited. The firm of Mackenzie, Mann & Co. was a party to the contract with the Government.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier objected that the Government was taking no mortgages upon the St. Catharines and Niagara Railway.

Mr. Meighen replied that this was true in one sense, but said the St. Catharines & Niagara Railway was owned by the Canadian Northern Ontario. The Government would get a lien upon it under the provisions of the contract, which created a mortgage upon the Canadian Northern Ontario to the extent that any part of the $45,000,000 was expended in construction work upon the C.N.R.

Mr. E. M. Macdonald desired to know whether the Government had requested Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann to pledge their personal estates as security for the proposed Government guarantee. He claimed that in 1884, when the C.P.R. applied for a loan of $30,000,0000, the promoters of that enterprise had pledged their own property as collateral security. This statement the Prime Minister disputed. No such authority, he said, had been exacted by the Government of Sir John Macdonald. A member of the Laurier Government had said in 1909 that the C.P.R. had in 1884 no security to offer.

Mr. Carvell said nothing was to be gained by discussing ancient history. He would ask the Government whether it had called upon Mackenzie anud Mann to put up any security, and whether it intended to so call upon them.

Mr. Borden: "They will certainly be called upon if other adequate security is lacking."

Mr. Pugsley asked about the Northern Construction Co., in which he understood relatives of both Sir William and Sir Donald figured prominently.

Mr. Bristol (Centre Toronto): "There is an affidavit on file to the contrary."

This statement was sharply challenged and after some desultory debate the Prime Minister said: "The Mackenzie in that firm, I am advised, is not a relative of Sir William Mackenzie. The Mann in the firm, is, I believe, Sir Donald Mann's nephew, possibly his brother. I am not certain which, but we have explicit sworn testimony to prove that neither Sir William nor Sir Donald has any interest whatever in the Northern Construction Co."

When that clause of the resolutions was reached which provided for forty per cent. of the C.N.R. stock being turned over to the Government of Canada, Hon. Mr. Oliver asked what responsibility the Government would assume for the conduct and result of the railway system.

Mr. Borden said the Government would be merely a stockholder. There would be no attempt at Government operation of the road.

Mr. Pugsley said that the Government as trustees for the people would have to take a lively interest in the conduct and operation of the system. He thought the idea of a partnership between His Majesty the King and Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann most objectionable.

He gave notice of an amendment to reduce the capital stock to $30,000,000, all of it to be deposited with the receiver-general as trustees, and the Government to have an option on the whole system exercisable at any time within five years.

Mr. Meighen said Parliament had no power to interfere with civil rights, and therefore could not confiscate the property of Mackenzie and Mann. All that could be done would be to ask Mackenzie and Mann to consent to some such plan as Mr. Pugsley suggested. They would, he said, undoubtedly refuse.

Mr. Meighen concluded by saying the adoption of Mr. Pugsley's amendment would result in the appointment of a receiver for the Canadian Northern.

ROBINSON'S BIG CIRCUS COMING

Will Visit Peterborough Wednesday June 10th

We are going to have a big circus. The Robinson's Big Show will soon be here. This is one of the oldest and biggest shows travelling, having been before the American public for 89 years. General Agent Harry A. Mann dropped in at our office this morning and in an interview stated: "Outside of the circus proprietors very little is known of the salary paid circus employees. The owner is usually the manager, thus saving a salary of $10,000 per season of seven months. A general agent's salary is $8,000 with a big show, a contracting agent will command a salary of $75 per week and expenses, a car manager the same, a circus press agent $35 to $75 per week, legal adjuster or circus lawyer $75. The salaries of the performers vary according to the recklessness or daring of their act, a good rider with the Robinson show will receive $100 to $150 per week, a clown $35 to $75, a family of acrobats (these are always the highest salaried) $250 to $400 and a state room or two, according to the size of the act. This also includes board and travelling expenses. They sleep in Pullman cars, getting their rest as the three special show trains move during the night to the next show stand. The life to an outsider may seem rough but a big show is just like one big family and beneath the outward roughness, there is many a 'diamond in the rough' and no deserving charity has ever gone unaided, when the circus comes to town."

SONS OF ENGLAND AT KNOX CHURCH

Large Turnout of Members Heard Fine Sermon

One hundred members of Lansdowne Lodge, Sons of England, paraded to Knox Presbyterian Church, last Sunday evening and were treated to a splendid sermon by the Rev. H. J. Keith. The subject was Pious Patriotism. The turnout of members was the best in some years. Four of the veteran members were conveyed to the church.

Three points which the preacher dealt with were English homes, the qualities of Englishmen and the institutions in England. Reference was also made to the ritual of the lodge as read at the grave of departed brethren and the preacher incidentally touched on the funeral service over the remains of the late Edward Webb.

After the return to the hall, a cordial vote of thanks was passed, and the secretary was instructed to convey the same to Rev. Mr. Keith.

The members were also reminded that the lodge would take part in Fraternal Day, which will be held Sunday, June 28th.

WILL NOT PAY TAXES.

Albanians Are Chiefly Responsible for Trouble In State.

ROME, May 27.—One of the chief reasons for the trouble in Albania is the unwillingness of the inhabitants of that country to pay taxes, according to the Marquis di San Giuliano, Italian Foreign Minister, in answering questions in the Chamber of Deputies yesterday. He described the action taken by the Italian Minister and the sailors of the Italian fleet for the protection of Prince William, ruler of Albania, and for the re-establishment of order in Durazzo.

The Foreign Minister emphasized the identity of Italy's views on the subject with those of Austria. Both countries, he said, were aiming to enforce the decision of the conference of London regarding the independence of Albania.

The Marquis di San Giuliano said that Italy and Austria would do everything in their power to prevent armed intervention in Albania and they were desirous of withdrawing the detachments landed from the warships at Durazzo.

This Trial Was Quiet.

LONDON, May 27.—An almost uncanny stillness in marked contrast to recent police court scenes in which militant suffragettes have participated, reigned yesterday at the London sessions during the trial and conviction of the women vandals of the National Gallery and the Royal Academy, and of the recent raiders, who broke many windows in the west end of London.

Sentence of six months' imprisonment on each of the picture destroyers, while the window smashers in all cases were condemned to terms of four months. Several of the women refused to give their names and were tried as "Number so and so."

DEATH OF JACOB RIIS.

Author and Social Worker Passes Away at His Summer Home.

BARRE, Mass., May 27.—Jacob A. Riis, author and social worker, died at his summer home here yesterday after a lingering illness.

Born in Denmark in 1849, he came to New York in 1868 and became police reporter on The Sun, in which capacity he came into touch with the "submerged" population and became interested in social reform. He did much for the parks and playgrounds movement. His writing was chiefly along lines of civic and personal betterment; he also wrote a biography of Roosevelt.

Winnipeg Unemployed Riot.

WINNIPEG, May 27—Twelve hundred unemployed, mostly foreigners, paraded Main street yesterday and gathered on a corner to hear a harangue from one of their number. A policeman who sought to arrest the speaker was knocked down and his teeth knocked out. A riot call was turned in, the crowd dispersed and three arrests made.

WORK ON SUNDAY

To Help Along the Paving Operations

If the local representatives of the Lord's Day Alliance would shut their eyes on Sunday, the City Council might allow a number of laborers to work on the main streets next Sunday with the view of rushing the paving operations so that the streets would present a better appearance for the visit of Royalty on the following Monday.

The streets will be cleaned up as much as possible but according to Mayor Buller and the City Engineer, there will be two blocks on George St., south of Charlotte Street, upon which asphalt will not be laid unless the gang work on Sunday.

The City Engineer will not permit the asphalt to be put down during the night as it is impossible to obtain good results.

CHAPLAIN FOR ENGLISH PEOPLE

Rev. Fr. Galvin to Attend Eucharistic Congress at Lourdes

The Canadian delegation of the seventeenth National Pilgrimage to the International Eucharistic Congress at Lourdes, France, and to Rome, Italy, under the spiritual direction of Rt. Rev. Paul Eugene Roy, Bishop of Quebec and Rev. R. G. Galvin of St. Peter's Cathedral will leave Montreal and Quebec July 2nd by the R.M.S. Alsatian of the Allan Line. The Pilgrimage has been given great publicity in the province of Quebec and many from that part of the Dominion have signified their intention of going. It was not given so much prominence in local districts till recently nevertheless several citizens have decided to accept the opportunity of paying a visit to the famous shrines.

Rev. Father Galvin will be the Chaplain for the English speaking people.

YOUNG MEN FORM TEAMS

To Help in Four Day Financial Campaign

$4500 FOR Y.M.C.A.

Considerable enthusiasm was evinced by a large number of young men who attended the meeting at the Y.M.C.A. last evening in connection with preparations for the four day financial campaign which commences on the 1st of June. The business men will hold a meeting this week when their teams will be elected and other arrangements completed. This morning General Secretary Meserve stated that the amount of $4500 would clear off last year's debts and put the Association on a sound basis until the first of next year. The young men have pledged themselves to gather in the required amount in the four days which means a whirlwind campaign. The teams for the young men elected last evening are:

Brown, Capt., A. Harper, O. Theobald, S. Taylor, E. E. Logan, F. S. Panter, D. Carlisle, V. Elliott, M. Turner, C. E. Sisson.

Lees, Capt., J. Gilchrist, D. A. Loucks, H. G. Mulhern, W. Scott, H. Taylor, W. Heaslip, H. E. Raynor, F. Pidgeon, A. Morrow.

Laing, Capt., E. Brown, W. Flowers, J. E. Smith, M. Adams, J. McClelland, I. Lillico, A. Horsfield, M. Peever, A. Darling.

GEO. McCLENNAN DIED SUDDENLY

Was Stricken at Home After Evening Meal

After enjoying his usual evening meal last evening, George McClennan rose from the table at the family residence, 861 Water Street, complained of feeling ill, was helped to the yard, where fresh air could be secured, by his mother, and died a few moments later, practically in the arms of his mother. Mr. McClennan had not been enjoying the best of health for some time, but his condition was not such as to create alarm. His sudden death was a shock to the members of the family, who were all at his side when he passed away. Medical attendance was summoned as soon as the deceased complained of a suffocating feeling, but he was beyond human aid. The deceased was 35 years of age, was born here and had resided here all his life. Yesterday he was around as usual and hurried home to his supper. The latter fact is thought to have hurried his death.

Besides his sorrowing mother, there are left to survive: three sisters, Gertrude and Alice, Toronto, and Ida, Peterboro, and four brothers, William, Thomas, Roland and Max. The funeral will be held from the family residence at 3.30 tomorrow to Little Lake Cemetery.

CANADIAN AND ENGLISH DELEGATES WILL ATTEND BROTHERHOOD CONVENTION

Many delegates from Canada and Great Britain will attend the International Brotherhood Convention which will be held in the Plymouth Methodist Episcopal Church, Buffalo, on May 31st and June 1st. It is expected that a large number from the various denominational organizations and leaders or religious and social activities will be present among whom will likely be the following representative men:

Hon. W. J. Bryan, Secretary of State; William Ward, Hon. Gen. Secretary and Past President of the Brotherhood Federation of England; Dr. Samuel Z. Batten, of Philadelphia, Secretary of the Baptist Brotherhood Council of the Northern Baptist Conference; Frederick A. Wallis, President of the Brotherhood of the Presbytery of New York; J. W. Stephens, Secretary of the Brotherhood of the Presbytery of New York; Dr. J. L. Gordon, of Winnipeg, President of the Brotherhood Federation of Canada; Bishop Burt, of Buffalo; Rev. S. W. Hughes, of Birmingham, Eng.; Rev. A. H. Vine, of Leamington, Eng.; Rev. E. H. Jenkins, of Leeds, Eng.; Alderman Green, of Poole, Eng.; Mr. E. L. Burrows, of London, Eng.; Mr. N. W. Hubbard, of London, Eng.; Controller J. O. McCarthy, of Toronto; Rev. Dr. T. Albert Moore, of Toronto, President Elect of the Brotherhood Federation of Canada; Dr. J. H. Jowett, of New York (formerly of Carr's Lane, Birmingham); Dr. Pliny H. Hayes, President of Presbyterian Union; Hon. Lord O'Brian, of the Episcopal Men's Organization; Dr. W. B. Creighton, of Toronto, Chairman of the Literary Committee of the Brotherhood Federation, and Editor of the Christian Guardian; Rev. Dr. Francis Fox, of Chicago, President of the Council of the Brotherhood of the Presbyterian Church in the United States; Rev. E. H. Tippett, Hough Congregational Church, Cleveland; Rev. L. Frick, Ph.D., Methodist Episcopal Church, Buffalo; and other leading Ministers and laymen from different parts of the United States, Canada, France, and Great Britain.

There are, at present, over two thousand societies of the Brotherhood in existence, and these scattered throughout the length and breadth of Great Britain and her colonies have been linked into one great organization known as the National Council of Brotherhoods, the aims and objects of which have been declared to be:

1. To lead men and women into the Kingdom of God.
2. To unite men in Brotherhoods of mutual help.
3. To win the masses of the people for Jesus Christ.
4. To encourage the study of Social Science.
5. To enforce the duties of Christian Citizenship.
6. To promote the unity of Social Service.

The Brotherhood movement is largely a working-class movement, although within its ranks may be found almost every class of society. Its membership today, totals over half a million men. The movement, first started in Great Britain, has extended pretty well over the civilized world and is regarded as one of the greatest moral, social and religious forces in the country.

The Movement in Canada.

The forward Brotherhood movement was started in Canada in 1912 and during the past two years a National Brotherhood Council has been inaugurated with a Federation for each Province, the chief object being to unify the centre forces of the country that were carrying on religious work among men along Brotherhood lines.

SUMMER SCHEDULE FOR COLLECTION OF GARBAGE

Starting on Monday next the summer schedule for garbage collection comes into force. During June, July, August and September collections will be made twice a week over the same districts and on the same days as last year namely: Mondays and Thursdays, all south of Charlotte from Monaghan Road to the river. Tuesdays and Fridays, all north of Charlotte from East Side of Aylmer to the river. Wednesdays and Saturdays, all north of Charlotte from Monaghan Road to west side of Aylmer.

Keep garbage dry and wrapped in paper, and in a covered receptacle. Result, no smell, no flies, no discomfort. Leave it wet, and exposed to the hot sun. Result, foul odours, swarms of flies, no comfort.

Summer Schedule.

Mondays and Thursdays, south of Charlotte from Monaghan Rd. to the river. Tuesdays and Fridays, north of Charlotte from east side of Aylmer to the river. Wednesdays and Saturdays, north of Charlotte from Monaghan Rd. to West side of Aylmer.

LINER EVADES U. S. OFFICIALS AND AMMUNITION IS LANDED

Gen. Fanston Reports That Hamburg-American Steamer Bavaria Has Sent Ashore 1,800,000 Rounds of Ammunition and a Large Quantity of Barbed Wire—Provisional Government Seems Nearer.

VERA CRUZ, May 28.—Gen. Funston announced yesterday afternoon that late on Saturday the Hamburg-American liner Bavaria landed at Puerto Mexico, 1,800,000 rounds of ammunition and 3,327 rolls of barbed wire, all consigned to the Huerta Government. The information was given to Funston by an American who was a passenger on the Bavaria. He arrived here on Sunday, immediately sought Gen. Funston, and gave him a complete story. When the Bavaria arrived here Tuesday and Capt. Stickney, collector of the port, went aboard, the captain of the Bavaria told him that he had lost his manifest. Capt. Stickney demanded a full explanation, and informed the captain that the vessel would be held pending the outcome of the investigation. However, the vessel has not yet been seized.

Finally, following positive demands of Capt. Stickney, the captain of the Bavaria admitted the landing of the ammunition, some of which has already reached Cordova. Whether or not the ammunition reached Mexico City has not been ascertained here so far. The ammunition was all consigned originally to Vera Cruz, but this port being closed, the German ship sneaked into Puerta, Mexico, and managed to land before detection. Capt. Stickney, it is stated, will inflict a fine upon the German captain for coming to Vera Cruz without a manifest.

Huerta Played To Quit.

MEXICO, CITY, May 28.—Reports reaching here yesterday through private sources declare that President Huerta has specifically committed himself to turn over the Government to a commission composed of prominent members of the various factions in the republic, such as has been suggested at the Niagara Falls peace conference. He is also said to have agreed to relinquish power to any successor which such a commission might select.

The report further says that Huerta's determination has already been communicated to the Mexican delegates and probably directly to the Washington Government.

HOLD-UP ON BROCK STREET

Gun Was Held by Unseen Hands

A perfectly harmless individual was strolling along Brock Street this morning, thinking of nothing but the beautiful sunshine, the Peterboro ball club and what sort of hash the boarding house would serve for dinner, when suddenly his thoughts switched to home and mother. There was a reason. Like a bolt from the blue a nasty looking gun poked its ugly looking nose out of a window in the carriage factory of Geo. Fitzgerald. It had evidently been sent there owing to a deficient carriage, but the individual being a firm believer in the idea of he who hesitates is lost, kept right on going for the time being. He afterwards learned that the owner of the smoke machine was testing the sight. You never can tell though, because many a good fellow has been shot into the echoeless beyond by a supposed bulletless firearm.

J. J. PRESTON FOR DURHAM

J. J. Preston, of Bethany, the present member for the Legislature in Durham, was again nominated by the Liberal Conservatives this afternoon, and accepted. There were no other nominations. This will be Mr. Preston's fourth term in the Legislature, as there is little doubt of his election.

There were inspiring speeches by Pratt, M.L.A., South Norfolk, Hon. I. B. Lucas, and the candidate.

DOUBLE THE CAPACITY OF GRAND STAND

Exhibition Directors Are Asking for Tenders

At the meeting held last evening the Exhibition directors decided to double the grand stand capacity and tenders for the work of remodelling the stands are being advertised for today. The fair will be held on September 17, 18, 19, and will be bigger than ever. Numerous attractions are being arranged for and this year should surpass any of the previous ones.

A new entrance will also be erected. It will face George Street and the street railway company has assured the directors of a service direct to the main entrance.

The prize lists will be increased as an inducement for keener and more superior competition in all lines.

J. H. Garbutt, president of the organization was in the chair while F. J. Hall, secretary looked after the clerical work of the meting.

SUB-DIVIDE TEN ACRES OF FAIR GROUNDS

Would Assist in Purchasing the Property

The question of sub-dividing the east ten acres of the fair grounds and disposing of it for residential purposes, for the purpose of financing the deal for the purchase of the entire property was discussed at a meeting of the Peterboro Industrial Exhibition directors last evening. No action was taken. The exhibition directors have an option of $30,000 on the 29 acres and that option expires in two and a half years. The question of taking up the option has been considered for some time and some of the directors believe that by selling the east ten acres a goodly sum could be realized which would assist in financing the amount sufficient to exercise the option. Another meeting to be held shortly to further discuss the matter.

WORKMEN'S ACT

Gives Greatest Efficiency With Least Labor

TORONTO, May 28.—The highest praise of the Ontario Workmen's Compensation Act is given by F. W. Hinsdale, the Washington expert whom the Government have brought over to set the machinery in motion. The staff needed to enforce it, he states, will not be large in number, and it has been phrased to give maximum efficiency with minimum labor.

The special work of Mr. Hinsdale will be to install a complete office system and enter the names of every manufacturer in Ontario, and the details of his business.

Mr. Hinsdale is secretary of the Oregon commission and was released to Ontario for two months by special permission, in the hope that interchange of work would prove beneficial to the operation of both commissions.

PAY PRISONERS

Ontario Government Forwards Scheme For Jail Reform

Money for Labor Will Go to Maintain Inmates of Industrial Farms and to Keep Their Families From Starvation.

Indeterminate Sentences For Old Offenders—Rewards For Those Who Work.

TORONTO, May 28.—The Ontario Government, in a new policy of conducting industrial farms in the province, is aiming to do away with the privation and want suffered by wives and families of men sent to jail for idleness. By a series of regulations arranged for at the last legislative session and now put into working shape, the earnings of a person sentenced to an industrial farm will hereafter be applied to his own maintenance and that of his immediate dependent relatives. His wages will also be used to pay for his transportation to a place of employment on his release.

The main object of placing these institutions on a new basis of efficiency is to provide open-air employment and moral and physical reformation methods for persons otherwise lying in idleness in a common jail.

maintenance will also be cut down materially by making the industrial farms self-sustaining.

The principal clause states that any person convicted of being drunk and disorderly in a public place within three months after a conviction for a similar offence may be committed for an indeterminate period not exceeding two years.

It is made clear that every one sent to a farm must be prepared to work.

As rewards to those who work there is set aside a two-hour period in the evening for recreation, and minor privileges are distributed on the same basis. The day on the farms beings at 6.30 and ends with lights out at nine.

Hon. Mr. Hanna expects the venture into this field after a two-year successful experiment at Fort William to revolutionise the system of police court sentences for old offenders.

GIVE PAVEMENT BASE TO LOCAL CONTRACTORS

Warren Company Representative Says Company Would Accept Work of Reputable Contractor and Give Same Guarantee

Mayor Would Like to See More Money Left in the City

The Board of Works last night were waited upon by John Fallahee, of the Warren Paving Co., of Toronto, who discussed the qualities of the pavement offered by the company. His Worship Mayor Buller grasped the opportunity and asked if there was some way in which the contracts for the laying of the base could be awarded to local contractors, thus leaving as much money as possible in the city. Mr. Fallahee was in sympathy with the idea, and remarked that the company will accept the work of a reputable contractor and furnish the same guarantee. They also secured all the labor from this city, excepting some five or six men who are with the company. Mr. Fallahee was given the assurance of the Board that his company would be given every consideration if they applied when tenders were called.

Road Repairs.

Several of the City Dads requested that sections of the roads be repaired, but Alderman Duncan, the chairman, stated that the carts were now in operation and in due time the city would be thoroughly gone over. Numerous streets where stones are exceedingly prominent will also be looked after.

Bonaccord Street Bridge.

Alderman Green inquired as to the Bonaccord Street bridge and was informed by City Engineer Parsons that the high water in the spring had caused the matter to be left in abeyance, but estimates would be given by the Board in the course of a couple of weeks.

Inspection Trip.

It was finally decided that the Board would make their annual inspection trip some day next week.

1915 CONVENTION TO BE HELD HERE

The 1915 convention of the Ontario Medical Association will be held in this city. The convention which closed in Toronto yesterday selected this city out of numerous others. The medical convention is one of the most important of all provincial conventions and this city is fortunate in securing it. The dates will be announced later.

OSGOODE HALL JUDGMENT.

The following is from the Osgoode Hall column of the Toronto Globe: Re Coughlin and Towns. — F. D. Kerr (Peterborough) for vendor. E. H. D. Hall (Peterborough) for purchaser. Motion under vendors and purchasers' act for order declaring that vendor can make good title to land in question. Order declaring title good and objection invalid. No order as to costs.

SAVED TWICE IN ONE DAY

Would-be Suicide is Now in Jail

TORONTO, May 28. — Twice within an hour last evening did Alfred Blyth, who gives his address as Swansea, attempt to commit suicide, but on both occasions was miraculously saved from death, and finally was lodged in No. 3 police station, charged with attempted suicide.

About 8.30 Blyth tried to drown himself by jumping into the lake off Strachan avenue, but was pulled out in the nick of time by two men rowing along the lake front.

Saved from a watery grave, Blyth hit upon an idea to end his life on land, and selected the railway tracks just north of the Parkdale subway. A cattle train was just pulling in, travelling about six miles an hour, and Blyth threw himself down flat on the tracks right in front of the cowcatcher. A bump from a bar underneath caused him to cry out loud and the engineer crammed on brakes and brought the train to a standstill. Upon investigation be found Blyth pinned underneath the train, his head projecting over the steel rail, and the rear wheel just touching him. Before Blyth could be hauled out from under the engine the men bad to jack up the rear wheels. Blyth was unhurt.

IS ANDREE'S BALLOON?

Discovery Reported From Eastern Siberia

STOCKHOLM, Sweden, May 28.—What is believed to be the remains of the balloon in which Prof. Salagon A. Andree ascended from Dane's Island, near Spitsbergen, July 11, 1897, in an attempt to reach the North Pole, have been found in a forest in eastern Siberia, according to a telegram received at the Swedish Foreign Office yesterday from Yakuts.

A thorough investigation of the reported discovery has been ordered by the Government.

The Arctic explorer was accompanied by two scientists, and after leaving Dane's Island no report was ever received from the party.

Although traces of Andree's balloon have been reported at various places from time to time, and while even the body of the family Swedish Arctic explorer was said to have been discovered on the coast of Labrador, nothing has ever definitely been established as to what actually happened to the expedition or what became of the balloon.

Andree and his two companions, Messrs. Strindberg and Fraenkel, started from Dane's Island in the hope of being carried by trade winds to the North Pole. The explorer believed the steady current of air would take him into the polar regions in a week, carry him over the Pole and land him safely in North America.

Five buoys from the balloon have been picked up. The first found in Norway, in June, 1899, contained a note from Andree, and was thrown out eight hours after his departure. The "North Pole buoy," to be dropped when the Pole was passed, was found empty off King Charles Island in September, 1899. A third, a fourth and a fifth buoy were found at different intervals later.

LIGHTNING CAUSED LOSS IN DOURO

Lightning striking the gable of your house, passing around your iron bed, through to another room where an organ was struck and out to the kitchen, is not a sensation to be had every day, but such was experienced on Tuesday by Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Gallagher and family who reside on the sixth line of Douro. During the storm a bolt of lightning struck the house. Except for a light shock to the occupants and a few minor marks on the bed and organ no damage was done. In relating the affair Mr. Gallagher said that the entire room appeared to be on fire when he first awoke and saw the rings of fire caused by the lightning darting around his bed and taking its freakish course about the house. Several large trees in the vicinity of the farm were struck and destroyed.

Two Douro farmers Wm. Leahy and Dennis McMahon each suffered the loss of a valuable horse through being struck by lightning. Both horses were pasturing in the fields.

The telephone line from Douro to the city was also out of commission during the storm.

Reports from the back country in Burleigh are to the effect that an extremely bad electric storm raged and destroyed two barns while several others were damaged. One man driving in Douro on Tuesday remarked that the storm was about the worst he had seen.

Mr. David Kidd of Indian Revir said this morning that the storm passed over that vicinity doing very little damage.

LAW AND JUSTICE.

AN IMPORTANT DECISION has been rendered by the United States Supreme Court with reference to claims for damages, amounting to $13,000,000, from the Oceanic Steam Navigation Company, occasioned by the loss of the Titanic. So far as the United States is concerned, the damage is limited to $91,000, by means of a law passed in 1851. This American Limited Liability law limited damages to the value of the salvage recovered and to the freight and passage money received on the Titanic's voyage.

In the United States, the question of negligence on the part of the White Star line's agents in control of the Titanic, and of privity of the company's officers and general directors, will still be threshed out in the courts. The decision is held to be merely a settlement of one legal question, but, even if negligence of some kind is proved, it is doubtful whether claimants will benefit by reason of this decision, limiting the amount of damages.

Whether the same decision will hold in the suits pending in England is doubtful, for it would depend on the existence of a similar law there. Without such a law the case would possibly turn on questions of negligence and of the law of contract. These are intricate and difficult questions, and sometimes decisions have been given which preserved the continuity of law at the expense of justice. Nevertheless, out of such intricate problems we think the ends of justice would be served better in England in such cases than in the United States, where, apparently, laws have been made to meet possible emergencies, rather than the equity of actual disputes. The decision of the United States Court doubtless preserves law's continuity, but it is hardly justice, for any law which permits an immensely powerful corporation to jeopardize the lives of some two thousand people, together with a large amount of property in their trust, without penalty or restraint, is not a just law. The White Star line was wealthy enough to suffer the loss, great as it was, of the Titanic. The life of the company was not in danger of annihilation from running the risk consequent on the attempt to establish a new ocean record for speed and luxurious travel. So well able was the company to undertake this great risk that it confidently disregarded repeated warnings of danger. The catastrophe came—some sixteen hundred people went to their deaths, and a vast amount of property in baggage and freight was lost, yet the company survived. Many people suffered crippling losses from the disaster, in the cause of which they had no part. This decision gives them no relief. It enables a corporation like the White Star line to jeopardize the lives of its passengers and the property of its patrons without fear of damages or of pecuniary loss beyond that of the ship. Such a statute is law but is not justice.

True, the company had no intention of sinking the Titanic, but that is not the question. They undertook the risk in face of warnings and this decision and law now exhonerate them from the consequences outside of the loss of their own property. It permits a body of men to damage the property of others and take lives, as a result from the use to which they put their own property. That is not justice, because it does not give each side an equal chance, and further is inconsistent with individual liberty

SHOULD VACCINATION BE COMPULSORY ?

AN INTERESTING CASE has been before the courts in Montreal for some time. At present it is in the appeal stage before the Court of King's Bench. A jury awarded damages amounting to $6,000 for paralysis of a child's arm, alleged to be the result of vaccination. The Court of Review reversed the judgment on the ground that no fault or negligence had been proved against the city of Montreal. Now comes the third hearing of the case when the plaintiff, Mrs. Marie Polerier has made an appeal against the second judgment. She sued the city of Montreal for $10,000 alleging that she had been obliged by a city by-law to have her son vaccinated in August, 1909, and that as a result of the vaccination he had lost the use of his left arm. Counsel for the plaintiff now seeks to have the responsibility fixed, while the city urges that the child's misfortune was due to infantile paralysis.

A natural question that has been often asked is, should vaccination be compulsory, or in other words, is it a proper preventive measure ? This case in Montreal is not the first one that has arisen from, what some would call, improper vaccination. Before now, deaths have occurred from no other cause than vaccination. Even some medical men have asserted that vaccination should not be compulsory and that it is not the preventive measure it is claimed to be. On the other hand, we have heard medical men say that such cases as the present one do not show the principle of vaccination to be wrong, but rather, carelessness in using old vaccine or in some other way. If this is the case, there should be no compulsory vaccination until the public are protected from such carelessness. Medical men should be made responsible for the death or injury of any child vaccinated, by reason of using old vaccine or improper methods of vaccination. There should be compensation for losses such as have been sustained in this Montreal case, because the public are forced to submit to the practices of good and bad doctors and by reason of local by-laws have no other alternative but to run the risk of carelessness.

LET CALGARY OIL STOCKS ALONE.

LATEST REPORTS indicate that people of Calgary are having a delightful picnic buying shares in oil companies. Every once in a while a rumor comes in that indications are improving in some well and up and down go the prices of the shares like a Will o' the Wisp on a marsh, so that legitimate business is made quite impossible. It appears that the public are purchasing stock without giving a thought to the prospectus. The reports of Discovery Well continue to keep up the excitement, as it shows indications of large quantities of oil. Money continues to pour into the city from all points, and large sums are being cabled privately from Europe.

Many of the companies propose to distribute their stock all over the Dominion and the public must be very careful and thoroughly inspect the prospectus of each company before buying. Some of the companies have perhaps one holding which is within striking distance of Discovery, while the remainder often amounting to hundreds of acres is absolutely away from the anticlines which have been mentioned by geologists as probable oil-bearing territory. The oil fever is spreading and reports show that every little rural town is affected. Advances, the majority of which are only paper, have given the opportunity to wildcatters and the result will be that many people who cannot afford it will lose considerable sums of money.

The undesirable element is beginning to arrive and oil stock brokerages are springing up like mushrooms. Stores are renting their windows at prices ranging from $10 to $100 per day, and a one storey tile building was erected, finished and occupied and the dealers inside selling stock within fourteen hours from the commencement of building. The financial element is picking up the most desirable leases procurable with a view to forming giant companies and a number are nibbling at the early and more reliable flotations.

If people have any regard for their savings they will run shy of Calgary oil stocks. The Calgary Herald is running from ten to fifteen pages of advertisements from oil companies while it reports that about 100 companies have already sought incorporation. A great many of these must necessarily be fake companies, and in others the owners will be unfortunate in not striking oil. Those that have money in these companies will be "stung," and if a bitter experience is not desired, the public will let Calgary oil stocks alone.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

A LIFE-SIZE STATUE of Venus has been found by excavators near Cyrene, North Africa which dates back to the time of Praxiteles in the 6th century, B.C. Although this is considered a masterpiece of Greek sculpture, it ought to be submitted to the Toronto Board of Censors before being placed in the National Museum at Rome as is proposed.

WE WOULD LIKE to know if the city water of Peterborough is good to drink when so many biological specimens come out of the tap. This livestock may be fattening, but the question is, is it healthy? At any rate, most people would prefer not to have them.

THE EFFORTS of the Government to stop the immigration of mechanics and artisans have been successful. Immigration has fallen off 50 per cent., almost wholly in this branch. The result will be beneficial to the farmer and the labour market.

IT IS REPORTED that two former residents of Kingston made $200,000 in oil, near Calgary. We are inclined to think oil had very little to do with it, but rather oil stocks.

NO ANNOUNCEMENT has been made of an election, which seems to be worrying a lot of Grits. The Conservatives, however, are quietly organizing, so that they will be well prepared when it does come.

IT IS REPORTED that Toronto cops who paraded before the Duke, wore white gloves. This just shows to what degree Toronto has carried its desire to be sanitary.

CALGARY NEWSPAPERS are running page after page of oil companies' "ads." The gold they strike that way may be better than the oil of the companies.

INTO THE SUNLIGHT

By Walt Mason

Oh, cut out the vain repining, cease thinking of dole and doom! Come out where the sun is shining, come out of the cave of gloom! Come out of your hole and borrow a package of joy from me, and say to your secret sorrow, "I've no longer use for thee!" For troubles, which are deluding, are timorous beasts, I say: they stick to the gent who's brooding and flee from the gent who's gay. The gateways of Eldorados are open, all o'er the earth; come out of the House of Shadows and dwell in the House of Mirth. From Boston to far Bobcaygeon, the banners of gladness float; oh, grief is a rank contagion, and mirth is the antidote. And most of our woes would perish, or leave us, on sable wings, if only we didn't cherish and coddle the blame fool things. Long since would your woes have scampered away to their native fogs but they have been fed and pampered like poodles or hairless dogs. And all of these facts should teach you it's wise to be bright and gay; come out where the breeze can reach you, and blow all your grief away.

Birthdays of Note

THURSDAY, MAY TWENTY-EIGHTH

To-day marks the eighty-third anniversary of the birth of Riadworth Angus, former president of the Bank of Montreal, and one of the most prominent of the older generation of Canadian financiers. Born at Bathgate, Scotland, he obtained his training as a bank clerk in the Manchester and Liverpool Bank and then came to Canada fifty-seven years ago to take a position in the Bank of Montreal. He rose in a few years to be general manager and then resigned to devote himself to outside undertakings. He became associated with Lord Strathcona and Lord Mount Stephen in their railway undertakings, notably the C.P.R., of which he continues to be a director. His other interests are widespread and he is on the directorate of many companies. Besides his business connections he has given generous support to art and philanthropy.

KEEPING APPOINTMENTS

YOU kin break a boy from runnin' away from school by hailin' him afore the truant officer or a pup from suckin' eggs by feedin' him red pepper but when ye come to tryin' to break a man from the bad habit of failin' to keep his appointments you've got some job on your hands.

To promise a friend that you will be at a certain place at a certain time and fail to show up is as easy as slidin' down a greasy plank and if you kin show me one man who hasn't at some time been guilty of the appointment-breakin' offence I'll sure do my best to get hold of that feller and keep him as an exhibit.

And still there air plenty of men who believe their veracity is unquestioned who'll pass their word to you to meet you somewhere and fail to do it. Jest how much or how little of a liar do you reckon a man who'll do that sort of thing is? I'm some curious to know your opinion.

No man in the world ever attempted to wrong another without being injured in return—some way, somehow, some time. The only weapon or offense that nature seems to recognize is the boomerang.

The DAUGHTER of DAVID KERR

By Harry King Tootle

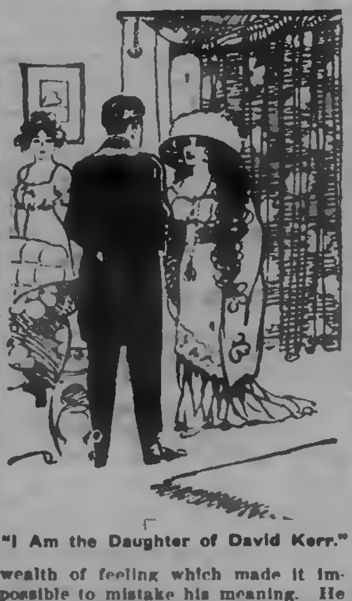
Copyright by A. G. McCLURG & Co., 1912



"I Am the Daughter of David Kerr."

"I'm afraid Belmont will seem mean compared to the places you have lived," suggested Mrs. Gilbert. In the short time she had been with Gloria she had seen enough to make her certain that there were breakers ahead.

"Not at all," answered the girl. Judge Gilbert was talking earnestly with her father, and this gave her a chance to confess privately to Mrs. Gilbert.

"It seems good to me because it is home, and I can do as I please without comment. I mean to live my life to the full, just as do other girls whom I visit. Except when I've been with them, it's been chaperon and school, school and chaperon for so long that I'm honestly glad to get into a house where no one rushes in every few minutes to see if I'm reading a French novel or writing love letters to the chauffeur."

Mrs. Gilbert laughed heartily at the martyrdom Gloria had suffered, and promised that such would not be her lot in Belmont. When Mr. Kerr joined them she went to summon her other guests.

"Judge Gilbert has been telling me, Gloria," Kerr began, "that things was quiet here just at this season. Now California—"

"Telling you!" repeated Gloria. Why did her father need to have any one tell him anything about Belmont? Then wasn't she excuse enough for all the gayety possible?

"Ain't got nothin' against California, have you?" Kerr asked, ignoring her exclamation.

"I don't know." She turned away from him, conscience-stricken at her tone of indecision. "I wanted to come home, yet—"

"Don't you like Locust Lawn, girl?"

"Yes, yes," she answered quickly. "But—everything is so different from what I imagined it would be. Give me a little time to think about the California trip."

At that moment Mrs. Gilbert returned with the guests who for some little time had been entertaining themselves in the drawing-room.

Mrs. Hayes and her husband were first introduced to Gloria. While they exchanged a few pleasantries, Wright, in charge of Judge Gilbert, was meeting David Kerr. It was not until Mrs. Gilbert called him to her to present him to Miss Kerr that the editor of the Belmont News and the daughter of David Kerr came face to face.

To the surprise of the others present Gloria gave a little scream of delight and came forward with both hands outstretched to greet the young man. He no less gave evidence of his pleasure at the meeting. His face lighted up with a smile and the way he grasped both her hands betokened his happiness at seeing her again. If the others could not share their gratification, they could at least share their surprise.

"Joe Wright of all persons!" exclaimed Gloria, shaking his hands heartily, her face radiant with smiles.

"Miss Kerr! You here!" It was all he could say, but he put into it a wealth of feeling which made it impossible to mistake his meaning. He forgot David Kerr, he forgot every one but this girl whom now he met again after so long a time.

"You're the last person I'd expect to find in Belmont."

"But you're not the last person I'd hope to find here," he replied.

Whereupon they both laughed and shook hands again.

Mrs. Gilbert was the first of the others to recover the power of speech. "You know each other!"

"Indeed we do," replied Gloria. "We traveled abroad for a time in the same party. How do you happen to be here?" asked Wright. "Tell me all about it."

"There isn't much to tell. I live here now."

"How funny!"

"I'm not apologizing for it," he laughed.

"I don't mean it that way. Belmont is my home, too. I was born here."

"Here! In Belmont!" He made no effort to conceal his surprise.

"Yes," she said proudly; "I am the daughter of David Kerr."

Had she struck him a blow full in the face she could not more have staggered him. In the joy of meeting her, Wright had forgotten everything but the pleasure of seeing her again and the memories her presence conjured up of what he called their mad old, glad old Paris days when they had been so much together. He had forgotten the sordid present with the fight to make friends for his kind of newspaper, the effort to meet the pay roll, and the continuous struggle against what he knew to be the evil influences of David Kerr. David Kerr, her father! With Gloria's explanation, raised by her pride in her father almost to a boast, all this was brought back to him. He still smiled, but his heart went dead within him. The sun which had shone for him so gloriously only a minute ago was now hidden behind the blackest cloud in the heavens.

Selfish as they wished to be, for a time they were forced to join in the general conversation and satisfy the curiosity of the others concerning previous acquaintanceship.

"When did you and Gloria meet?" Kerr asked the newspaper man.

"First on a steamer going to Europe."

"And then accidentally any number of times on the continent," added Gloria.

"There's no need now of your fearing you will be lonesome, Miss Gloria," was Mrs. Gilbert's comment. "How lucky to find an old friend."

"Yes, indeed," replied Gloria, with such spirit that no one could believe she was merely saying the polite thing. "I command you to come to see me at once, Mr. Wright. I know hardly a soul in Belmont. You see I just came home this morning."

Thus within a quarter of an hour after meeting the boss of Belmont, Wright found himself invited to his home. The circumstances that had brought about the invitation he would have considered out of the range of all reason half an hour before. He knew the game too well not to understand how the easy boss works and all unconsciously Gloria was seeking to further her father's plans.

Through friendship, loyalty and a sense of obligation which one is not permitted to forget, the political leader obtains active co-operation where to deny him would appear base ingratitude. To keep from being placed in such a position was Wright's one aim. Consequently, to Gloria's invitation he merely murmured a polite assent, inwardly resolving to find sufficient excuses to make it impossible for him to be a visitor at Locust Lawn. Yet something within him at the same time was telling him that he must see Gloria often.

As they were now leaving, Dr. and Mrs. Hayes came to say good night to Gloria. Gilbert and Kerr found this the favorable moment to slip out of the library unobserved.

"I've told Mrs. Gilbert how sorry we are we have to be going, because I so wanted to have a little chat with you," began Mrs. Hayes. "I'll give you only a day or two to unpack before I come to call."

"Please don't wait for that to happen," urged Gloria. "I've lived in trunks so long that I'd feel like a motor without gasoline if I should take all my things out and hang them on hooks like civilized people do."

"I wonder if you could be interested in some settlement work I'm doing," continued Mrs. Hayes.

"Don't let her rope you into that, Miss Kerr," protested the doctor.

"Isn't it fashionable?" inquired Gloria cautiously.

"Not fashionable and highly insanitary," was his verdict. "A germ is no respecter of persons. My wife's liable to bring home anything from measles to socialism."

"But think of the poor, unfortunate, ignorant people," pleaded Mrs. Gilbert, who with Mrs. Hayes was interested in a mission established in a poor quarter of the town by the Presbyterian church.

"That's what I tell him," said Mrs. Hayes.

"It isn't our fault, is it?" asked Gloria. To her, settlement work was a sealed book. Slatternly women with troops of dirty, sniveling brats repelled her. Were she ever to develop any philanthropy along these lines, she was sure that the work would be carried on vicariously.

"Of course it isn't our fault," added Dr. Hayes emphatically. "I still say, Rose," turning to his wife, "that I have no sympathy for people who use the bath tub for a coal bin."

"I'll tell you about it some other time," said Mrs. Hayes to Gloria, not despairing of making her a worker.

"I'm afraid you'll find me hard to convert."

AFTER SUFFERING TWO LONG YEARS

Mrs. Aselin Was Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Minneapolis, Minn.—"After my little one was born I was sick with pains in my sides which the doctors said were caused by inflammation. I suffered a great deal every month and grew very thin. I was under the doctor's care for two long years without any benefit. Finally after repeated suggestions to try it we got Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. After taking the third bottle of the Compound I was able to do my housework and today I am strong and healthy again. I will answer letters if anyone wishes to know about my case."—Mrs. JOSEPH ASELIN, 628 Monroe St., N. E., Minneapolis, Minn.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotics or harmful drugs, and today holds the record of being the most successful remedy we know for woman's ills. If you need such a medicine why don't you try it?

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

Lesson IX.—Second Quarter, For May 31, 1914.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Luke xvii, 11-19. Memory Verses, 17-19—Golden Text, Luke xvii, 18—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

Before we consider the grateful Samaritan it will be helpful to look at the Whitsuntide lesson on the revealing spirit in I Cor. ii, 1-10. Whether it be the Old Testament or the New, the great truth stands that "the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God," but what a comfort it is that the believer has received the Spirit of God that he may know the things that are freely given of God. To the natural man who has not been born again these things of God are all foolishness, for only the spiritual man can discern the things of the Spirit (I Cor. ii, 11-14). The whole Bible has been written by the Spirit of God and is forever settled in heaven (II Tim. iii, 16; Ps. cxix, 89), so that it may truly be said to be the Spirit's Bible copyrighted in heaven. He therein tells us of the living and true God, His love for the lost, His great salvation, His coming kingdom and glory. He also tells us of the devil as the great enemy of God and man, the father of lies, the murderer, the god of this world, who will to the last make war with the Lord and the saints, but who will finally be sent to the lake of fire forever.

As to the inability of the wisdom of this world to grasp things spiritual, consider the revelations of God given to the kings of Egypt and Babylon, the utter helplessness of all the wise men of those lands to grapple with them, and the ease with which Joseph and Daniel, men of God filled with the Spirit of God, solved every difficulty. The Spirit is ever ready to convince of sin and lead the sinner to Jesus Christ, the Saviour. Then by His word He gives assurance of salvation, then makes the body of the believer His temple, revealing Christ to him and through him and working in him all the good pleasure of the Lord unless hindered by pride, unbelief or self in some form of working.

No one was ever so filled with and controlled by the Holy Spirit as the Lord Jesus Christ, and in Him the Spirit wrought perfectly and unhindered (Acts x, 38). It was so in some measure with prophets and apostles (II Pet. i, 21; Acts i, 8; ii, 4; iv, 31; v, 32; vi, 8; vii, 55; xiii, 2), and there is nothing we should so earnestly and constantly desire as to be filled with and controlled by the Holy Spirit, remembering that nothing can ever be accomplished for God by the might or power or wisdom of man, but only by the Spirit of God (Zech. iv, 6).

Turning to the regular lesson, we see our Lord on His way to Jerusalem, whither His face was steadfastly set, for the time was drawing near for Him to be received up, or, in other words, to be slain and be raised the third day (Luke ix, 22, 51). Although He and His messengers were sent primarily to the lost sheep of the house of Israel and not to gentiles or Samaritans (Matt. x, 5, 6; xv, 24), for the kingdom was for Israel, and He was Israel's Messiah, yet He was ever ready to bless all, and the time was drawing near when He would be rejected and crucified by the Jews, then the kingdom would be postponed and the gospel given to all the world to gather from thence in this age of "the mystery" his body, the church, to share with Him His kingdom and glory. As these ten lepers stood afar off and cried, "Jesus, Master, have mercy on us," His heart of compassion went out to them, and He sent them to the priests, which implied that their request was granted and the work was done (Luke v, 14; Matt. viii, 4). They evidently so understood it and started on their way, and as they went they were cleansed. One of the ten was so full of joy and gratitude that he at once turned back to thank his healer, and glorifying God with a loud voice fell on his face at Jesus' feet and gave Him thanks. He was a Samaritan, which seems to imply that the rest were Jews. How pathetic seems our Lord's question, "Were there not ten cleansed, but where are the nine?" None to give glory to God save this stranger. Is it so still that He finds gratitude only in one out of ten? How is it with you?

Leprosy was one of the emblems of Israel's national condition before God, as when Moses' hand was made leprous and then healed (Ex. iv, 6, 7) God would teach Moses and Pharaoh that, though Israel was in the sight of Egypt as unclean as a nation of lepers, He could easily cleanse and deliver them. The serpent sign was to teach Moses not to fear to approach the king of Egypt, and the water of the Nile turned to blood that God would humble the pride of Egypt.

How happy this grateful leper must have been to hear the Lord Jesus say to him, "Arise; go thy way; thy faith hath made thee whole." We think of His word to the penitent woman in the house of Simon, the Pharisee, "Thy sins are forgiven; * * * Thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace." Also to the woman who had been twelve years sick and growing worse, "Daughter, be of good comfort; thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace" (Luke vii, 48, 50; viii, 48).

The Scotchman's Souvenir.

Arthur C. Boyce, the member for West Algoma, and his colleague, W. R. Smyth, from East Algoma, are two of the British-born in the House of Commons. Boyce was born in a Yorkshire vicarage, and Smyth first saw the light in Aberdeenshire. Recently in Room 16, the Government headquarters, Boyce was chaffing Smyth respecting his nationality. "You remind me," he said, "of the Englishman, Welshman and Scotchman who returned from a trip to Ireland. They each brought souvenirs, the Englishman a tobacco pouch with 'Present from Ireland' on it, the Welshman had a pewter mug with 'Erin-go-bragh' on it, but the Scotchman had a knife and fork with 'London and Northwestern Railway' on it.

And Smyth, having seen the joke, is now looking for the son of the former Vicar of Wakefield.

Are You Going to Muskoka This Summer?

If so take the 10.20 a.m. fast express from Toronto, daily except Sunday, via Grand Trunk Railway and arrive Muskoka Wharf 1.45 p.m. where direct connections are made with steamers for points on Muskoka Lakes. This train carries Parlor Library Buffet car and first-class coaches and passengers are assured of a comfortable ride along the most interesting route to Muskoka Wharf, which is the original gateway to the far-famed Muskoka Lakes.

The curative odor of balsam and pine, and the preponderance of water area to land surface, together with the high altitude (1000 feet above the sea) render hay fever an impossible condition and perfect immunity from this annoying ailment is assured.

Return connection is made with train leaving Muskoka Wharf at 10.30 a.m. daily except Sunday, arriving Toronto 2.55 p.m.

Tourist tickets at low fares are now on sale to Muskoka Lakes points, good for stop-over and valid to return until December 30th, 1914.

If you are contemplating making a trip ask Grand Trunk Agents for full particulars or write C. E. Horning, District Passenger Agent, Union Station, Toronto, Ont.

Hamel's Rescue In Doubt.

LONDON, May 28.—Neither the officials of the Hendon Aerodrome nor Hamel's father have received any confirmation of the reported rescue of the aviator. A report received from Newcastle last night said a ship signalled to a coast guard the word "Hamel" which was taken to indicate that the missing aviator was aboard the vessel.

In Bohemia last year 353,543 acres of sugar beets were grown.

Mr. Coons of Singer Store, Peterboro, was in town, today (Wednesday) on business.

Mr. Thomson, M.L.A., spent the holiday in town on Monday.

Although the holiday Monday started in with very unfavourable weather, the people of Norwood did not forget to push on the celebration here. In the morning although it was raining people came into town for the day. At 12.30 the Callithumpian parade commenced leaving Roxborough's yard and making a trip through the main streets. The parade consisted of sixteen wagons and vehicles amongst which were those representing the burial of the Norwood Band and also a wagon demonstrating the Norwood fire brigade. The parade proved a grand success and succeeded in making the most stern faces beget a large smile. At 12.30 the Lakefield High School team arrived, had dinner, and at 2.00 o'clock started for the grounds thus drawing the crowd. The weather turned better and sun appeared finishing the remainder of the day in a joyous afternoon and evening. Havelock lacrosse team also arrived and at 2.30 ball was drawn off for lacrosse. Game was played in quarters of twenty minutes each. The Rev. Father Kelly refereed and held the boys down to good clean lacrosse. The Norwood boys succeeded in defeating the visiting team by a score of 9-4. After finishing the lacrosse the Lakefield High School and Norwood High School took the field to play baseball. The batteries for Norwood and Lakefield were respectively, S. Laing and C. Bohan, Blewitt and Knox. Lakefield boys furnished the umpire. During the early stages Lakefield students had the score in their favor but gradually the home boys brought the score up until it stood 10-9 in the seventh innings. During the 8th innings neither teams were able to make any runs and in ninth Lakefield made none while the Norwood students made two making the score of 11-10 in Norwood's favor. The return game will be played a week from Saturday in Lakefield. The Lakefield boys took defeat in a most pleasant manner although they had odds against them. Lunch was served in the armouries by the Daughters of the Empire.

In the evening a concert was given in the town hall under the auspices of the Daughters of the Empire and the Rifle Club.

Before singing God Save the King the Rev. Father Kelly gave a short address in which he thanked the people and all who helped to make Victoria Day celebration here a success.

After the concert there was a short dance which lasted until 2 o'clock.

Kryptok Bifocal Lenses

Kryptok lenses are the most remarkable recent invention in the Optical line. Each lens is a solid, unbroken surface. There is no cementing to cloud the glasses, to offer lodging places for dirt or to disfigure the appearance. The eyesight of youth is reestablished, and to all appearance KRYPTOKS are the same as young folks' glasses, with nothing to distinguish them from the latter except your own pleasant knowledge of their wonderful far-and-near qualities.

We have the exclusive right to sell these lenses for this city and vicinity.

CLOSING ORCHESTRAL RECITAL

A large audience thoroughly enjoyed the closing orchestral recital of the Conservatory of Music Orchestra at that institution last evening. The orchestra under the leadership of Mr. Rupert Gliddon played in a very impressive manner and won rounds of well merited applause for their splendid efforts. The assisting soloists also played in excellent style and deserved all the appreciation they received. The most noted of all menuettes, that from the brain of Paderewski was one of the best pieces in the orchestral score. The musicians displayed excellent interpretative qualities, a blending of tone which was inspiring and perfect execution of the favorite work. Keller Bela's overture, Lustspiel which was the opening number was played in a manner which left no room for criticism, the shading of the string section being finished while the brass and wind sections added to the beauty of the number by their fine work. Unison of attack was also strongly shown to a marked degree. The orchestra closed its program with a few gems from Robin Hood and Reginald DeKoven's ever pleasant compositions were played in the swinging, rousing manner for which they are noted. The cornet solo of Brown October Ale was played in fine style.

Fred Hooper a pupil of Miss Adamson won favor with his violin solo of Il Trovatore, Verdi's classic losing none of its charm in the hands of Mr. Hooper. Miss Lora Logan played Bohm's legende with splendid tonal effect, excellent ideas of shading and technique. Miss Edwina Palmer brought all the beauty of Viotti's Concerto her comamnd over the number being pleasing as was her ability to produce from her violin all that the instrument harbors in tone and sweetness. Miss Palmer and Miss Logan also rendered a violin duo which was very good.

Miss Gwendolin Smith, a pupil of Miss Killmaster created an excellent impression by her work at the piano in Chopin's Waltz in A flat. The inspiring movement of the number was portrayed excellently and in a finished manner while Miss Smith's ability to produce a sweet, soft tone was clearly noticed. Miss Jean Hill, at the piano, played Wagner's "From the Magic Fire Scene" better than would be expected from the player who is still in the hands of a tutor. The number is a very difficult as well as trying one on the artist but Miss Hill was more than equal to the occasion and the volume of tone sweetly produced was admirable. Miss McKee and Miss Gwendolin Smith added much to the effectiveness of the violin soloists by their fine accompaniments.

PETERBORO CHORAL SOCIETY

Editor Review.
Dear Sir:—

Your timely article, "Peterborough Choral Society," brings before the public an essential of musical progress—the business side—rarely discussed.

In the past, many attempts have been made to establish a choral society; but all failed until St. George's Society organized one with a committee to look after the business side of it. How it has succeeded is well known, but much is to be done, and to quote your words, "It has enough talent to assure success, but the business side of such an organization is quite as important as the musical side."

Perhaps the greatest obstacle to the financial success of Judas Maccabaeus was the presentation of "Zephra" immediately preceding it. It was unfortunate that an outsider was allowed to hinder the success of the annual concert of our local society, representing as it did the work of a whole year, or indeed, many years.

All good music and especially Oratorio, has an uplifting influence and should have the support and encouragement of educators and all who are concerned with the moral interests of the city. As you say, "The relation of such a work as Judas Maccabaeus to life should be shown so that people might appreciate it and have their interest thereby thoroughly awakened."

Before we had organized musical societies, students or those who had completed a course in music found no incentive to further effort. Newcomers to the city were often invited to join choirs or musical societies but found themselves expected to occupy back seats, while prominence was given to pupils or others often of meagre talent, for reasons other than musical competence. On this account many amateur musicians stood aloof when their musical qualifications would have enabled them to assist the progress of music. Now that we have two properly organized musical societies and soloists brought from outside for special performances there should be no further difficulty of this kind.

Locally, musical progress is due to help from many sources, but it is through our large organizations such as the Peterborough Choral Society and the Conservatory Orchestra that we are known outside of our own city. Recognition of Peterborough as a growing musical centre is evident in the following press notices: "Peterborough is a growing musical centre, and has of late been launching out upon ambitious ventures. One of the latest of these was the production of 'Judas Maccabaeus' at the Grand Opera House, conducted by Mr. R. J. Devey. The oratorio was accompanied by the Toronto Symphony Quintette and the Peterborough Conservatory Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Rupert Gliddon.

"Dr. Torrington, who conducted personally the grand finale, 'Hallelujah, Amen!' spoke in high praise of the work of the chorus"—Toronto Globe.

The following is from the Drama and Music columns of the Mail and Empire, Toronto.—"The musical life of Peterborough appears to be very active. The St. George's Choral Society of that city recently gave their third annual concert, presenting the oratorio, 'Judas Maccabaeus' under the leadership of Mr. R. J. Devey. After the performance, Dr. Torrington of Toronto, addressed the audience, urging them to continue giving their sympathy and encouragement to oratorio. He declared that they would never regret their support of musical culture."

We are indebted to the Review for its valuable assistance in the encouragement of musical culture.

We feel, Mr. Editor, that your article will be of great assistance to the committees of our local societies in looking after the business side of music.

Yours truly,
PROGRESS.

Denis Scully is Hailed Before Magistrate

"Daniel Scully," announced the Magistrate this morning. "You are charged with being drunk."

"Excuse me, my name is Dennis, not Daniel," remarked the culprit.

"Your name is like the rose, its as sweet as its smell," was the retort of the cadi.

He said his home was in Toronto. He had come here to see his boy who was in the hospital. He had eight children.

"You're like many other Irishmen, you're crawling with them," concluded the Magistrate as he discharged the man, threatening to deal harshly with him on his next appearance.

FOUNTAIN LOVED MRS. WETHERBY

According to Letter he Wrote Before Death

(Lindsay Warder)

The inquest into the death of the late Allan Fountain, of Coboconk, who cut his throat on Monday, May 18th, passing away the following day in the Ross Memorial Hospital, Lindsay, was held Tuesday afternoon before Dr. Blanchard, Coroner, when the following verdict was brought in:

"That the said Allan Fountain came to his death at the Ross Memorial Hospital on Tuesday, May 19th, death being due to shock, nervousness and loss of blood, as a result of wounds inflicted by himself, in the village of Coboconk, on Monday, May 18th, 1914."

In the absence of Foreman D. Sinclair through illness, Mr. Wm. Galbraith was appointed in his stead. During the taking of the evidence the letter which the deceased wrote after cutting his throat, was produced and read. It is as follows:

"But I loved Mrs. Wetherby dearly, and had no intention of ever doing anything wrong after we were married. There was things I said that I never meant about the children, about saying there were too many children for me ever to marry Mrs. Wetherby. I loved the children as I loved my life, but there has been so much said, I have . . . . . and I did not do right in other ways.

"Mother, farewell, if innocent in this, over the death of those childretn of Wetherby's, and so far as the children being burnt I am innocent. I done what I thought best I could do, but I done wrong by ever going up there to stay at nights. I have done wrong in this world. Mother told me not to stay up there at nights and so did Frank Breau. I am sorry I did not take their advice."

SIX CHILDREN ARE TAKEN TO THE SHELTER

Home Conditions not Satisfactory to Children's Aid Society

When Noel Guerin left this city last fall he left behind him, his wife and six children. Whether he has met with misfortune or not is unknown; at any rate he has sent them nothing with which to procure the necessities of life and like all mothers the wife endeavored as best she could to live and have her little ones around her. She took up her residence on Stewart Street in a small building formerly used as a shoe repairing shop but a couple of weeks ago moved to the terrace on Charlotte Street between Aylmer and Lewis.

George Cochrane, agent for the Children's Aid Society became acquainted with the facts of the case and immediately took the necessary steps to have the family cared for. Today accompanied by Detectives Meagher and Newhall, he went to the house and took the inmates to the Shelter.

A Review representative who was present took a look about the house and it was indeed in a dilapidated condition. It was practically bare with only an occasional picture adorning the white walls. In one corner was the children's shoes and stockings and other articles of wearing apparel. Upstairs as far as the scribe could find there was but one bed and to say the least it was not kept perfectly in accordance with sanitary methods.

OBITUARY

THE LATE MRS SAWERS.

There passed away at the home of her brother, Mr. Francis Sanderson, 529 Reid Street, on Wednesday, May 27th, Mrs. John Sawers, after an illness of over four years.

The deceased was born in Smith Township in 1848, her maiden name being Mary Jane Sanderson. The greater part of her life was spent in Peterboro where her endearing disposition won many warm friends. Her long illness was borne with the greatest fortitude and trust in God. "To know her was to love her." The late Mrs. Sawers was a member of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church. The deceased is survived by one sister, Mrs. Joseph McKee of Smith, and four brothers, Michael of Lakefield; Jas. of Davidson, Sask., Francis of Peterboro; Edward of Smith and William J. of Asphodel.

The funeral will leave the house at 2.30 Friday afternoon, service being held at 2 o'clock. Interment will be held at Little Lake Cemetery. Rev. Robt. Pogue will officiate.

JOHN CHARTREN.

William John Chartren, aged 53 years, passed away at Nicholls Hospital at six o'clock this morning after an illness extending over a few weeks. Deceased was born in Port Hope, but had resided here for upwards of twenty-five years. He was employed in the Punch Press Department of the Canadian General Electric Co., for over fifteen years, and he had made a legion of friends. He is survived by a widow, three sons, Arthur, Wilbert and Robert; also three daughters, Laura, Evelyn and Madeline.

C.N.R. BOND GUARANTEE BILL WILL BE INTRODUCED TO-DAY

Hon. Dr. Pugsley's Amendment to Cut Down Stock of Company and Take Option to Purchase is Defeated, But He Returns With Another Proposal.

OTTAWA, May 28. — The resolutions authorising the governor-in-council to guarantee the bonds of the Canadian Northern Railway Co., upon certain conditions, including the grant of 40 per cent. of the capital stock of the company to the Government of Canada, were reported last night from the committee of the whole without amendment. At today's sitting if the report of the committee is concurred in, a bill founded upon the resolutions will be introduced and read a first time.

The Opposition have given notice of a number of amendments which will be debated and voted upon today. Hon. Frank Oliver will urge equalization of rates, and Hon. William Pugsley will ask to have limited the running rights over the Government railways now proposed to be granted to the Canadian Northern.

At yesterday's sitting Mr. Pugsley moved an amendment to section 14 of the resolutions, which had for its object the prevention of all stock watering by the subsidiary companies to be included in the Canadian Northern system.

The resolutions, as presented by the Government, limited the capital stock of the Canadian Northern Railway to $100,000,000, which cannot be increased without the consent of Parliament, but the other companies constituting the Canadian Northern system may increase their capital with the consent of the governor-in-council.

Mr. Pugsley's amendment would forbid any of these companies to increase their capital without the sanction of Parliament, and it received the support of Mr. Bennett (Calgary), Mr. Nickle (Kingston), and Mr. Maclean (South York).

Clause 14 of the resolution, permitting the subsidiary companies to increase their capital stock issues with the consent of the govenor-in-council, was denounced by Sir Wilfrid Laurier as a license to water stock indefinitely and to increase freight rates.

The Prime Minister said that he did not think at all that freight rates depended upon stock and bond issues, but rather upon physical valuations and other factors.

Solicitor-General Meighen thought it immaterial, so far as dividends went, for what amounts the subsidiary companies were capitalized. Their stock was owned by the Canadian Northern and the capital of the Canadian Northern was limited to $100,000,000. The Canadian Northern could only demand rates high enough to meet fixed charges and dividends upon $100,000,000.

Hon. Dr. Pugsley's amendment was defeated upon a rising vote. Messrs. R. B. Bennett, W. F. Nickle and W. F. Maclean supporting the amendment.

At the afternoon sitting Hon. Frank Oliver gave notice of his amendment requiring the Canadian Northern system to file a schedule of rates for Western Canada with the Board of Railway Commissioners within two months after the passage of the act bringing into force the same rates for Western Canada as those effective in Ontario and Quebec, except as for such difference as the company may be able to justify by proving higher cost of operation in the west.

ANIMAL SPIRITS.

Our Vital Functions as They Were Known In Galen's Time.

"Few persons even stop to consider when they speak of 'a man of spirit' that they are unwittingly employing the language of the days of Galen," says the Journal of the American Medical Association. "Yet this is evidently the survival of the old doctrine of spirits. We may believe that Galen had a conception of the nerve trunks as conductors of something—he called it spirits—to and from the brain and spinal cord.

"The natural spirits were that undefined property which gave to blood the capacity of nourishing the tissues of the body. The vital spirits were acquired in the heart, and when at last the blood with its vital spirits went to the brain and experienced a sort of refinement for the last time the animal spirits were separated from it and carried to the body by the nerve trunks."

Such was the idea of the vital functions in the second century. Today, after 1,800 years, we know that there are no "spirits" in our blood or nerves, but we still speak of being in "high spirits" or "low spirits," of being full of "animal spirits," of a "spirited answer" or a "spirited horse."

The Duke and the Artist.

In "Random Recollections" is this story of the Duke of Connaught. The incident happened at Windsor castle. The duke was criticising a water color done by R. Caton Woodville, representing a drummer in the guards:

"Look here, Mr. Woodville," he said, "you have made a mistake in the mounting of the braiding on this drummer's coat; the fringe on the side of the chest ought to run in this direction," indicating the line. "I am certain of it, for as a boy I wore the uniform, but I will show you what I mean," and, turning to his A. D. C., he asked him to have the bugler of the castle guard sent up. The bugler came, and the duke, turning toward him, said, "Now, Mr. Woodville, I will show you what I mean." And then, as he looked critically at the boy's uniform, he exclaimed, "By Jove, Mr. Woodville, you are right, after all!"

CHILE'S HANGING GARDEN.

Wondrous Beauty of Santa Lucia Park, In Santiago.

Santiago, with its [illegible] of population, fifty miles inland from Valparaiso, is the capital of Chile. It lies in a great amphitheater forty miles long and eighteen miles wide and is inclosed by walls of lofty mountains covered white with snow. Outside of Rio de Janeiro, no capital in the world has a finer situation. Standing in the central plain, it looks out on one side over fertile fields, sloping toward the coast range and on the other it looks up to the gigantic Cordillera 19,000 feet above it, furrowed with deep glens and covered with snowy wastes.

There are beautiful drives and parks and pleasure resorts on every hand. The Alameda Avenida Delicias, 600 feet in width, runs the entire length of the city. The finest private houses front on this wide boulevard. They are built in Spanish style with courtyards full of flowers and shrubs. The city has sixty-seven miles of electric car lines. Most of the streets are paved with asphalt. The policemen carry swords. The city has an air of law and order. A beautiful park was given to the city by Senora Isadora Cousina. It is called the Quinta Normal.

But the park of parks in Santiago is Santa Lucia. For striking and picturesque beauty it is scarcely equaled anywhere else in the world. It is a steep and rocky hill rising 500 feet right from the center of the city. The original scanty soil has been added to by skillful gardeners until it has become an exquisite park, lifting its verdurous masses like a hanging garden high above the city. Flowers and creeping vines trail over rocks in wild profusion. Fountains glimmer in the sunshine, marbles gleam against the green. Grottoes invite you to their shade and winding paths allure the traveler to the very summit.

Here, at the top of this green rock, a splendid vista of the city lies at your very feet. You hear the hum of traffic and the buzzing wheels of commerce and out beyond you see a fertile plain, while on the far horizon the mighty summits of the snow capped Andes cut their silhouettes against a sky of blue. Beautiful for situation is Santiago, unique and fortunate in its Santa Lucia park.—Peter McQueen in National Magazine.

Three Atmospheres.

The atmosphere is divided by scientists into three parts. The first extends from sea level to about 10,000 feet high. In this layer are almost all the water vapors or clouds and all the dust. In it all the storms take place. The temperature tends to decrease, but very irregularly. The second layer extends to between six and seven miles high. In it are the "cirrus" clouds, and the temperature decreases uniformly. Man cannot go beyond it.

These two layers together are called the troposphere, because in them all the vertical movements of the air take place. Beyond them is the stratosphere, in which occur any movement of the air in planes parallel to the earth's surface.

Strathcona's Romantic Marriage.

The marriage of Lord Strathcona was a romance. He met the lady when he was twenty-nine and living on the coast of Labrador. She was a widow and had a little son. There was no priest or church within 1,000 miles and the marriage was a simple contract without ceremony. It was for this reason that when the high commissioner became a peer in 1897 a remarriage was held to be necessary and it was solemnized with the full ritual of the Church of England. The Labrador marriage was, however, ratified by special act of parliament.—London Tatler.

Whistler as a Courtier.

Most of the stories of Whistler are rather "waspish," but one recalls a story that shows him in the light rather of a graceful courtier.

It happened that the then Prince of Wales paid a visit to an exhibition of pictures that was held by an art society of which Whistler was the president. Whistler received the prince at the door, and as they entered the gallery his royal highness asked:

"What is the history of your society, Mr. Whistler?"

"Sir," replied the artist with a courtly bow, "its history begins today!"

Noah and the Animals.

Few people will say that Noah took more than two of each kind of animal and fowl into the ark, yet here is the Bible on the subject (Genesis vii, 2): "Of every clean beast thou shalt take to thee by sevens the male and his female and of beasts that are not clean by two—the male and his female;" (Genesis vii, 3) "Of fowls also of the air by sevens—the male and the female to keep seed alive upon the face of the earth."

Cellar Champion.

A seven-year-old boy coming from school one day informed his mother that half his class had been promoted. His mother asked him whether he had been one of the number.

"No," said he, "and I'm glad I'm not, 'cause I'm the smartest one left."—New York Post.

Too Much Mental Tax.

"What is your objection to slang?"

"To be perfectly candid," replied Miss Cayenne, "what I most object to is the constant study required to keep up with it."—Washington Star.

CATTLE MARKETS

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, May 27.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 64 cars, comprising 652 cattle, 1837 hogs, 276 sheep and lambs and 133 calves.

Butchers.

Choice loads of steers sold at $8.30 to $8.50, with a few lots at $8.60, good to choice loads of steers and heifers at $8.15 to $8.30; medium to good at $7.80 to $8.10; common at $7.35 to $7.75, choice cows at $7 to $7.50, good cows at $6.50 to $6.90; medium cows at $5.75 to $6; common cows at $5 to $5.75, canners and cutters at $3.75 to $4.75, bulls at $6.50 to $7.65.

Stockers and Feeders.

Feeders were firm, and one or two lots of short-keep steers sold at $8 to $8.10; choice steers, $7.60 to $7.80; medium steers, $7.25 to $7.40; stockers sold up to $7.10 for eastern production.

Milkers and Springers.

There was a fairly large supply of milkers and springers, the market for which has not been quite as keen lately, but the prices paid were still very high, ranging from $60 to $110 each. The bulk sold from $70 to $90 each.

Veal Calves.

Receipts were moderate, quality common and medium, and prices firm. Common calves at $7 to $7.50; medium at $8 to $8.50 and good at $9 to $9.60; choice calves at $10 to $10.50.

Sheep and Lambs.

Receipts of sheep and lambs were a little larger, but not large enough to reduce prices, which were again steady. Heavy ewes and rams at $5 to $5.50; light ewes at $6.50 to $7.25; yearling lambs at $8.50 to $9; American yearling wethers at $9; spring lambs at $5 to $9 each.

Hogs.

The market for hogs was a little stronger. Selects, fed and watered, sold at $8.35 to $8.40; $8 f.o.b. cars, and $8.60 to $8.65 weighed off cars.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, May 27.—At the Canadian Pacific live stock market the receipts of live stock for the week ending May 23 were 625 cattle, 525 sheep and lambs, 1235 hogs and 2050 calves. The offerings on the market this morning for sale consisted of 600 cattle, 400 sheep and lambs, 770 hogs and 1500 calves.

The trade in cattle was fairly good today, notwithstanding the very warm weather prevailing, and as the supply was not in excess of the requirements the tone of the market was firm with no important change in prices to note. Choice steers sold at $8.25 to $8.75; good at $7.50 to [illegible]; fair at $7 to $7.25; and the lower grades at $5.50 to $6.50. Butchers' cows brought from $5.50 to $7.50, and bulls from $6 to $7.50 per 100 pounds.

The demand for sheep and lambs was quiet.

PETES DIDN'T SEEM TO CARE WHILE ERIE FOUGHT

Schettler Did not Show Anything on the Hurling Heap—In London To-day

As the details of yesterday's reverse at the hands of the invading Yankee forces from Erie, were published in last evening's issue of the Review, we perish right away any thought of prolonging the agony by going into them again. Erie won on a rain soaked field, before a small crowd, in an impressive manner by the score of 3-1, which by the way does not illustrate the real difference yesterday between the Petes and their foe. Erie collected thirteen hit, two of which were doubles. Therefore the old belief that "13" is an unlucky number should be Oslerized right here. In one sense it was unlucky from a local point of view. In the absence of Manager Smith the Erie crew were led by Frank Gygli the elongated first sacker. 'Tis said that absence makes the heart grow fonder. It did yesterday. Just to show Manager Smith that they remembered him during his jaunt for players, the Erieites mussed up Louie Schettler's shoots in haphazard style, as they would remark in the classics. Then again while the victors were doing their share to gather in the spoils the locals were boldly helping to present them with the glory in a very unconcerned manner. In fact several of the locals played as though they were ready for the undertaker. The weather probably had a great deal to do with it but it did not effect the Erie crew.

Schettler who was expected to hold the visitors safe had nothing but a glove. A few of the hits were of the scratchy variety but as a whole they counted. The big problem though is why Erie did not push more than three runs over the plate. The run in the first inning was the result of two passes and Wilcox's apparent indifference to try to grab Harris' poke. There was no mistaking about the run in the fifth. Three bingles tells the story. In the eighth three more bingles added another run. The Erie crowd gathered three hits in the sixth, two being measly ones, but they failed to score.

The locals got their lone run in the fourth on a pass, a sacrifice and Kelly's bingle. They looked dangerout not overly so. The four errors but not overly so. The four errors Peterboro made did not figure to any great extent in the runs grabbed by Erie.

Summary: Two base hits, Gygli, Shaeffer; sacrifice hits, Fox, Shaeffer; stolen bases, Harris, Gorman, Kelly; first base on balls, off Schettler 2, off Brown 4; struck out by Schettler, 3, by Brown 5; hit by pitcher, by Brown (Blount); left on bases, Erie 12, Peterboro 9; double plays, Schettler, to King to Gorman, Brown to Gylgi, Behan to Shaeffer to Gygli. Time of game, 1.45. Umpire Miller.

Blount was robbed of a hit in the seventh when Gygli made a great bare hand stab.

Louie Schettler had an off day. If he comes back against London all will be forgotten.

Kelly shaped up nice behind the pan and the youngster's only weakness seems his inability to block off the runner.

Shaeffer made a great stop of Welsh's slam but aviated the pill to the stand.

King had an off day at short. The sawdust infield hampered his work.

Editorial 435
If you want to know the Baseball scores, the Fans at 435 will give you the information.

On Monday the Petes looked like good muddlers but yesterday the dope was all wrong.

Discovered. The game was called at 2 o'clock. The Petes being heavy eaters had not recovered from the effects of the chicken.

There was much glee in Hamilton last evening. Doc Yates' downcasts beat Rube Deneau's punctured balloons 15-0.

Ottawa beat St. Thomas with Lefty Rogers doing the serving.

London and Knotty Lee's Beavers split a double bill in Fogville.

Three doubles were pulled yesterday. Joe Byrne's attepmt to bunt popped right into the mitt of Mr. Brown.

Brown will not win many games on yesterday's form. If the Petes had showed the pep they have been showing lately we shudder to think of Mr. B's fate.

COMMENT
As You Like It

President Fitzgerald was in Hamilton on Monday and while conversing with the Ambitious City scribes, in their hardwood finished press box, made known his stand regarding umpire baiting. The president stated that the next time McNeil is complained of he will chase the Erie catcher out of the league. President Fitzgerald also stated that umpire baiting must stop at all costs. He did not mention the Peterboro vs. Umpire Walsh fracas of last Friday and it looks as though the last has been heard of it.

"Shag" has decided to shake up the Senator Club. Releases will not form a part of the shake but the batting order will be revised till such time that Dolan and Rogers regain their hitting optic. "Shag" is suffering from a Charley Horse and will rest up.

Frank Smykal the speedy little Ottawa outfielder who was offered to the Peterboro Club via the loan route has been loaned to Fort Wayne. He will play second during the absence of Nespo, who was injured.

For the benefit of a few fans who argued that there was no Federal Federal League last year let it be known that the League had clubs in Indianapolis, Cleveland, St. Louis, Chicago, Kansas City, and Pittsburg. The Covington Club started the season but on June 26 the franchise was transferred to Kansas City. The league's schedule covered dates from May 6 to September 14. Hugh Swarting the Petes' new first sacker was manager of the Covington Club.

Get this from the Hamilton Herald of yesterday.

Joe Byrne, formerly with the Petes was reported in the city yesterday on the still hunt for Manager Yates. Byrne played third base for Davey Rowan's crowd last summer. So far he has not met the local manager.

Did you get that formerly stuff. If our memory serves right Joseph and his brethren defeated Erie here on Tuesday and Joe had a hit and one run.

The locals lost chances to win yesterday's game on several occasions by their inability to bunt. A little schooling along that line would help.

All is not honey with Doc Yates in Hamilton. The fans have commenced to knock which reminds us that one Knotty Lee was also knocked, hissed, cursed and everything else by the Hamilton fans who are a great bunch of blacksmiths.

Doc Reisling has yet to release a player whom he brought to London from the training camp at Marietta.

The Petes in their games have stacked up against the class of the league as three games have been played with Ottawa, six with London and four with Erie. The first two teams are both considered the strongest on the circuit and London caught the culb when it was bad. The next nine games will be tough ones also. London, Toronto and Ottawa will be visited before home coming.

It is rumored that another Golf and County Club is to be started at Peterborough. It is to include all forms of athletics and will no doubt be a very strong organization.

Played a Dual Role.

"Now," said a newly made husband, "I am your captain, and you must let me command you through life."

"You have a dual capacity," replied the former widow, "because you are my captain and my second mate also." —London Telegraph.

Safe Offer.

"Your Scotch friend asked you to have a cigar, but I notice he didn't offer me one."

"Ah, you see he knows I don't smoke."—London Tattler.

STRATHCONA'S FORTUNE.

He Left Nearly Twenty-Eight Millions Including Death Duties.

LONDON, May 28.—The personal property left by the late Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal, former High Commissioner for Canada, amounted to $23,357,910. This was disclosed when probate was granted yesterday.

The precise value of the real estate left by the testator, who died in London January 21, this year, was not made public, but the fact that the duty paid amounted to $4,189,180 indicates that his entire estate, real and personal, had a total value of $27,928,000. Most of his holdings were railway, bank and steel stocks.

The household effects in Lord Strathcona's Grosvenor Square residence have been valued at $130,000, and his pictures at $80,000 more. His lordship's interest in the Hudson Bay Company amounted to $1,240,000, and in the Anglo-Persian syndicate to $380,000. His interest in Baring Brothers is valued at $220,000.

Electrical Inventor Dead.

LONDON, May 28.—The death occurred yesterday of Sir Joseph Wilson Swan, inventor of the first incandescent electric lamp. He was 65 years of age and was born in Sunderland, Eng., and in 1879 succeeded in solving the problem of producing incandescent light and thus making possible the general use of electricity for lighting purposes. He was the inventor of many other electrical devices, including a miner's safety lamp and an electric meter.

LATEST NEWS PARAGRAPHED

Premier Borden says he has made no plans for visiting the west, or anywhere else, this summer.

There is no truth in the report that the Duke of Connaught will become Lord Lieutenant of Ireland on leaving Canada.

Yesterday was the hottest May 27 in the history of the New York Weather Bureau. The mercury reached 91, and two deaths and many prostrations were reported.

Lieut. Charles Becker, his counsel says, will confess to nothing, and there will be no activities in his behalf other than the preparation and furtherance of his appeal.

Wm. Rockefeller insists that he is not physically able to testify before the U. S. Interstate Commerce Commission; that his voice will not permit him to go on the stand.

With ancient rite the coffin containing the body of the late Empress Dowager Haruko of Japan was placed yesterday in a grave at the Imperial mausoleum of Momoyama.

Olaf Singinson and Wilde Larson, Swedes, were killed by an explosion of dynamite at Cedar Rapids, Que. A spark from a steam shovel set fire to a newly-opened box of dynamite.

A severe cold wave spread over Southwestern Europe yesterday. Several inches of snow fell in some places in southeastern France, while heavy rains were reported from other regions.

The reports received by the Post-office Department, indicate that the parcel post service is being very generally patronized, especially in the large centres, and the results are fully up to anticipations. The system is proving profitable.

Expects Lynching Bee.

NEW YORK, May 28.—Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, the British novelist, accompanied by Lady Doyle, arrived at New York yesterday on the White Star liner Olympic. He is on his way to Canada.

Conan Doyle said that England had stood all that it could from the militant suffragettes, and that he anticipated "a wholesale lynching bee."

"The English Government," he said, "follows public opinion, and thus far public opinion has not demanded the entire suppression of the suffragette. But it is on the point of doing so, and when the English mob is thoroughly aroused, it is not a respecter of sex."

Hasn't Cleaned the Slate Yet.

KINGSTON, May 28.—When John Ryan, alias Frank John Reynolds, walked out of penitentiary yesterday after serving 2 1-2 years for securing money from women in Toronto by fraud, he was rearrested by Chief Jarvis of Bowmanville on charges of bigamy, perjury and securing the sum of $3,000 from a young woman he married under false pretences. It is alleged that Ryan had a wife and six children in Toronto when he married a young woman in Bowmanville, and that he then sent money to Toronto to support his family.

Prince Annoyed at Slanders.

LONDON, May 28. — It is stated that H. R. H. Prince Alexander of Teck, Governor-General designate of Canada, is greatly annoyed at despatches published in the New York press, in which it was stated that Queen Mary had paid his debts and demanded his appointment to Canada from Premier Asquith, because it would save her pocket.

No young woman's skirt is ever so tight that she cannot step into an automobile.

SELBORNE IS PACIFIC.

Unionist Nobleman Urges Ulstermen To Avert War.

LONDON, May 28.—Speaking at a mass meeting of Ulster Covenanters at Bath yesterday, Earl Selborne defined his attitude toward Home Rule in a way that will certainly not commend itself to the people or the supporters of Ulster in general:

"It is clearly our duty to prevent civil war, if we can," he said. "If we Unionists are confronted with the dilemma, will you have Home Rule for the moment with civil war or without civil war, our clear duty is to say, 'without civil war,' if without taking any responsibility for the policy, keeping our hands free for the future and sticking to the fundamental principle that the people only can decide. If while doing all these things we can avert war, it is our duty to do so. We will, however, take no kind of responsibility whatever for the policy of Home Rule. We believe the policy bad and this particular bill infamous."

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

A very pretty wedding took place at Havelock on Tuesday, May 26th, when Anna Eleanor, the second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Bryans, was united in marriage to Mr. Ross Frank Covert of Peterboro, the ceremony being performed by Rev. Holdsworth of St. John's Church, Havelock.

The ceremony took place at 11 o'clock at the residence of the bride's parents, Ottawa Street. The bride, who entered the drawing room on the arm of her father, looked beautiful in a gown of white brocaded satin, trimmed with shadow lace and seed pearls and juliet cap, trimmed with orange blossoms and lilies of the valley, and caried a bouquet of roses and lilies of the valley. Her sister, Miss Bertha Bryans, who acted as bridesmaid, was gowned in pale blue brocaded satin with overdress of flowered ninon and carried a bouquet of pink carnations. Dr. H. Allan of Tweed supported the groom, while the wedding march was played by Mrs. (Rev.) Holdsworth.

After the ceremony, the bridal party sat down to a dainty wedding dinner. The bridal party left on the afternoon express for a trip to Toronto and Rochester and other U. S. points.

The groom's gift to the bride was a mission wood piano, to the bridesmaid a necklace set with sapphires and pearls and to the groomsman a pair of gold cuff links. The bride, who is well and favorably known in Havelock, where she has resided since childhood, was the recipient of many handsome wedding gifts, including a substantial cheque, the gift of her father.

BISHOP IS DEAD

Was Great Grandson of Ontario Pioneer

PORTLAND, Ore., May 28. — The Rt. Rev. Charles Scadding, D.D., Anglican Bishop of Oregon, died here early yesterday of pleuro-pneumonia. He broke down while presiding at the diocesan conference several days ago. He was 53 years old.

The ancestors of the late Bishop Scadding settled in York County in 1792. He was a great-grandson of John Scadding, who came to Upper Canada with Lieut.-Governor Simcoe.

Born in 1861, the late prelate graduated at Trinity College, Toronto. He was ordained deacon in 1885 and priest in 1886, in the former year becoming curate of St. John's, Buffalo. He later became assistant to Rev. Dr. Rainsford at St. George's Church, New York, and was successively rector of Christ Church, Middleton, N.Y.; Trinity Church, Toledo, Ohio, and Emmanuel Church, La Grange, Ill. He was consecrated third Bishop of Oregon in 1906.

FEDERATION AT HALL'S BRIDGE

Big Meeting Arranged for Early Part of June

The Hall's Bridge branch of the Protestant Benevolent Federation will hold a big meeting in the early part of June and delegations from Peterboro, Young's Point and Lakefield are expected to be present to help along the work.

Recently, a delegation from the local branch, journeyed to Young's Point to attend a meeting there. A large gathering met in Charlton's Hall and speeches were made by Aldermen W. J. Johnston and G. H. Duncan, also R. J. Winch and Jas. Runnett. These and other addresses made the meeting a splendid success.

The branch at Young's Point is progressing favorably, with the membership increasing at every meeting.

After the addresses, a successful banquet was held, the usual toast list being carried out. The delegation from the city had a very fine time and cannot speak too highly of the Young's Point people as entertainers. All are hoping to have another opportunity of visiting Young's Point in the near future.

All Saints' Choir.

The choir of All Saints' Church will practice in the church tonight at 8 o'clock.

BURNS ACQUITTED

ATLANTA, Ga., May 28. — Judge Hill dismissed the charge of contempt of court brought against Detective W. J. Burns and his assistant, Lehan, who had removed Anna Carter, a colored witness, from the jurisdiction of the court, but later had returned her. Lehan was fined $100 for violating city ordinances governing private detectives. The Carter woman swore he had given her money to swear against the negro the sleuths say committed murder. Five other Burns men will be tried; the local agency has been closed.

Woman Arrested at Epsom.

EPSOM, May 28.—Ada Nice, supposed to be a militant suffragette, was arrested on Epsom Downs yesterday, after she had discharged a pistol loaded with blank cartridges at a policeman. The powder burned through the policeman's trousers and blistered one of his legs. The woman asserted that her husband had handed her the weapon in the morning for use in case she was molested. She indignantly repudiated the suggestion that she was a suffragette. The weapon contained six blank cartridges.

The bright, silvery appearance of the new "SALADA" package is due to the wonderful aluminum wrapping the company are now employing to packet their well-known tea. So close is its texture that it will preserve the freshness of the leaves even better than lead.

PASSENGERS INCLUDED MANY SALVATIONISTS BOUND FOR ENGLAND TO ATTEND CONFERENCE---LAURENCE IRVING AND HIS WIFE ON BOARD---EMPRESS WAS STRUCK AMIDSHIPS---CAPTAIN AMONG THE SAVED.

THREE FINES OF $22.60 FOR ILLEGAL FISHING

Two Men Gave Patrolman $5 to Have the Case Settled

"It is not sporting instinct to catch fish in a net and I am here to enforce the law, and I find from experience that the best enforcement is to make the punishment sufficient to deter," said Magistrate Dumble at this morning's session of Police Court in the case of William Clancy and John McWilliams found guilty of illegal fishing. They were each fined $22.60, to be paid in ten days.

O. De Laplante appeared for the defendants, and claimed that while they had fished with a net they had paid their fine to Jas. Windsor.

Windsor in giving evidence that he was a patrol man in the employ of the Fisheries Department under Mr. Watt, said that he had caught the men fishing with the net. They had given him $5 to have the case settled. The $5 was towards paying the fine.

"Your'e a liar," shouted Clancy, when the witness stated that the five was towards paying the fine.

At the conclusion of the case Clancy raised a holler that he had not been given a hearing and said he could prove he was not guilty.

"You had a counsel," was all the sympathy he got from the court.

Shepard Huggins, a local man, was fined $22.60 for fishing in Square Creek, near Rice Lake.

"I fined a man fifty for fishing there last year," remarked the Magistrate as the court adjourned.

CATERPILLARS ARE GROWING IN FORCE

Once again, a terrible onslaught should be waged on the caterpillar to exterminate its presence from the trees and shrubs of the city. For the past few days the number of caterpillars in evidence, is rather alarming. Especially the residential section of the city is suffering. The officials of the city are urging residents to fight the pest by burning them which is about the most practical relief.

A stroll about the city will bring to view far more caterpillars than last year a month later than this. This is due to the warm weather. The residents are strongly urged to get busy with the oil can and rags.

M. A. BROWNLEE HAD INTENDED TO SAIL ON C.P.R. EMPRESS

A commercial traveller, M. A. Brownlee, Canadian representative for an English firm, who was in this city last week is probably amongst the ones who lost their lives in the Empress disaster early this morning. Brownlee called at the local G.T.R. office and enquired as to the time of sailing of the Empress. His intention being to go to Montreal and take the boat for a business trip to the Old Country.

OTONABEE HAS A SUGGESTION FOR MAYOR

Peterboro, May 2th, 1914.

Editor of The Review,
City.

Dear Sir :—

Residents of Otonabee in the vicinity of the proposed sewage disposal plant think that Mayor Buller should have a bottle of Weston Village Sewage "on his hip" when he meets the Duke on Monday. It possessses so many virtues, according to the Mayor, that His Royal Highness would no doubt appreciate a "schooner" of this beverage in preference to one of "Mum's Extra Dry."

Yours truly,
OTONABEE.

POLICE FORCE KNOW CAPTAIN KENDALL

Captain Kendall of the Empress of Ireland is well known to Detective Newhall of the local police force. Detective Newhall has crossed the Atlantic on the Empress, a number of times and has also met Captain Kendall in other places.

He speaks of the remarkable efficiency always evinced by the crew of the Empress. Captain Kendall was responsible for the detection of Crippen when he was fleeing to Canada.

THERE'LL BE NO PAVING OPERATIONS ON SUNDAY

People Prepared to Give Duke a Royal Welcome but Are not Prepared to Withdraw Allegiance to the "King of Kings" Says Rev. Jas. Rollins

The Review had a conversation today with Rev. Jas. Rollins, Secretary of the local branch of the Lord's Day Alliance in regard to a news article which was headed "Work on Sunday."

"I do not think," said Mr. Rollins, "that any person will take seriously the implication in the Review's article that the local branch of the Lord's Day Alliance is prepared to shut its eyes to an infringement of the Lord's Day Act.

"While it is an amazing thing to find the Review so confident that the people in general are willing to do so, the Paving Co. has known for weeks of the date of the approaching visit of the Duke of Connaught. The people of Peterboro are prepared to give him a royal welcome on Monday but they are not prepared to withdraw their allegiance to the "King of Kings" or to the laws of Canada in order to do so; nor is it necessary.

"The continuance of paving operations on the Lord's Day on account of the visit of H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught would leave a stain upon his visit which would be as distasteful to himself as to the people of Peterboro and I am sure the members of the City Council will not lend their approval to any such arrangement.

"I have no doubt," continued Mr. Rollins, "that even if there were no local branch of the Lord's Day Alliance in Peterboro, it would be quite impossible to carry out any such proposition as has been made. Paving companies come and go but the great body of the people of a city, remain and are anxious to have their city stand for the best things."

Canadian Press Despatch.

Montreal, Que., May. 29.—The C.P.R. liner, Empress of Ireland, sank last night thirty miles off Father Point, after a collision with a collier. The collision took place at 2.30 this morning, and the first announcements of the disaster came from the Marconi station at Father Point, which received word that the Empress was sinking. The C.P.R. liner sent out S.O.S., which were picked up by the Government steamer Eureka and mail tender Earl Grey, which immediately rushed to the rescue of the sinking ship.

Loss Placed at 870.

Montreal, Que.—The number lost on board the Empress of Ireland is now stated to be 870.

Montreal, Que.—The Marconi station at Father Point kept in communication with the Empress for some time, when the wireless messages suddenly ceased. Those on shore at Father Point discerned boats as the day was breaking and a coal steamer which was believed to have been in collision with the Empress, was standing by.

Sank in Ten Minutes.

About 135 passengers and crew were landed at Rimouski. Reports early this morning say the Empress ran into a collier in a fog and sank within ten minutes.

Left Quebec Last Night.

Montreal.—The Empress was commanded by Captain Kendall, the man who became famous by detecting Dr. Crippen fleeing to Canada on the steamer Montfort after murdering his wife. She left Quebec last night with seventy-seven first class, two hundred and six second class and five hundred and four third-class passengers. A very large proportion of all classes were from Ontario and Western Canada. Among them are Laurence Irving and Mrs. Irving, the well known actors, and Sir Henry Seton Kerr, the well known big game sportsman. A large delegation of Salvationists to the Conference in London were aboard. The Marconi operator at Rimouski says the Empress was rammed at one forty-five this morning by the big collier Storstad, of six thousand tons gross, carrying coal from Cape Breton. The collier struck the liner amidships. Capt. Kendall sent out a wireless saying, "Empress of Ireland is stopped by dense fog, struck amidships in vital spot by the collier Storstad."

The Empress listed and was able to get out only a few of her lifeboats. She sank in ten minutes. The Government steamers Eureka and Lady Evelyn were sent to its assistance. Capt. Kendall after floating half an hour on some wreckage was picked up by number three lifeboat. Both wireless operators, the assistant purser, chief engineer, and chief steward were saved. The chief officer and purser are missing.

Passengers Reported Safe.

Montreal.—La Patrie received the following message from Rimouski this morning, "Lady Evelyn and Eureka docked at Rimouski this morning with four hundred passengers. The captains of both report that all passengers were saved in the lifeboats of the Lady Evelyn, Eureka and Empress of Ireland. As soon as the passengers are disembarked, both steamers will leave for the scene of the wreck to pick up passengers."

Arrangements have been made by the C.P.R. with the Allan Line to send survivors to Liverpool on the Alsatian, which arrived at Quebec this morning. The Government signal service reports the Storstadt had 350 survivors on board.

Passengers on the Steamer.

Montreal, Que.—Passengers on the Empress include:

First class—D. A. Darling, London; Miss Miller, St. Catharines; A. E. Mullins, Miss E. Mullins, London; Rev. J. Wallet, London.

Second class—Edward Beale, London; Miss I. Blackhurst, Paris, Ont.; Mrs. F. E. Boynton, St. Thomas; Miss C. Hope, Hamilton; Mr. O. Brown, Kenora; Mrs. S. Burgess, Hamilton; Mrs. Wm. Clarke, Miss Nellie Clarke, Toronto; Mrs. M. Dale and child, Toronto; Mrs. Simmonds, London; Miss Isabel Stage, Toronto; Miss Swindlehurst, Toronto; Miss Alice Voneley, Hamilton; Mrs. H. Yates, Hamilton, Harry Yates, Hamilton; Mrs. Charles Moir, Toronto; J. Patrick, Toronto; W. H. Perry, Peterboro; John Reilly, Hamilton; S. J. Sampson, Guelph.

The names of only a few of the rescued have been received, and these are mostly third class passengers and members of the crew, many of them given without initials. These include: Perkinson, R. Holt, bedroom steward; W. Rowan, steward; Alex. Radley, Coombs, pantryman; Reginald Morland White; Grey, James Williams, assistant steward; E. Foster; A. Elliott, Baker, A. C. Ferguson, S. R. Simon, Nostal, Doeliz, Speddon, Navakata, W. Gaade, chief engineer, S. Sampson, Swan, engineer, Bradwick, sailor, Murphy, Boras, quartermaster, Duckworth, electrician, J. Salio, Sapete, King, Scott, Haes, assistant purser, and one woman, Mrs. Simon. These are all aboard the Eureka.

Toronto:—The story of the Empress of Ireland disaster, which purports to have come from C.P.R. headquarters in Montreal, and which gives the probable loss of life at eight hundred and fifty, says that the Storstadt rammed the Empress in the latter's engine room, which was cut in two and all machinery was immediately put out of commission. The vessel was plunged in darkness and quickly filled with steam. The terrific impact threw passengers out of their berths, and in the darkness and strangeness of their surroundings, few were able to find their way on deck before the steamer went to the bottom. She is reported to have sunk within ten minutes at low tide. This morning the top of the funnels of the sunken steamer could be seen.

She is lying right in the channel and constitutes a menace to navigation. It is thought she may be raised.

OFFICIAL STATEMENT

Sir Thomas Shaughnessy Makes Statement

Ottawa Hears That 1030 Persons are Missing

Montreal.—Sir Thomas Shaughnessy has issued the following statement: The catastrophe, because of the great loss of life is the most serious one in the history of the St. Lawrence route. Owing to the distance of the nearest telegraph or telephone stations from the scene of the wreck, there is unavoidable delay in procuring details, but we expect a report from Captain Kendall in the course of the afternoon.

From the facts as we have them, it would appear that about two o'clock this morning the Empress, while stopped in a dense fog, was rammed on her port side by the Norwegian collier Storstadt in such a manner as to tear the ship from the middle to screw, making the water-tight bulkheads useless.

The vessel settled down in fourteen minutes after the accident and at the time the passengers were in bed. In the interval before the ship went down there was not sufficient time to enable the officers to arouse the passengers and get them into boats, of which there were sufficient to accommodate a very much larger number than all on board.

1030 Are Missing

Ottawa.—A message to the Marine Department from Agent McWilliams at Father Point says that three hundred and thirty-seven persons were saved and taken to Rimouski. This leaves ten hundred and thirty unaccounted for. There may be more besides those on board the Storstadt.

HIS MOTHER WAS ON BOAT

Band Master Peryer's Mother May be Among the Missing

The home of bandmaster Peryer of this city has felt the blow of the hand of fate in connection with the Empress of Ireland disaster. The local bandmaster's mother was a passenger aboard the sunken ship, she having embarked with the Toronto delegation. General anxiety is felt for the safety of the bandmaster's aged mother as dispatches this afternoon stated that 1030 of the passengers and crew of the ship had been unaccounted for. The local members of the army are hoping against hope that the dispatches are placing a more serious light on the affair than it really is, but a statement issued by Sir Thomas Shaughnessey this afternoon in which he characterizes the disaster as the most serious in the history of the company shows that the terrible reports are practically true.

Members of the Army in this city have besieged the Review and C.P.R. office all day as they all have friends aboard the boat but other than that Mrs. Preyer no other persons related to local Army members are aboard.

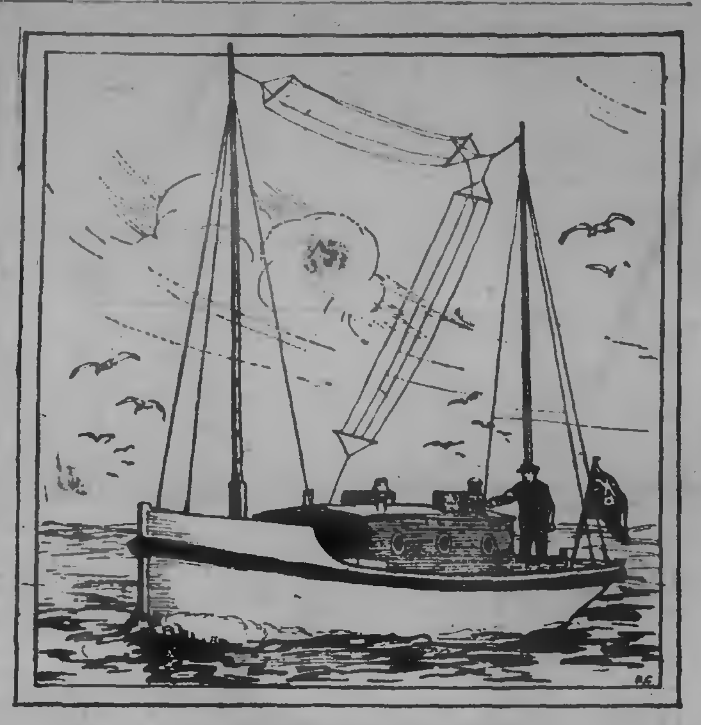
One member of the Army stated that there was a change that the local band and representatives would abandon the trip. Some of the biggest men in the Canadian's branch of the Army have evidently gone down and it is probable that the Canadian delegates will turn back.

"We waved farewell to the Toronto delegation as it passed through here on Tuesday night and little did we think that the farewell would probably be the last," said one member of the Army today as her eyes showed signs of tears.

MR. HATTON ANXIOUS.

Among the list of passengers who sailed on the ill-fated steamer the Empress of Ireland appear the names of Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Tylee of Montreal, cousins of Mr. George Hatton, the well known solicitor of this city. As yet no word has been received regarding the safety of Mr. and Mrs. Tylee and their relatives fear for their safety.

On very sad circumstances connected with this matter is that Mr. and Mrs. Tylee had left for the Old Country at a short notice, called to England by serious illness of a brother who is dying. A niece of the couple passed away a few monts ago.



WIRELESS ON LINES'S LIFEBOAT

This drawing showe one of the new motor boats that have been built for the new liner, the Aquitania. The boat is 30 feet long by 9 feet 6 inches in width and its primary function will be to tow the ordinary lifeboats. It is fitted with wireless apparatus with a range of 100 to 150 miles so as to keep in touch with steamers in cases of emergency. It will be carried on the boat deck.

WILLIAM PERRY ON THE EMPRESS

Left City Few Days Ago for Trip to England

Taking with him every cent he had saved since coming to Canada, William H. Perry a former printer on the Examiner left here a few nights ago and shipped as a second-class passenger on the ill-fated Empress of Ireland which was rammed amidships by the collier Storstadt in the St. Lawrence a few miles from Father Point early this morning. Perry was an Englishman by birth and his mother and sisters resided in Manchester. It was to them he was going, for them he had saved in an economic manner. As an official list of the rescued has not been sent over the wires as yet it is not not known whether Perry perished or not. For several weeks previous to his leaving Perry spoke of his home going enthusiastically and stated that it would be the happiest moment of his life to meet his dear mother and sisters in his home town once more. He told fellow typos that if he could induce his mother and sisters to leave the old home he would bring them to Canada and settle in Peterboro. Perry had no relatives in this city. He booked out by Mr. Skinner, local agent for the C.P.R.

Sid Spooner who has resided in this city for about six months was an early visitor to the C.P.R. offices. He was looking for news concerning Quartermaster Bob Sterling of the Empress of Ireland. Spooner was interviewed by a Review reporter and stated that he had sailed on the ill-fated monarch of the ocean for three years. Previous to that he had served in His Majesty's navy.

The Empress of Ireland is a sister ship to the Empress of Britain. She is a 14,000 ton craft and has accommodation for 434 first-class, 334 second class and 556 third class passengers, making a total of 1324 not including the crew which numbered about 350.

ASKS DAMAGES FOR SLANDER

Geo Vasilopoulos Objects to Being Called a Thief

An action resulting from alleged slanderous statements made about George Vasilopoulos which has been issuance today of a writ by Hall and commenced in the high court by the Hall on behalf of Vasilopoulos promises to create great interest among the Greek element. Louis Yeotes a shoe shine parlor proprietor is the defendant. Vasilopoulos who also conducts a shine eporium claims that in August, 1913, Yeotes told Frank Doukos, that the plaintiff was a thief by using the words "He is a thief." The plaintiff also claims that on May 12 of this year Yeotes addressed him as follows: "You are a thief." Vasilopoulos asks the court for unstated damages.

JOY RIDERS HIT WALL

Car Was Damaged and Occupants Had Narrow Escape

Through losing control of their auto, five unknown joyriders, crashed into a three-foot stone wall at the corner of Douro and Concession Sts., which skirts a ten foot ditch, last evening, about eleven-thirty. No one was injured. The front wheels of the car were badly damaged while the mudguards also suffered from the collision. Three of the occupants were thrown out. Had their car struck six inches farther east they would have gone over the embankment which would have resulted in a serious accident.

They managed to repair the car sufficiently to proceed. There were ladies in the party.

PETERBORO CONTINGENT IN MONTREAL

Big Crowd Said Goodbye to Salvationists

There were some cheers but tears were greatly in the majority last midnight, when the 12.15 C.P.R. train left the depot with the Peterboro contingent of Salvationists, and the big mogul pounded her way on into the night.

Several members of the Songsters' Brigade sang a couple of verses of "We'll never say goodbye in heaven" but the usual enthusiasm which is put into the hymn was missing. In fact the attempt to sing the third verse was a failure.

The contingent numbered nearly fifty persons, including the bandsmen, Adjutant McElhiney, Mrs. Moynes, Mrs. R. Brown, Miss Stadward, Miss Jones, Mr. and Mrs. Tilcock, Mrs. Simpson, Mrs. F. Robinson. Mr. Frank Roszel, son of the late chief of police, also boarded the train for a trip to England. Members of the local corps were very numerous at the station and there were also a number of friends on hand to wish Adjutant McElhiney and the bandsmen, a pleasant trip and a safe return.

Mrs. McElhiney accompanied the party to Montreal.

Earlier in the evening, a farewell concert was given at the Temple.

At Montreal the band will take part in a musical festival and will also attend a banquet at Montreal citadel. They sail Saturday morning at sunrise.

THREE FINES OF $22.60 FOR ILLEGAL FISHING

Two Men Gave Patrolman $5 to Have the Case Settled

"It is not sporting instinct to catch fish in a net and I am here to enforce the law, and I find from experience that the best enforcement is to make the punishment sufficient to deter," said Magistrate Dumble at this morning's session of Police Court in the case of William Clancy and John McWilliams found guilty of illegal fishing. At the conclusion of the case Clancy raised a holler that he had not been given a hearing and said he could prove he was not guilty.

"You had a counsel," was all the sympathy he got from the court.

Shepard Huggins, a local man, was fined $22.60 for fishing in Square Creek, near Rice Lake.

"I fined a man fifty for fishing there last year," remarked the Magistrate as the court adjourned.

The Marconi operator at Rimouski says the Empress was rammed at one forty-five this morning by the big collier Storstad, of six thousand tons gross, carrying coal from Cape Breton. The collier struck the liner amidships. Capt. Kendall sent out a wireless saying, "Empress of Ireland is stopped by dense fog, struck amidships in vital spot by the collier Storstad."

The Empress listed and was able to get out only a few of her lifeboats. She sank in ten minutes. The Government steamers Eureka and Lady Evelyn were sent to its assistance. Capt. Kendall after floating half an hour on some wreckage was picked up by number three lifeboat. Both wireless operators, the assistant purser, chief engineer, and chief steward were saved. The chief officer and purser are missing.

Passengers Reported Safe.

Montreal.—La Patrie received the following message from Rimouski this morning, "Lady Evelyn and Eureka docked at Rimouski this morning with four hundred passengers. The captains of both report that all passengers were saved in the lifeboats of the Lady Evelyn, Eureka and Empress of Ireland. As soon as the passengers are disembarked, both steamers will leave for the scene of the wreck to pick up passengers."

Arrangements have been made by the C.P.R. with the Allan Line to send survivors to Liverpool on the Alsatian, which arrived at Quebec this morning. The Government signal service reports the Storstadt had 350 survivors on board.

Passengers on the Steamer.

Montreal, Que.—Passengers on the Empress include:

First class—D. A. Darling, London; Miss Miller, St. Catharines; A. E. Mullins, Miss E. Mullins, London; Rev. J. Wallet, London.

Second class—Edward Beale, London; Miss I. Blackhurst, Paris, Ont.; Mrs. F. E. Boynton, St. Thomas; Miss C. Hope, Hamilton; Mr. O. Brown, Kenora; Mrs. S. Burgess, Hamilton; Mrs. Wm. Clarke, Miss Nellie Clarke, Toronto; Mrs. M. Dale and child, Toronto; Mrs. Simmonds, London; Miss Isabel Stage, Toronto; Miss Swindlehurst, Toronto; Miss Alice Voneley, Hamilton; Mrs. H. Yates, Hamilton, Harry Yates, Hamilton; Mrs. Charles Moir, Toronto; J. Patrick, Toronto; W. H. Perry, Peterboro; John Reilly, Hamilton; S. J. Sampson, Guelph.

The names of only a few of the rescued have been received, and these are mostly third class passengers and members of the crew, many of them given without initials. These include: Perkinson, R. Holt, bedroom steward; W. Rowan, steward; Alex. Radley, Coombs, pantryman; Reginald Morland White; Grey, James Williams, assistant steward; E. Foster; A. Elliott, Baker, A. C. Ferguson, S. R. Simon, Nostal, Doeliz, Speddon, Navakata, W. Gaade, chief engineer, S. Sampson, Swan, engineer, Bradwick, sailor. Murphy, Boras, quartermaster, Duckworth, electrician, J. Sallo, Sapete, King, Scott, Haes, assistant purser, and one woman, Mrs. Simon. These are all aboard the Eureka.

Toronto:—The story of the Empress of Ireland disaster, which purports to have come from C.P.R. headquarters in Montreal, and which gives the probable loss of life at eight hundred and fifty, says that the Storstadt rammed the Empress in the latter's engine room, which was cut in two and all machinery was immediately put out of commission. The vessel was plunged in darkness and quickly filled with steam. The terrific impact threw passengers out of their berths, and in the darkness and strangeness of their surroundings, few were able to find their way on deck before the steamer went to the bottom. She is reported to have sunk within ten minutes at low tide. This morning the top of the funnels of the sunken steamer could be seen.

She is lying right in the channel and constitutes a menace to navigation. It is thought she may be raised.

OFFICIAL STATEMENT

Sir Thomas Shaughnessy Makes Statement

Ottawa Hears That 1030 Persons are Missing

Montreal.—Sir Thomas Shaughnessy has issued the following statement: The catastrophe, because of the great loss of life is the most serious one in the history of the St. Lawrence route. Owing to the distance of the nearest telegraph or telephone stations from the scene of the wreck, there is unavoidable delay in procuring details, but we expect a report from Captain Kendall in the course of the afternoon.

From the facts as we have them, it would appear that about two o'clock this morning the Empress, while stopped in a dense fog, was rammed on her port side by the Norwegian collier Storstadt in such a manner as to tear the ship from the middle to screw, making the watertight bulkheads useless.

The vessel settled down in fourteen minutes after the accident and at the time the passengers were in bed. In the interval before the ship went down there was not sufficient time to enable the officers to arouse the passengers and get them into boats, of which there were sufficient to accommodate a very much larger number than all on board.

1030 Are Missing

Ottawa.—A message to the Marine Department from Agent McWilliams at Father Point says that three hundred and thirty-seven persons were saved and taken to Rimouski. This leaves ten hundred and thirty unaccounted for. There may be more besides those on board the Storstadt.

HIS MOTHER WAS ON BOAT

Band Master Peryer's Mother May be Among the Missing

The home of bandmaster Peryer of this city has felt the blow of the hand of fate in connection with the Empress of Ireland disaster. The local bandmaster's mother was a passenger aboard the sunken ship, she having embarked with the Toronto delegation. General anxiety is felt for the safety of the bandmaster's aged mother as dispatches this afternoon stated that 1030 of the passengers and crew of the ship had been unaccounted for. The local members of the army are hoping against hope that the dispatches are placing a more serious light on the affair than it really is, but a statement issued by Sir Thomas Shaughnessey this afternoon in which he characterizes the disaster as the most serious in the history of the company shows that the terrible reports are practically true.

Members of the Army in this city have besieged the Review and C.P.R. office all day as they all have friends aboard the boat but other than that Mrs. Preyer no other persons related to local Army members are aboard.

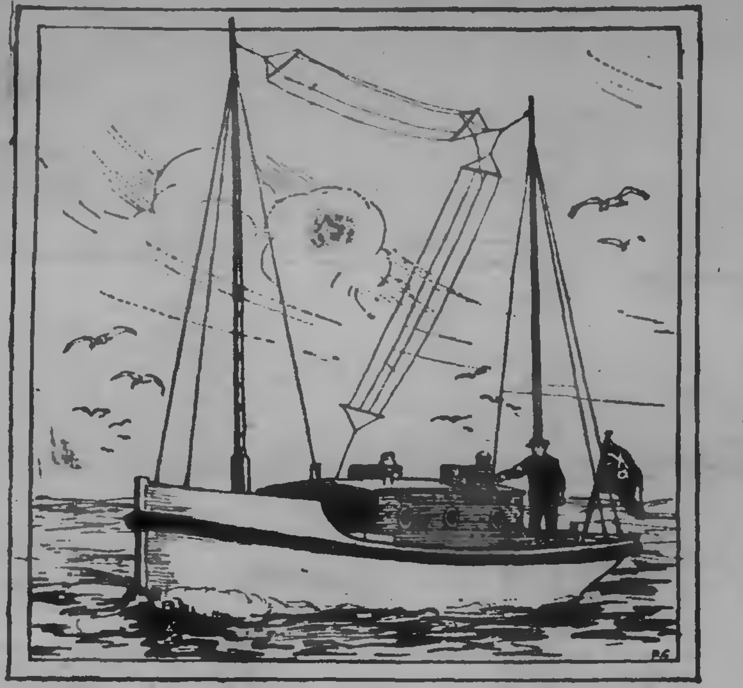
One member of the Army stated that there was a change that the local band and representatives would abandon the trip. Some of the biggest men in the Canadian's branch of the Army have evidently gone down and it is probable that the Canadian delegates will turn back.

"We waved farewell to the Toronto delegation as it passed through here on Tuesday night and little did we think that the farewell would probably be the last," said one member of the Army today as her eyes showed signs of tears.

MR. HATTON ANXIOUS.

Among the list of passengers who sailed on the ill-fated steamer the Empress of Ireland appear the names of Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Tylee of Montreal, cousins of Mr. George Hatton, the well known solicitor of this city. As yet no word has been received regarding the safety of Mr. and Mrs. Tylee and their relatives fear for their safety.

On very sad circumstances connected with this matter is that Mr. and Mrs. Tylee had left for the Old Country at a short notice, called to England by serious illness of a brother who is dying. A piece of the couple passed away a few monts ago.



WIRELESS ON LINES'S LIFEBOAT

This drawing showe one of the new motor boats that have been built for the new liner, the Aquitania. The boat is 30 feet long by 9 feet 6 inches in width and its primary function will be to tow the ordinary lifeboats. It is fitted with wireless apparatus with a range of 100 to 150 miles so as to keep in touch with steamers in cases of emergency. It will be carried on the boat deck.

WILLIAM PERRY ON THE EMPRESS

Left City Few Days Ago for Trip to England

Taking with him every cent he had saved since coming to Canada, William H. Perry a former printer on the Examiner left here a few nights ago and shipped as a second-class passenger on the ill-fated Empress of Ireland which was rammed amidships by the collier Storstadt in the St. Lawrence a few miles from Father Point early this morning. Perry was an Englishman by birth and his mother and sisters resided in Manchester. It was to them he was going, for them he had saved in an economic manner. As an official list of the rescued has not been sent over the wires as yet it is not not known whether Perry perished or not. For several weeks previous to his leaving Perry spoke of his home going enthusiastically and stated that it would be the happiest moment of his life to meet his dear mother and sisters in his home town once more. He told fellow typos that if he could induce his mother and sisters to leave the old home he would bring them to Canada and settle in Peterboro. Perry had no relatives in this city. He booked out by Mr. Skinner, local agent for the C.P.R.

Sid Spooner who has resided in this city for about six months was an early visitor to the C.P.R. offices. He was looking for news concerning Quartermaster Bob Sterling of the Empress of Ireland. Spooner was interviewed by a Review reporter and stated that he had sailed on the ill-fated monarch of the ocean for three years. Previous to that he had served in His Majesty's navy.

The Empress of Ireland is a sister ship to the Empress of Britain. She is a 14,000 ton craft and has accommodation for 434 first-class, 334 second class and 556 third class passengers, making a total of 1324 not including the crew which numbered about 350.

ASKS DAMAGES FOR SLANDER

Geo Vasilopoulos Objects to Being Called a Thief

An action resulting from alleged slanderous statements made about George Vasilopoulos which has been issuance today of a writ by Hall and commenced in the high court by the Hall on behalf of Vasilopoulos promises to create great interest among the Greek element. Louis Yeotes a shoe shine parlor proprietor is the defendant. Vasilopoulos who also conducts a shine eporium claims that in August, 1913, Yeotes told Frank Doukos, that the plaintiff was a thief by using the words "He is a thief." The plaintiff also claims that on May 12 of this year Yeotes addressed him as follows: "You are a thief." Vasilopoulos asks the court for unstated damages.

JOY RIDERS HIT WALL

Car Was Damaged and Occupants Had Narrow Escape

Through losing control of their auto, five unknown joyriders, crashed into a three-foot stone wall at the corner of Douro and Concession Sts., which skirts a ten foot ditch, last evening, about eleven-thirty. No one was injured. The front wheels of the car were badly damaged while the mudguards also suffered from the collision. Three of the occupants were thrown out. Had their car struck six inches farther east they would have gone over the embankment which would have resulted in a serious accident.

They managed to repair the car sufficiently to proceed. There were ladies in the party.

PETERBORO CONTINGENT IN MONTREAL

Big Crowd Said Goodbye to Salvationists

There were some cheers but tears were greatly in the majority last midnight, when the 12.15 C.P.R. train left the depot with the Peterboro contingent of Salvationists, and the big mogul pounded her way on into the night.

Several members of the Songsters' Brigade sang a couple of verses of "We'll never say goodbye in heaven" but the usual enthusiasm which is put into the hymn was missing. In fact the attempt to sing the third verse was a failure.

The contingent numbered nearly fifty persons, including the bandsmen, Adjutant McElhiney, Mrs. Moynes, Mrs. R. Brown, Miss Stadward, Miss Jones, Mr. and Mrs. Tilcock, Mrs. Simpson, Mrs. F. Robinson. Mr. Frank Roszel, son of the late chief of police, also boarded the train for a trip to England. Members of the local corps were very numerous at the station and there were also a number of friends on hand to wish Adjutant McElhiney and the bandsmen, a pleasant trip and a safe return.

Mrs. McElhiney accompanied the party to Montreal.

Earlier in the evening, a farewell concert was given at the Temple.

At Montreal the band will take part in a musical festival and will also attend a banquet at Montreal citadal. They sail Saturday morning at sunrise.

Quiet Desired.

Wife—Do you love me still, dear?
Hubby—When I'm trying to read the paper I do.

DO WE PROFIT FROM HISTORY?

CANADA is weathering a railway crisis. The financial condition of the C.N.R., the calls of the Grand Trunk Pacific on the Dominion Treasury, the recent fall in the price of C.P.R. stock, are witnesses of that fact. Concomitant with these are other facts, such as the financial stringency, the depression in trade and the sudden flop in real estate booms.. A question that a thoughtful person naturally asks, and which is doubtless in the back of the minds of many people is, why should there be such a financial condition as these facts indicate? Have we experienced similar conditions or similar crises before, and if so, have we profited by that experience? Have we allowed our optimism to run away with ourselves to the undoing of Canadian credit?

Speaking before the Royal Society in Montreal on the 27th inst., Dr. Adam Shortt gave a striking address on Canadian Railway problems, a good report of which appears in the Montreal Journal of Commerce. Dr. Shortt went into the history of railway problems and illustrated their influence on prices and financial conditions generally. Dr. Shortt says that the present situation is not a new experience and that some of the most characteristic features of our modern economic and social life are found in embyro sixty years ago. There are differences, of course, differences which tend to make the present depression less severe, but the causes of them in the two periods appear to have very many things in common.

The first railroad policy was worked out by Mr. (afterwards Sir) Francis Hincks, and embodied in an act of 1849, which contemplated assistance from the British Government for the frequently discussed project of an Intercolonial Railway. Previous to 1847, there was in Canada but one short railway line of fifteen miles connecting La Prairie, opposite Montreal with St. John on the Richelieu and being part of the main line between Montreal and New York. Prior to the introduction of the Government policy less than fifty miles of railroad had been completed in the country. Dr. Shortt said in the course of his address:

> "The optimism of the country with reference to the new railway projects which immediately sprang into existence to take advantage of the Government assistance, was strikingly manifested in the faith of both the Government and the public in the ability of these early railroads, not only to pay heavy interests on their bonds, and a generous dividend on their capital stock, but to afford a substantial annual contribution towards a sinking fund to redeem their bonded indebtedness."

In accordance with the new conditions of 1851, a noted English contracting firm was to undertake construction and financing of the Grand Trunk line. The province was to guarantee £3,000 or $15,000 per mile, on the cost of construction. In April, 1853, the Grand Trunk Railway issued its prospectus, which was a work of art, anticipating profits of 11½ per cent. on the capital stock, and having the Government as a partner, together with many leading men in politics and finance. The Consolidated Municipal Loan Fund was established in 1852 to assist municipalities in building small lines as feeders to the Trunk lines, and, besides the Grand Trunk, there were the Great Western Railway and the Northern Railway in course of construction.

The period was one of exceptional prosperity. Between 1852 and 1860 the Government had spent over $11,500,000 on canals and Mr. T. A. Galt, the Finance Minister, estimated in 1860 that upwards of $100,000,000 had been expended on railroads between 1849 and 1859. This phenomenal expenditure for railroad development brought with it a period of rising prices. Thus, beef rose from 6½ and 8 cents to 10 and 14 cents; hay rose from $9 and $12 a ton to $18 and $22. The increasing demand for food products raised prices in all lines. Living became dearer and workers demanded higher wages. Higher wages brought strikes and financial embarrassment to contractors, who had not anticipated increases in wages. Continuing, Dr. Shortt said:

> "The culmination of high prices in Canada was reached during the winter of 1855-56. . . . At the same time, it is quite obvious, from the general condition of the country, that the rapidly increasing demand of the cities and the unusual diversion of labour to occupations which are not immediately productive of any supplies to meet current needs, chiefly accounted for the situation. The produce of the country was not less, but greater than formerly, yet it had not been able to keep pace with the rapidly increasing demand."

With these developments in railroads came also real estate booms and the development of town sites. In the older cities lots changed rapidly, at increased prices. New towns were established, and their lots sold, which have since become peaceful country side.

In 1857 the tide changed. By that year Canada had constructed practically 2,000 miles of railway which cost nearly $100,000,000. Then it was realized that the profits so confidently anticipated would not be forthcoming. Worse than that, many borrowers were not able to meet their bonded indebtedness. Thus, the city of Hamilton, finding that they would have to place a tax on the people of fifty cents on the dollar, to meet their obligations, told the British investors who had lent the city money that the bond holders would have to wait. The result of all this fever of prosperity, of soaring real estate values, of exceptional investment in railroads, both good and bad, was that the Government had to come to the aid of the borrowers. That meant that the Canadian Government's credit fell in the British market, so much so that they found it difficult in 1866 to raise more than half of a loan, even when offering 8 per cent. interest. Two important banks in Canada failed as a result of the depreciation of securities, and British financial agents frankly stated that the money Canada wanted and badly needed was not forthcoming as a result of the disastrous effect on Canadian credit, and of the experience of British investors. When Canada could not pay the British bond holders their interest, British capitalists refused to invest in Canada. It required two generations to allay the feeling of distrust of Canadian credit which Britain acquired at this time. About fifteen years ago British investors began to recover confidence in Canada, "with the result that we have recently experienced the first real period of national prosperity, of great railroad construction, city building, real estate speculation, high wages high profits and high prices and excessive imports."

It seems that human nature displays about the same weaknesses to-day as in the sixties. Optimism has made us run away with ourselves. Competition has set an ever increasing pace, which brings on periods of depression. However, there are other things that tend to make the depression lighter now than it was half a century ago. The wealth of the country is larger, its borrowing powers are stronger, its productive capacity greater, than they were in the fifties, all of which have been of great assistance at the present time in meeting our obligations. Moreover, our banking system is conservative and tends to prevent too much investment. Nevertheless, it seems that Canada as a whole has not profited from the experiences of fifty years ago as much as she should. Had the people looked back to their ancestors a little more, perhaps many of the worries of the people of to-day and of posterity, would be non-existent. Canadians need to be thankful that they are recovering themselves as well as they are.

ROOSEVELT'S RIVER.

IT NOW TRANSPIRES that Colonel Roosevelt is a victim of joking South American natives so thinks Mr. Noblett, who spent six years as a surveyor in the country explored by Col. Roosevelt and his party. "The river of which Col. Roosevelt speaks is more than likely an outlet for the rubber plantations, and as such is travelled weekly by the natives, although I agree with Col. Roosevelt that it never bore a name," said Mr. Noblett. "But there are hundreds of other rivers in Brazil that are unnamed and it would be a difficult matter to find a new river in the interior. I ran a preliminary survey for the Brazilian and Bolivian Government through the country travelled by Col. Roosevelt. There also is a railroad surveyed through this section which is to run from Mawrado Falls to Astrilla and thence to Santa Cruz, for it will connect with the Argentine railroad. So, you see, it would be rather difficult for Col. Roosevelt to find a new waterway of the size he speaks of in this country. I read with much interest the charges made by Landor. He knows what he is talking about. I met him coming down the river as I was going up some years ago, and he knows the country. The Brazilian natives are the greatest fakirs in the world and I think they have indulged in a joke at the Colonel's expense."

PEANUT CRITICISM.

THE BRANTFORD EXPOSITOR notes a decrease in Canada's total trade and blames the Conservative Goverment for it. Such puerile criticism is on a par with that which blames the Government for unfavourable weather, spots on the sun, the war in Mexico, or depredations of the potato bug. If the Government is to be blamed for a decrease, our Liberal friend should have praised Borden rule with unmitigated zeal in 1912 for the new high water mark in trade—that is, to be consistent. But consistency, being a jewel, is scarce.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

OFFICIAL FIGURES show that there were thirty-two deaths from vaccination in Prussia in 1912. These were cases where the vaccine "took," in a double sense—Otawa Citizen. Does the Ottawa scribe intend to insinuate that legalized medical experimentation on a helpless public is not a benefit to humanity?

A Claim Staked Out Rather Late.

Montreal Mail.

"It is time for Toronto to put forward its claim as the summer capital of Canada." Toronto Star.

Yes; that's about the only thing Toronto hasn't claimed up to date.

Fishing on Sunday.

New Hazelton, B.C., Omineca Herald.

A number of local amateur anglers went fishing last Sunday and met with the usual luck—it rained most of the day, the fish did not bite, and one of the horses refused to pull up hill and also displayed a particular fancy for sitting in mud puddles. "We had a lovely time?"

Out of Office Another Tune.

Ottawa Journal.

Time sometimes works strange changes. Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann were "eminent financiers," "kings of industry" and "nation builders" when they obtained $35,000,000 from the Liberal Government a few years ago. Now they appear to be "unscrupulous jugglers of the people's money," "shameless plunderers of the country," and—oh, well, we can't just recall all they've become lately!

Assessment for Good Roads.

The Square Deal, Toronto.

One of the least conspicuous but possibly, in its ultimate results, the most important of the recommendations which the Ontario Highways Commission have made to the provincial government is that for a more equitable basis of township assessments. To secure any degree of uniformity in township assessments will necessarily require the adoption of some standardized system for arriving at a judgment of land values. When this is done, it will undoubtedly serve to inform the people as to the amount and nature of the land values of the various communities, and it will also inevitably result in a heavier share of the tax burden borne by land values.

PLAIN SPEAKING

By Walt Mason

I used to say just what I thought, on every mortal theme, and life was hectic then and hot, and every day a scream. I tried to show I had no fears of any human foes; and people often pulled my ears, or else they punched my nose. But I was not dismayed, thereat, nor humbled yet, by heck! And people often jammed my hat clear down around my neck. My head was bloody but unbowed, as said some martial toff, and every time I met a crowd, they'd kick my coattails off. "A soul undaunted still I have," I often would declaim; and then I'd buy a quart of salve to spread upon my frame. In time one wearies of such strife, however bold his soul, and so, to gain a peaceful life, I canned my rigmarole. Instead of shooting off my bile at every time and place, I bought a large elastic smile, and wore it on my face. And though I still had burning thoughts, I kept the blamed things down, and no one heard the caustic shots for which I'd won renown. And now all day I dance and sing, and people like me much; my head's no longer in a sling. I do not need a crutch.

Birthdays of Note

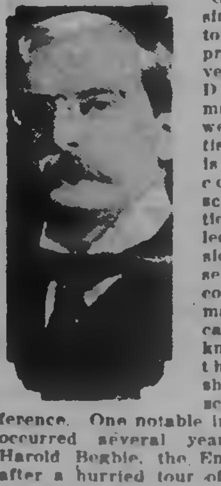
FRIDAY, MAY TWENTY-NINTH



Principal William Peterson of McGill University is fifty-eight years of age to-day. He has been head of "Old McGill" since 1895, prior to which he was principal of University College, Dundee, for many years. A well-trained Scottish student, he is to-day an accomplished scholar with particular knowledge of the classics. He is reserved, as becomes such a man, but on occasion has been known to break through his shell of calm, scholastic indifference. One notable instance of this occurred several years ago when Harold Begbie, the English novelist, after a hurried tour of Canada, published some severe criticisms on the crudity of the country, its materialism and the lack of artistic and literary culture. His remarks aroused the Principal, who broke a lance in the defence of his adopted country. After pointing out the handicaps under which art and literature labored in a new country, he added with biting effect, "One must remember that it took England three centuries after Shakespeare to produce a Harold Begbie."

Also born to-day:—

His Honor Judge Harding, Lindsay, born Wentworth County, Ont., 1840.

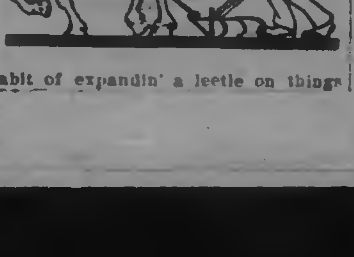
THE CHEERFUL WORKER

SY HUBBARD says he knowed a a man down West county way who was so blamed cheerful when he was workin' that most any hired man in the country side was willin' to work fer him fer nothin', jest to be in his company; Sy said he couldn't work a team at all 'cause the hosses kept turnin' their heads to smile back at him and tramped the crop under foot sumthin' fearful.

Coarse we all know that Sy has a habit of expandin' a leetle on things and I'm not believin' all he said, nevertheless I wanter say that I do believe in keepin' cheerful when we're workin'. Do hosses like to hear the plow-boy whistle? You bet they do. They fairly prance along to his warble and the big patch of new-turned sod at the end of the day shows to what extent good work hinges on cheerfulness.



But the man who restricts his joy riding to street cars doesn't have to worry about punctures.

"Then I'll appeal to Mr. Wright to help me."

"I have no influence with her," laughed Wright.

"Not since you ran away from us in Paris," pouted Gloria.

Dr. Hayes and his wife left the library convoyed by Mrs. Gilbert.

For the first time that evening Gloria and Wright found no one to interrupt their conversation.

He was standing in front of the grate, his admiration for the girl shining honestly forth from his eyes as he watched her say the last good-byes. When the others had gone, she turned to Wright with a smile. Walking across the room to him she held out her hand, and said simply:

"You don't know how glad I am to find you here."

"Are you?" he replied, retaining her hand while he spoke. "Since that's the case I wouldn't care to be anywhere else in the world."

Then they sat down to talk of other days.

CHAPTER V.

There was so much to be said that Wright and the girl were at a loss to know where to begin now that they had an opportunity to talk without interruption. With Gloria there was an undercurrent of unrest caused by the fact that she feared he had carelessly broken the promise made on the Rhine to meet her again in Paris. She had waited and he had not come.

Wright was no less interested in what they were about to say. In the first place, after a long absence, he was again with the girl whom he had made it a point to meet at various places in Europe. To add confusion to their friendship, which he had highly prized, had just come the astounding revelation that she was David Kerr's daughter. How could he be a friend of the daughter and an enemy of the father? Then, too, what did she know of her father's methods, and of his own attitude toward the boss of Belmont? And if she knew, what did she think? These things made conversation rather an exhausting mental exercise.

"Well?" Gloria smiled, inviting him to begin the story of all that had happened since they had shaken hands and parted, he to go to London and she back to Paris where she was to see him later but where disappointment awaited her.

"Well," he answered. He wanted her to begin, and thus give him the cue to her line of thought.

"This isn't much like Paris."

"You're here."

"Yes," she laughed, "and you're here, too. That's why it isn't like Paris when I saw it last."

"At any rate, I'm glad we're both here." He was anxious to have her interpret the present.

"For me it is the first time in twelve years."

This came as a glad surprise to Wright. Then she cannot know much, he thought. Her remark emboldened him to say:

"Didn't you tell me your father was a real estate operator?"

"Yes. Didn't you know that?"

"I had almost forgotten. You see, I am practically a stranger here. You and I are alike in that respect, if you have not been here for a dozen years."

"Oh, I wouldn't say that," she replied quickly. "My father knows everybody and everybody knows father. I shall know every one in a week."

"Yes, that's true," he said cautiously.

"How long have you been in Belmont?" asked Gloria, seeking to satisfy her own curiosity now that she had told him something about herself.

"Only a month or so."

"I think it's the queerest thing in the world that we should meet here of all places. What are you doing here?"

And then Wright lied. He did not have time to consider what might be the ethics of the case. He listened to his heart, which may have made him a traitor to himself, and answered promptly:

"I've been doing some magazine writing and an occasional bit of newspaper and similar work."

Had he been asked he could not have explained why he had not replied just as promptly that he was the owner of the Belmont News. What the real reason was he could not even explain to himself. Earlier in the evening he had talked glibly of newspaper and its duty, and here an hour later he was denying his own under the fire of a pair of laughing eyes.

Gloria, whose ideas of business were as vague as her notions of politics or esoteric Buddhism, accepted his explanation as adequate; especially since she recalled that when in Europe he had been writing some magazine articles about the tariff. Since she never thought about the matter at all she never thought it strange that Belmont should be the place for such labors.

"Have you ever been to Locust Lawn?" was her next question.

"I have that pleasure in store for me."

This pleased her. Even before he came there were many little things she could do to make the house appear to better advantage. Although he had not yet made explanation of his failure to come to Paris, she found herself anxious to have him once more on the old footing of intimate friendship.

"Are you the same as in the mad old, glad old Paris days?" he asked.

She parried the question with another.

"Are you?"

"In some respects—only more so."

"That's a riddle. I hate riddles." As he made no reply to this, she went on after the pause of which he had not taken advantage. "I hope we meet accidentally as often as you met our party abroad."

"Was it accident?" he made bold to ask.

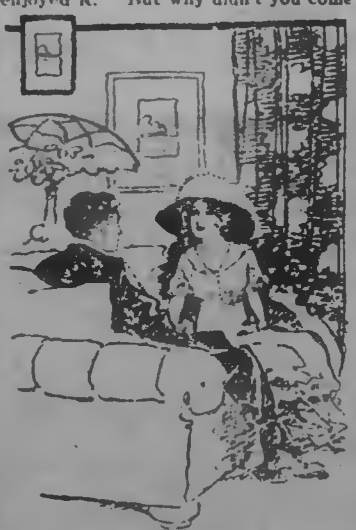
"Wasn't it? You pretended it was." Then the mischievous little spirit that ruled her tongue forced her to say, "I don't blame you; I think Annabel Hitchcock is a beautiful girl. We all know you were crazy about her."

"Was I?" Rising inflection.

"Weren't you?" Also rising inflection.

"I'll admit I followed your party," he conceded.

"Now we're getting at the truth of the matter," she replied triumphantly. She felt she was teasing him, and she enjoyed it. "But why didn't you come on to Paris as you promised us? I'd like to know why we suddenly lost you. Was it another girl even prettier than Annabel?"



"I Had Hoped to Meet You in Paris Again."

He did not join her when she laughed at the picture she had painted. All the light joyousness, the first which had been his since he had come to Belmont, died out of his face as he answered:

"After the Rhine I had hoped to meet you in Paris again. I looked forward to it as the beginning of another happy time. And then, in London, I received a cable—my mother was dying."

"No," protested the girl, her eyes wide with pity.

"I had just time to catch the express for Liverpool that would put me aboard a liner an hour before she sailed. Miss Kerr, I know I thought of Paris, but things all seemed blurred to me, and so the message I had planned to you—not to Miss Hitchcock—was never sent."

"My poor friend."

"I reached America too late."

"I'm so sorry," she sighed.

He had told the whole story. There was nothing more to say.

Both sat gazing into the [illegible] busy with the thoughts of life and death. At last Gloria said quietly with no more movement than if her thoughts had of themselves become vocal:

"Tell me of your mother. I never knew my mother, and so I envy you. You loved her?"

"I loved her," he began. Of his own affairs he seldom spoke, yet here was one who by her very presence made him glad to tell his story, and glad that it was a story he could tell with pride. "Son never loved mother more. And never did a son owe a mother more than I owed mine. I never knew my father. He was a good man, but not provident. When he died mother found she had to support herself and me, an only child. O Miss Kerr, if you knew the bitterness of that struggle as I know it your heart would ache, too, at thought of it."

He paused, but something clutched at Gloria's throat. She could not speak.

"If mother could have a fault, it was her pride of me. I suppose when all the things she had planned for herself came to naught at my father's death she centered everything on me. It wasn't right, of course, because I wasn't worth it, but I tried, always tried to be worthy of that pride. And when she came to die—she wrote—"

He couldn't go on, and Gloria, respecting his grief, was silent, too.

"I'm so glad she lived to see it all come true," Gloria said finally in a low tone. "It makes me think of what sacrifices my father has made for me. Just because he loved me and wanted me to have everything, he has given up what joy I might have been to him. Your story has taught me what I owe to him."

At this a sudden pain shot through the man's heart. It made him pledge himself before heaven to protect her from the truth.

"My mother died when I was a baby, just as your father did," she explained wistfully. "And, as I told you, I envy you your mother. I wish you had written me. I could have at least sent my sympathy."

Now Gloria understood. All that year her thoughts had presented him other than in the true light.

"I wrote to you," he said gravely, "as soon as I wrote to anyone. I didn't know your address, and ventured letters at Brown, Shipley's in London, and the American Express company in Paris. I had heard you speak of both places, I thought. Both letters came back."

"Give them to me. I want to keep them. We left Paris before you wrote, and hurried to Japan. Our mail was sent in care of Cook's. What did you do—afterward?"

"I took a long rest. There was not a relative to share my sorrow with me. Now that I've come down out of the mountains and taken stock of life I find I haven't a soul in the world—"

"Don't say that, Joe." She felt irresistably drawn to him and put forth her hand and laid it on his sympathetically. He turned his own and let hers nestle within it.

"You're still the same Gloria."

"A year isn't so long a time."

And so they sat, with never a word to say, just that hand clasp of silent sympathy as they gazed into the fire.

CHAPTER VI.

In the drawing-room, Kerr and Gilbert were just beginning a conversation which had for its theme the new turn affairs had taken, when Dr. Hayes passed through the hall on his way out with his wife. Sam Hayes was a member of the ring's inner shrine, and when the opportunity arose for what was termed a quick clean-up he was always a member of the syndicate. Therefore, the die having been cast, the judge called him in and announced the determination to push the franchise, a deal with which the coroner was already familiar. Far more than for any other reason Kerr was always willing to include him becuse his Belmont connections were so strong that he really lent an air of respectability to any undertaking.

"We are going to put a line to the stock yards down Maple avenue, Sam," began the attorney.

"So it's settled, is it?"

"Yes. You remember that vacant tract beyond Benton Park? The one that the Belden Brothers are thinking of cutting up for a residence addition? Well, you can't build a house in a mile of it when the road's through there, but it'll be worth a great deal more for factory sites.

"You'll have railroad connections, see?" explained Kerr.

"What's doing?" asked Sam, always keen for a dollar.

"Get an option on it," continued Gilbert, "and we'll cash in big."

"How long an option?"

The attorney looked at Kerr.

"Sixty days," said the latter.

"In that time we can ram the franchise through the council, and when that's done any bank'll lend us the money to take over the property."

Hayes went out to rejoin his wife, after promising to take the matter up in the morning.

Gilbert was just on the point of beginning a discussion of Gloria's future when a reporter from the Banner was announced.

"I'll come out to see him," said the lawyer, rising.

"No," objected Kerr, "have him in. I want to see him, too."

So Mr. James Winthrow, the young political reporter for the Belmont Banner, was admitted.

Winthrow, like the usual run of star reporters in a town the size of Belmont, was not only a shrewd young American, but he was also well aware of his great shrewdness. He had made as many political prognostications as any young man in the country, and they were quite as misleading in the main as were any of the others. Being on the machine paper and a loyal reporter, it followed as of course that he was a loyal machine man. Old Jerry Winthrow, the editor, was a distant relative, but friendly enough and interested enough in the youth to explain to him some of the turnings of the political wheels.

When Winthrow saw Kerr closeted with his legal adviser he could not suppress a whistle of surprise.

"Evening, judge. Good evening, Mr Kerr."

"How are you, Jim?" said Gilbert. The boss merely nodded an acknowledgement of the greeting. "What can I do for you?"

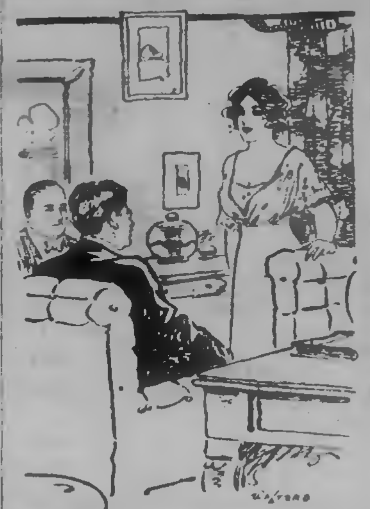
"Some stock-yard terminal rumors in the air, judge; just rumors, and I can't find out a thing."

"I haven't heard a thing about it," the lawyer assured him. Then to Kerr, "Have you?"

"Not a word," answered the boss.

"Where did you get it?" queried Gilbert.

"Floating 'round town. I met Mr. Kendall just now going to the station, but he wouldn't talk. I know that the surveyors have been out



"Make the Invitation for a Month."

When Mr. Kendall said he'd been here to dinner, Bilby, he's our city editor, told me to see you."

Gilbert turned to Kerr. The leader was a man of few words. He disposed of the matter under discussion with one sentence.

"Tell Bilby, Dave Kerr said not to print a line; he'll understand."

That was all. It was an order, and the reporter accepted it as such. Things in Belmont were so well regulated that there was no danger from any source which would cause Kerr to think twice before sending his order to the city editor of the Banner by the reporter of that paper.

As Winthrow rose to depart, Kerr asked: "You have anything to do with the society columns?"

"Occasionally stumble on a story."

"Tomorrow put in that Miss Gloria Kerr has returned from a trip around the world."

Winthrow put it down, and then asked with pencil poised: "Is she at Locust Lawn?"

"Yes," said Kerr.

To be Continued.

Good Advice.

Don't live beyond your income, no matter how small it is.

Don't live up to your income. Save at least 10 per cent of it every month and if possible 40 per cent.

Don't let money lie idle. It is the fractions that count. Put every bit of surplus in a savings bank quickly, and every time $100 accumulates invest it.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

If you don't want adverse criticism don't put yourself in the way of receiving it, for that sort of thing is neither timid nor shrinking.

It might seem reasonable to suppose that the people who point out your duty to you are the ones to help you to do it, but that's mere supposition.

And it sometimes happens that the things you did not say are more to be regretted than the things you did say.

—

The impossible happens occasionally, and then everybody murmurs "Of course."

Those people who really don't mind are pretty apt to be those who can't.

Be patient. It may not be effective, but it at least is not so expensive as some other things might be.

Take a Lesson.

No odds how modest or forlorn
  May be a fellow creature
He can to those who will observe
  Be something of a teacher;
Yes, even from a humble mule,
  The haw mule or the gee one,
A hint of conduct may be learned
  And that is not to be one.

Not by examples that are set,
  Marked out for one to follow,
May one perfection's goal attain;
  The end is often hollow,
But seeing what one may avoid
  And taking notice ample
Produces more concrete results
  Than following the sample.

So when you see a gentleman
  Bombastic, loud and silly
Who makes a riot of the night
  That should be calm and stilly,
You know without a book or chart,
  Without directions printed
That there are things you should not do
  Though not a word is hinted.

So learn a lesson from the mule,
  If one, perchance, is handy,
And be as different as you can
  To marbles win, or candy;
And if a mule you do not find
  His talents coarse displaying
Some man will make a substitute
  Who does a lot of braying.

Novelties In Footwear.

In many respects the changes in footwear are radical. Gold shoes we are accustomed to, but the gold boots which have been brought out have not had much of a success. High shoes are buttoned. Bronze is coming back to us from the long ago. Boots with colored leather are good, polished gray kid having a great vogue, with pearl buttons. Patent leather is used for all sorts of boots and shoes, and cut steel and enamel buttons and fancy toe tips appear on only a few of the shoes. Gun metal calf is new for walking boots, but satin takes first place for evening shoes. Buckles have superseded all rosettes and bows, and single rhinestones are the few exceptions. Jeweled heels have appeared on evening shoes, and some of the stockings exhibit a rhinestone in the center of each pattern on the instep. Insets of lace figure on many of the more costly stockings, but one cannot do wrong in wearing plain silk hose.

The Bolero For Afternoon Wear.

A new fabric of the season has been christened "kitten's ear cloth" from its resemblance to the soft, veiny appearance to be found on the inside of pussy's ear.

The afternoon suit illustrated is of this material in crow's blue—a blue that is almost black in its intensity. The bolero coatee is of the same shade of velvet embroidered with iridescent beads. The sleeves are odd little chopped off affairs. The hat is of black velvet, trimmed with blue ostrich, and the black patent leather boots have buttoned tops of blue satin.

There is nothing prettier with a new skirt than a blouse of either the same color in fine ninon or a silk or satin one of contrasting shades.

The newest French made blouses are nearly all unlined, being as loosely fitted as possible, with ample fullness under the arms that quite does away with that tendency to wear badly or split that was the great drawback with the Magyar style when it first came into fashion.

The colors used are many of them lurid in the extreme, royal purple, geranium and tangerine being the favorites, the blouses being carried out in charmeuse or a thick quality crepe de chine, trimmed very simply at neck and wrist with narrow bands of velvet.

Very chic little blouses for summer wear are of net. Illustrated here is a blouse of embroidered net which is worn with a dainty gown of taffeta. The flounced tunic, trimmed with buttons, gives an exceedingly attractive appearance to the simple little frock.

22 LITTLE PORKERS.

Norwood Register.

Mr. W. D. Robson has a sow, which on Friday last gave birth to twenty-two little porkers, twenty-one of which were living. This is said to be a most extraordinary occurrence. The litter is more than the sow can provide food for, so that several of the little ones will have to be fed by artificial means.

Some people regard life as a perpetual indignation meeting.

Cardinal Receive Hats.

ROME, May 29.—The public consistory at the Vatican, at which the red hat was conferred on those now in Rome of the 13 new cardinals created on Monday, including Cardinal Begin of Quebec, was held yesterday and was attended by several thousand people, most of whom were foreigners. A special mission will be sent to take the berrettas to the absent cardinals.

The papal procession and the ceremony was conducted with great pomp.

C.N.R. GUARANTEE BILL IS READ FIRST TIME

Government Answers and Disposes of Proposals to Hold Parliamentary Investigation to Take Option for Purchase of Road and to Equalize Freight Rates in Eastern and Western Canada.

OTTAWA, May 29.—The Canadian Northern resolutions were adopted by the House of Commons last night. The yeas and nays were not demanded, but the Government majority, upon various amendments, was 44. When the result was announced the Prime Minister introduced a bill founded upon the resolutions, and it was read a first time.

Three amendments were moved during the day, by Duncan Ross (Lib., W. Middlesex), Hon. Wm. Pugsley and Hon. Frank Oliver, respectively. Mr. Ross desired an investigation by a Parliamentary committee, and Mr. Pugsley moved that all the stock of the Canadian Northern be deposited with the Receiver-General, the Government to secure an option upon the same exercisable within five years upon payment of $30,000,000. Mr. Oliver asked that the Canadian Northern be required to equalize its freight rates between eastern and western Canada.

The debate was opened by Mr. Ross, who in support of his amendment, said the feeling in his part of the country against Mackenzie and Mann was quite bitter. Mr. Ross said the people of Western Ontario were keenly interested in the development of the provincial hydro railways and were convinced that Mackenzie and Mann were the enemies of the system.

Premier Borden said the belief was without foundation. If the solution offered by Mr. Ross had any meaning at all, it meant that the Canadian Northern must collapse, and that contractors, merchants, laboring men, and material men must wait for at least another 18 months before they could hope to receive the $21,000,000 owing to them by Mackenzie and Mann. He asked the House to vote down the amendment.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said it had been stated over and over again that the $45,000,000 to be raised on the Government guarantee would be expended on construction. How, then, could it go to pay a lot of old debts?

The House then divided upon the Ross amendment and it was defeated: Yeas 46, nays 90.

Hon. Dr. Pugsley then offered his amendment. The object of reducing the capital stock, he said, was to guard against imposition of excessive freight rates hereafter. In his opinion the system did not represent a value of more than $30,000,000 after all debts and liens were satisfied. Mr. Pugsley argued that Parliament should not take over the road without a mandate from the people, but the option should be obtained so that the people might be consulted at the next general election.

The Prime Minister, in opposing Mr. Pugsley's amendment, said it provided in substance for the Government completing and operating a transcontinental railway which it did not own at present and which it might never acquire. There was no foundation, he said, for the oft-repeated charge that the capital stock of the Canadian Northern was mere water. That stock represented between forty and fifty million dollars, actually contributed in land and cash to the enterprise by Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann. In addition to this, it represented their skill, enterprise and labor during 18 years of continuous effort.

W. F. Maclean (Con., S. York) urged steps to purchase the railway. The present, he said, was the time to act because within a few years the road would become so valuable that we could not acquire it.

Messrs. Thompson (Qu'Appelle) and Nesbit (N. Oxford) spoke in support of the Pugsley amendment.

The House then divided and the amendment was defeated: Yeas 45, nays 89.

Royal Society Officers.

MONTREAL, May 29.—The Royal Society of Canada closed its annual conference here yesterday with the election of the following officers:

Sir Rodolphe S. Ruthier, Quebec, president; Dr. Alfred Baker, professor of physics, University of Toronto, vice-president; Dr. C. Gordon Hewitt, Dominion entomologist, hon. treasurer; Dr. Duncan C. Scott, Deputy Minister for Indian Affairs, hon. secretary; D. S. Dowling, Ottawa, librarian. The officers of the French section are: Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, president; Abbe Cosselin, rector of Laval University, vice-president; Bouivny T. Montigny, secretary.

DISASTER IS FEARED

PHILADELPHIA, May 29. — A great quantity of wreckage seen floating in the ocean off Charleston, S.C., by the crew of the steamer Shawmut, in port yesterday from Jacksonville, Fla., is believed by shipping people to be the steamer F. J. Luckenbach, from Tampa, Fla., May 15 for Baltimore, which is about a week overdue. A revenue cutter is scouring the sea looking for the Luckenbach.

The wreckage passed by the Shawmut consisted of a large quantity of lumber and moulding and a canvas-covered hatch painted yellow.

FIREMEN OVERCOME.

More Than Fifty Suffer From Effects of Smoke In Detroit.

DETROIT, May 29. — More than fifty firemen were overcome by smoke and ten partly conscious foreigners were dragged to safety from the flames which swept the basement of the Fort Street Union Station here Wednesday night. The fire, one of the most stubborn in the history of Detroit, was not completely extinguished until early yesterday. The cause has not been determined, but it started in a room in the basement where records were kept. The loss is estimated at $30,000. The firemen confined the flames to the basement. The station is used by the Wabash, Pere Marquette and Canadian Pacific Railroads. The old Michigan Central Station, a short distance away, recently was destroyed by fire.

The Congo river and its tributaries furnish more than 9,000 miles of waterways navigable by flat bottomed steamers.

WHITE SLAVERY

CHICAGO, May 29.—The report of the special committee on white slave traffic was adopted yesterday without discussion by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States. The report emphasized the slogan, "No toleration; no regulation; no recognition," and urged that the evil be eradicated by strict enforcement of municipal, state and federal laws. Doubt was expressed of the advisability of teaching sex hygiene in the public schools.

H. C. L. Commission Goes West.

OTTAWA, May 29.—The commission which is enquiring into the high cost of living, composed of John M. Dougald, chairman; R. H. Coates, C. C. James and U. Vincent, leave on Saturday for the Pacific coast. The cities to be visited are: Victoria, Vancouver, Edmonton, Calgary, Regina and Winnipeg.

Killed By Lightning.

TRURO, N.S., May 29. — David Pearson, living in Harmony, a short distance from here, was killed yesterday during a heavy electrical storm. The bolt struck Pearson as he was entering the door. The house was damaged considerably.

Are You Going to Muskoka This Summer?

If so take the 10.20 a.m. fast express from Toronto, daily except Sunday, via Grand Trunk Railway and arrive Muskoka Wharf 1.45 p.m. where direct connections are made with steamers for points on Muskoka Lakes. This train carries Parlor Library Buffet car and first-class coaches and passengers are assured of a comfortable ride along the most interesting route to Muskoka Wharf, which is the original gateway to the far-famed Muskoka Lakes.

The curative odor of balsam and pine, and the preponderance of water area to land surface, together with the high altitude (1000 feet above the sea) render hay fever an impossible condition and perfect immunity from this annoying ailment is assured.

Return connection is made with train leaving Muskoka Wharf at 10.30 a.m. daily except Sunday, arriving Toronto 2.55 p.m.

Tourist tickets at low fares are now on sale to Muskoka Lakes points, good for stop-over and valid to return until December 30th, 1914.

If you are contemplating making a trip ask Grand Trunk Agents for full particulars or write C. E. Horning, District Passenger Agent, Union Station, Toronto, Ont.

WARM PRAISE FOR BOY SCOUT ORGANIZATION

Mr. Burnham Pays Tribute to the Movement

The Boy Scout movement in Canada came in for eulogistic reference during the discussion in the Commons last evening of the bill to incorporate the Canadian General Council of the Boy Scout Association.

The tributes were in part a reply to Hon. Rudolphe Lemieux, who, while approving on the whole of the movement doubted whether the summer camp features were beneficial. He was not opposed to the training of boys in the rudiments of military defence. He referred to the fact that recently a Quebec paper had attacked the Boy Scout movement as being associated with Free Masonry. The lieutenant-governor of Quebec had denounced the newspaper for making such a statement and Mr. Lemieux himself agreed with the lieutenant-governor. He would like to see the Boy Scout movement under the control of the minister of militia.

Misunderstands Aim.

Mr. R. B. Bennett, of Calgary, said that Mr. Lemieux quite misunderstood the aim and purpose of the movement. It was in no sense military. The aim was to inculcate in young boys a sense of duty; it taught them courtesy, the old world courtesy that was called chivalry. It taught them to perform acts of kindness. He bore testimony to the splendid results of the movement which had come under his own observation. The cadet movement was military; the boy scout movement was not.

Mr. J. H. Burnham, of Peterboro, said he wished to pay tribute to the boy scout movement because it was a revival of the days of true chivalry which had almost disappeared in the march of materialism.

"Not as bad as that," suggested an opposition member.

"Well, in the opposition ranks anyway," retorted Mr. Burnham amidst laughter.

A Young Hero.

The House applauded when Mr. Burnham, by way of illustrating the spirit of the movement told of a five-year-old Ottawa boy who when badly hurt and asked why he didn't cry made answer proudly: "I'm a scout."

Some of the street boys he had seen had improved so wonderfully under the influence of scout training that he almost expected to see them members of parliament some day.

The bill was then put through its final stages. It has already passed the senate.—Ottawa Citizen.

ENTRIES WANTED FOR CROP COMPETITION

The farmers of the vicinity are not taking advantage of the chance to win the government's prizes for the best crops of oats, barley and potatoes, said F. J. A. Hall this morning. There is still room for more entries. The judging will be made on barley and oat crops of not less than three acres and potato crops of not less than one acre.

Wages in Victoria, Australia, have increased almost 25 per cent. in 20 years.

THOS. McDONOUGH HAS REGISTERED

Passed Away at His Home Yesterday Afternoon

Mr. Thomas J. McDonough, one of the best known and most highly esteemed residents of this city, passed away at his home at 723 Bethune St. last evening after an illness of several months, due to lung trouble. Deceased was born in Ireland some 41 years ago but came to this country when a mere lad of ten years and settled in Peterboro. On the death of his parents a few years later he was employed at the Oriental Hotel as bellboy and he served long and faithfully in that capacity and later as clerk. When the hotel was taken over by the Dickson Est., and conducted as a temperance house he was appointed manager. He held this position till last February, when he was forced to retire owing to ill health.

His connection with the Oriental permitted his coming in contact with hundreds of people every week and his genial and friendly disposition won for him a wide circle of friends. Travellers and tourists from all over the Dominion will deeply regret his demise. He was a member of the local council of the Knights of Columbus.

A sorrowing wife, three children Thomas, Alec. and Theodore, also one sister Mrs. Martin Kenneally, Sherbrooke Street, are left to mourn his death.

Funeral announcements later.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

HOME RULE.

Letters to Editor—

Editor Review: Sir,—In its effort to justify home rule in Ireland what silly stuff the Examiner gets off when it undertakes to mislead its readers by saying that the rule of the majority is a sound British principle, and instead of applying that principle to the country as a whole whose Parliament governs, it merely applies it to a portion of the country—Ireland—and not to the whole country—the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. If its application of the principle was sound, then that is conclusive proof that Ulster is justified in remaining as it is, instead of subjecting itself to the rule of a foreign potentate. Again such an application would justify Ireland to become absolutely independent, for which she admits she is striving, by all her great leaders, and to become a hostile nation within the heart of the United Kingdom.

Yours,
JUSTITIA.

Beautifying Lock 6.

Another step has been taken along the line of beautifying Peterboro. At Lock No. 6 the caretaker's house has been painted and the lawn fittingly adorned with flowers and beds. Considerable sodding has been done with the result that the entrance to the canal off the Little Lake makes an exceedingly fine appearance.

By a unanimous vote the Boston Cigarmakers' Union has levied an assessment of $5 for each member to advertise the Boston-made union cigars this year.

Kryptok Bifocal Lenses

Kryptok lenses are the most remarkable recent invention in the Optical line. Each lens is a solid, unbroken surface. There is no cementing to cloud the glasses, to offer lodging places for dirt or to disfigure the appearance. The eyesight of youth is reestablished, and to all appearance KRYPTOKS are the same as young folks' glasses, with nothing to distinguish them from the latter except your own pleasant knowledge of their wonderful far-and-near qualities.

We have the exclusive right to sell these lenses for this city and vicinity.

Ask for booklet describing them.

209 AUTOMOBILES AND 15 MOTORCYCLES IN THE CITY

The co-operation of all men, women and children in Peterboro and vicinity in a "Safety First" movement will mean that the casualty figures for 1914 will be reduced to a minimum. More care and caution will surely result in less accidents and less danger. Every one should take all precaution before crossing a street—look to see if there is any possible danger in sight and then cross on the cross walk provided for that purpose. Many persons are observed strolling along the street or standing gossiping with a neighbor, with danger flirting all around. Municipal sidewalks are for the use of pedestrians and when they confine their movements to travel on foot to these portions of the thoroughfares, they are increasing their own personal safeguard. Between Simcoe and Hunter Streets on George one can see persons crossing from any point on one side to any point on the other side. This is one of the most dangerous habits one could possibly addict himself or herself to and should be stopped at once.

A great deal of ink has been spiled regarding children playing on the streets but it is wise to repeat, that it is the most dangerous pastimes imaginable. Nearly every day, in some corner or other of Ontario, some little child is killed or maimed for life by being struck by a passing vehicle. Children should be instructed to play in their own yards, at our public playgrounds (?) or at least where danger is not expected.

Numerous citizens go out to the middle of the road to board a car when it is still some two blocks distant. That is selfishness, as it is monopolizing the highway when the offender should be on the sidewalk and often times holds up some vehicle which has the prior right of way under the circumstances. Citizens should wait and not rush to the side of the car track till the car is at least half a block distant. When one is getting off a car he or she should look both right and left and when passing around the rear end of the trolley, stop, look and listen is strong advice.

In driving through the streets of the city, chauffeurs and motorists should exercise every precaution. They should drive slowly and always be ready to stop the car if danger presents itself. Much of the law contained in by-laws dealing with these topics is contained in the two words "Safety First." Thousands of lives are daily placed in care of the police or traffic officers in the larger cities but the members of the local force should also be on the job to caution local people how to use the streets. No doubt when the city attains larger dimensions the Commissioners will see fit to appoint traffic officers but till then the exercising of a little common sense on the part of every individual, who has the privilege of being one of the users of our main streets, will help a great deal.

Motormen should never fail to observe all the rules of "Safety First." They, too, have a big responsibility in promoting its success and while we read of instances in other cities where motormen have displayed almost unpardonable negligence the majority of the men engaged in the work in this city have displayed and demonstrated their ability to further this movement in the interest of humanity.

AUTOMOBILE OWNERS.

Pretty Flower's Love Cure

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

Lew Kelsey of the Twin Star ranch rode his horse desperately over lonely trails that summer afternoon. There was a look of grim despair on his handsome face, and his bronzed hands clutched the bridle reins until the knuckles showed white.

"Turned down, turned down!" he muttered over and over again as Corney, the horse, flew madly through the dust of the trail. "And she laughed—laughed to beat the band—when I asked her! What do you know about that?"

The memory of Anita Rooney's scornful laugh still rang in his outraged ears. Why should Pat Rooney's red headed girl spurn his offer of marriage in that rude way? Had she not accepted his attentions—his gifts? Had she not flirted with him, led him to believe that she loved him? And then when he summoned his courage to offer her the greatest honor in his gift—his big, warm, honest heart—she had laughed at him and refused!

So, while Lew Kelsey rode toward the west where the Wind river mountains piled a dim blue bulk against the pale sky, he gloomed sullenly over his unfortunate love affair, and he registered many vows to have done with women forever.

He pulled his horse to a standstill on the summit of a hill and looked away to the distant ranges, and he felt a longing to wipe out this old score of fate and start life anew without a woman in the world to turn the sweetness of living to pain and bitterness.

As he sat there like a bronze statue of despair, two riders came into view over the crest of the hill where he sat. Astride two wiry Indian ponies were a Shoshone Indian and his squaw; the woman was attired in a new dress, and she tinkled with silver ornaments, and her garments were gay with colored beads. The man wore a brand new suit of khaki, new moccasins, and his well oiled black hair hung about his ears.

Sun Dog and his wife, Pretty Flower, were on their way back to the reservation in the Wind river district after a visit to their married daughter at Fort Steele.

"How!" grunted Sun Dog as he jogged past the cowpuncher.

"How!" returned Lew pleasantly enough.

"How!" smiled Pretty Flower, looking speculatively at the young man. "Me tell you fortune, huh?"

Pretty Flower was a thrifty woman, and her skill at fortune telling added many a silver coin to Sun Dog's wampum belt.

"Fortune!" repeated Lew disdainfully. "I'm afraid you haven't got any good fortune for me, Pretty Flower."

Pretty Flower giggled.

"Me find good fortune. Me find nice squaw," she promised.

"Squaw—ugh!" sneered Lew.

Pretty Flower looked sharply at him from her little black eyes. In spite of her dull looking countenance, she was unusually keen and discerning. Being a shrewd woman who dealt in fortunes, she was quick to recognize in Lew Kelsey all the symptoms of "a young man disappointed in love."

She knew Kelsey was not a drinking man, nor was he a gambler; therefore she attributed his downcast appearance to a rebuff by the girl he loved.

So she put her neatly dressed head on one side and looked at him archly.

"Me can cure love," she insinuated.

Lew turned sharply.

"You can do what?" he roared.

"Me can cure love," she repeated.

"The dickens you can!" growled Lew, turning as red as the sunset.

"Me can cure you!"

"All right; go ahead; cure me," he ordered brazenly.

"Good!" grunted Pretty Flower approvingly.

Lew Kelsey slipped from the saddle and stood leaning against Corney's side. He held out his muscular, sunburned hand to the Indian.

Pretty Flower jumped from her pony and stood beside him, holding his hand in her own red brown fingers.

"Hum! White man want cure for love? Listen! Find pretty girl. Lots pretty girls in Red Spider. Try hard to love new pretty girl. Try hard to forget old pretty girl. Bimeby some day old pretty girl gone from love and new pretty girl most got heart. Then stop there, white man, quick. Old love gone away. New love not quite come. Heart empty. White man safe! That, white man, is Pretty Flower's love cure." She dropped his hand and stepped back, surveying him with bright, watchful eyes.

"Well, of all the— Say, Pretty Flower, that's not a bad scheme of yours!" burst forth Lew excitedly. "That's some little cure. I believe I'll try it. Here!" He brought out a roll of bills and placed in the delighted squaw's palm a crisp and crackling five dollar note.

So Sun Dog and Pretty Flower went joyfully home to the reservation, while Lew Kelsey wheeled his horse about and returned to the Twin Star ranch. He reached there just in time for supper, and when the meal had been hurried through he joined his companions in making an elaborate toilet, for they were all going to attend the dance at the schoolhouse in Red Spider that evening.

All was merriment in the schoolhouse. The desks and seats had been piled outside, and on the platform were three fiddlers and a cracked piano. But the music was of the popular order, and amusements were few and far between in Red Spider, so that the dancers were not overparticular so long as the fiddlers kept in tune with the piano and their feet could beat time on the hard oaken floor.

Anita Rooney was there, the center of a laughing, joking crowd of men and girls. Lew Kelsey stood against the wall and felt a brief pang as his gaze included Anita's crisp red hair and a glimpse of her laughing face. Then he steadied himself and looked about for the girl who was to effect Pretty Flower's love cure.

He knew most of the girls present, but there were one or two who were strangers to him. One of them, a pretty, dark eyed, black haired girl, dressed in white, with a pale blue girdle about her slim waist, seemed more of a stranger than the others. She was with Dr. Blake's wife, and as Lew Kelsey was an intimate friend of the Blakes he felt no hesitation in approaching the doctor's wife and in obtaining an introduction to her guest from the east, Esther Gray.

Miss Esther Gray proved to be a most delightful acquaintance. She was as sweet and charming as she was pretty, and Lew felt that there wouldn't be the least difficulty in losing his heart to Esther. Only the trouble was he might want her to keep it. In that case, where was the good of Pretty Flower's love cure?

At any rate, he would be out of love with the scornful Anita!

As the evening wore on Lew found himself quite forgetting Miss Rooney and her ruddy charms. On the other hand, Anita sensed that she was losing an admirer. It was all very well to laugh at Lew Kelsey's pretensions to her hand and heart; still she had been proud of the attentions of the handsome young cowpuncher, only—only—well, Anita Rooney was ambitious, and she had set her heart on marrying well. No mere cowpuncher would do. It must be the ranch owner himself for Pat Rooney's daughter. It was one thing to refuse Lew Kelsey and still have him dangling at her heels a disconsolate lover. It was quite another matter to have him apparently forgetting all about her and paying devoted attention to that black eyed witch from the east.

So Anita sent for Lew and told him reproachfully that she had saved three dances for him, "as usual," and that he had not come to claim them. And Lew, who recognized Anita's wiles, grinned good naturedly and asked her to dance. Even while his strong arm guided her through the mazes of the waltz, which is still popular in Red Spider district, Anita resentfully felt that his thoughts as well as his eyes were following the graceful figure of Esther Gray.

At the end of another week Pretty Flower's love cure was working. Lew had almost forgotten his love for Anita Rooney, while his growing love for Esther Gray was an ever present joy.

One morning while he was herding cattle on the western ranges the thought of the projected love cure smote his memory.

"Ah, I couldn't—I couldn't keep myself from loving her!" he said, with a tender smile.

"I'll ask her to ride out to Sunset point with me," he decided. "There I'll ask her, and if she'll have me—why, I'll buy that little ranch of Nickerson's, and we'll—we'll call it Paradise, for it can't be anything else with Esther there!"

It was just at sunset when Esther Gray and Lew Kelsey rode slowly up the slope and rested their horses on the summit of the point. Far to the west the fiery clouds flickered and flamed along the peaks of the distant mountains.

Silhouetted against the western sky, the dark forms of the riders told a story to Pretty Flower and her husband, who were gathering herbs on the hillside.

The horses were standing close together, and Lew's arm was about Esther's slender waist, and her dark head was on his shoulder.

Pretty Flower looked at Sun Dog and smiled.

"It was the love cure," she whispered softly.

Sun Dog grunted approval, and together, hand in hand, the two Indians stole away, for they, too, had been young and had known romance.

Justifying His Expense.

Managers who have to pass on expense accounts will appreciate David Gibson's story about a Chicago salesman who paid $8 excess fare to reach New York on a fast train.

"What time did you arrive in New York?" asked the employer.

"Nine-forty in the morning."

"What did you do when you got in?"

"Went up to the hotel, took a bath and ate breakfast."

"What time did you see your man?" asked the conservator.

"About 3 in the afternoon," said the salesman.

"Yes, but why have you got $8 charged up for excess fare on the limited when you could just as well have taken a regular train?"

"Well," said the salesman, "it looked better to be on that train."—New York World.

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

OCCASIONALLY the adhesive qualities of one's friends increase directly with the amount of money one is able to disburse.

Not every one you see who is done brown has been to a summer resort. Some are married men who have been out o' nights, and others are also unfortunate individuals who have met up with the suave confidence gentleman.

It is better that a husband should know how to wash dishes occasionally than that he should be able to umpire a baseball game.

Making all kinds of mistakes isn't the way most of us do it. We are inclined to be content with a specialty.

Theories are often quite innocuous if you never try to translate them into practice.

Take Your Choice.

If just a bit particular
And you can stand the price
The doctor man will hand you
Your favorite advice,
And if he does not give it
By searching you may land
Without a bit of trouble
Your own and special brand.

'Tis passed into a proverb
That two cannot agree
Except as to the statement
That none of it is free.
So it is like potatoes
Or shoes or building stone—
You purchase what you fancy
And let the rest alone.

As to the kind of ailment
To have when you are sick
Consult a dozen doctors
And calmly take your pick.
It may be mumps or measles
Or chicken pox or rash
Or plain appendicitis—
It's all the same for cash.

To find the proper ailment,
The one you think will fit,
May take a little trouble
And chasing round a bit,
But do not be discouraged.
The field with care explore,
And you will if persistent
Get what you're paying for.

And Happy.

"Man is generally full of trouble."
"Generally?"
"Yes."
"And when he isn't?"
"He is just full."

His Natural Mistake.

"How do you like my new hat?"
"Haven't seen it."
"Why, that is it."
"Where?"
"There on the table."
"What! I thought that was a basket off the vegetable peddler's wagon."

The Invertebrate Knocker.

I'm much inclined to knock about
And hit a friend or two,
Pick up a thing to mock about
And make a great ado.

But still I rather hesitate
When things are getting hot,
For I am not a vertebrate,
And courage I have not.

A Precedent.

"Why can't they harness wild geese and train them to haul flying machines?"

"Would it be practical?"

"Why not? I know a man who was out on a bat."

Fatal Mistake.

"What was he discharged for?"
"Insubordination."
"What did he do?"
"He told the boss' favorite joke in company before the boss got around to it."

LONDONERS LEANED ON BELTINGS OFFERINGS

The Swede Was Lacking in Control and Was no Puzzle

KELLY HIT THRICE

The Blountmen were defeated again by the London Cockneys yesterday. According to the box score the locals collected enough hits to win an ordinary game, but Knute Belting yielded London sufficient bingles to cop two games. Curley Blount had two swats. Belting passed three and hit four of the Londoners. He also had a wild heave. Each team had ten men left on the pillows. The London report states that Hammond allowed the Petes to whack it when he found matters going easy. Any minor league pitcher who desires to go up, usually wants his record to be as clean as possible and there are few who ease up for even an innings.

London, May 29.—The Tecumsehs continued their made pace in the first with the men of Peterboro this afternoon, and won out without trouble 11 to 3. This season the Tecumsehs and Blountmen have met seven times, and thus far the latter have but one victory to their credit. Belting was no puzzle for the Londoners this afternoon, and was pelted for a variety of bingles. Hammond, on the other hand, had a rather easy time of it, being whacked only when he saw his way through and slackened his pace. The score:

Peterboro .0 0 0 0 0 0 2 1 0— 3
London ...2 0 5 0 0 3 0 1 x—11

COMMENT

As You Like It

The Peterboro ball club is a mystery. Yesterday the club collected 10 hits or enough to win an ordinary game but the Cockneys walloped the leather for 14 hits. The mysterious part of the team's actions comes in when you consider that on the days the pitchers are going great the team falls down in batting and if the pitchers are to register a win they have to pitch two or three hit games. Then when the club strikes a slugging day the pitchers fall down and the opponents collect enough clouts to win two games. Such is baseball.

Toronto News: Apparently the Canadian League is made up of battlers. It is a slow day indeed if a free fight or an umpiring baiting incident does not happen to make things miserable for President Fitzgerald. The little affair at London in which Schultz, of the Beavers, and Beebe, of London, were the main participants, however, was somewhat exaggerated. Schultz took umbrage at the remark passed by the twirler regarding his batting ability, and took a swing at the twirler. No damage was done, but Reisling, the London manager, did not help matters along by egging the combatants on instead of interfering. If anybody should be punished he is the person, according to the Toronto players.

A fanette writes asking what a bunt is. As the Petes have failed to demonstrate one so far we cannot answer the question from a baseball viewpoint but would say that if women were permitted to join the Masons the goat would be able to answer the question in a physical manner.

Joe Picard says the Petes are expert exponents of the hesitating waltz but he also thinks they have the return tango down to perfection. The return tango is a new one and Joe says it merely consists of a few steps towards the plate and a similar number back very quickly.

President Denham rises to remar that the Petes are taking their oats early.

Hamilton beat St. Thomas and Knotty Lee's Beavers beat "Shag's" Senators, in the other games played yesterday.

The New York Giants beat Erie 6-2 in an exhibition game.

FAMOUS WINTERS IN PARIS.

Once Every River In France Was Ice and Every Mill Idle.

Recalling famous winters in France, the Paris Petit Journal says that "the fifteenth century might justly be called the cold century.

"In 1408 the registrars of the parliament of Paris reported that it was impossible to issue any of its resolutions because the ink froze in the ink bottles of the clerks. Every three words they had to thaw their pens, and this with a fire roaring in their room. Every river in France was frozen, and not a mill could work. Twelve years later, in 1420, there was a repetition of this winter. Foodstuffs gave out, and poor people died by tens of thousands.

"In 1422 in less than three days the wine and the vinegar froze in the cellars; cocks and hens had their combs frozen; the streets were full of people who danced, jumped, wrestled and ran races, anything to keep off frostbite.

"In 1430 it froze for more than two and a half months, and the snow fell for forty days without stopping. All the birds hidden in the trunks of trees died.

"In 'the year of the great winter,' as 1003 was called, hundreds of persons died from cold. Everything was frozen hard, even the bread served at the table of Henry IV. In 1709 all the wheat was destroyed, and a new sowing had to be made in the spring. Buffon relates that no bread was to be had. Even Mme. de Maintenon had to go without it.

"In 1776 sentinels were found frozen to death outside Versailles, and the king put a stop to this service. In Paris great bonfires were lit in the streets. Bells were shivered into pieces as they rang, clocks stopped and in the cellars wine turned into ice. Hares and partridges came into the towns and hid themselves in the nooks and corners of houses, where they were subsequently found as stiff as a board and quite inedible."

Bail Asked For Hindus.

VANCOUVER, May 29. — Lawyers representing the shipload of Hindus who desire admittance to Canada, objected yesterday to having the case rushed to the Court of Appeals today. Hindu leaders here ask that the whole party be released on bail, and their readiness to put up the cash surprised local officials.

HUNTING THE CARIBOU.

Curiosity Often Lures the Watchful Animal to Its Fate.

In hunting the caribou quietness is essential. Never break a twig if you can avoid it, for a cracking branch makes a noise which carries far and may give warning of your approach to the very stag you particularly want. Equally important is it to keep a sharp lookout at all times, especially when entering a barren, where a stag may be sleeping, for under such conditions they are hard to see. Among the numerous gray dead stumps and moss covered low trees the color of the caribou is so inconspicuous that the untrained eye will fail to detect the animal even at close range. The first intimation will be a glimpse of a disappearing patch of white as the caribou vanishes into the woods.

All these things considered, the caribou of Newfoundland is not as alert as any other deer that I know of and is therefore more readily approached. There is, of course, great variation among them, some being extremely alert and difficult to stalk, while others are so absurdly tame that they will allow a man to walk right up to within a few yards before taking flight. Curiosity is often a noticeable failing with them. When once it is aroused they will go to almost any length to satisfy it. I do not, however, advise the hunter to count too much on it, for the very thing which you imagine will tempt this curiosity will as likely as not frighten them away. Sometimes a strange noise will make them very inquisitive, and they will come within a few feet to find out what it is. Then, occasionally, a white handkerchief will have the same effect.—A. Radcliffe Dugmore in "The Romance of the Newfoundland Caribou."

Tobogganed to Matrimony.

The newest elopement trick was recently worked in Switzerland, where the parents of the couple went on a trip to the top of a mountain. While they were there the couple got a bobsled, coasted down the mountain side and were away on an express before the parents could get down the mountain on the railway.

The Forbearing Waiter.

"That waiter didn't thank you when you gave him a quarter."

"I didn't want him to. I was grateful to him for holding the coin up so that every one in the room could see it was only a quarter."—Washington Star.

Sure Protection.

Customer (trying on dress suit, jokingly)—I hope I'll never be mistaken for a waiter. Tailor—When in doubt, keep your hands in your pockets!—Judge.

It is well to learn to work intensely. —Charles W. Eliot.

PRINCE AT BANQUET.

H.R.H. of Teck Warmly Received by London Canadian Club.

LONDON, May 29.—Prince Alexander of Teck had a hearty reception at the Canadian Club last night. Sir William Osler presided, and those present included Bishop Stringer of the Yukon, Sir Robert Perks, Sir John Anderson of the Colonial Office, W. L. Griffith and Prof. Mills.

Responding to the toast of the "Dominion," Prince Alexander said that the occasion was the first time since his appointment as Governor-General that he had the opportunity of meeting Canadians collectively. The occasion was all the more important by reason of the fact that most of them were business men interested in the progress of Canada.

"I realize, too," continued the prince, "as I proceed with the work before me, that you will be amongst my critics, I want you thus early to feel that, whether I succeed or fail, I have accepted the responsibility firmly determined to do my utmost for Canada."

OFFICERS EXECUTED.

Constitutionalists Refuse To Spare Huerta's Subordinates.

NOGALES, Ariz., May 29.—Thirty-five Federal officers captured by the Constitutionalists at the city of Tepic were executed on May 24, according to a despatch received here yesterday from Gen. Obregon, the Constitutionalist commander. The intercession of the German consul at the request of the American naval commander on the Pacific coast was in vain. The soldiers of the garrison, however, were spared.

Women Perished.

ARMAGOS, Mex., May 23. — (By courier via El Paso, May 28)—Thirty-five women camp followers lost their lives with 300 Federal soldiers in the battle of Paredon, it was learned. There were fifty-seven officers executed after the battle.

Reports of the execution of Gen. Munoz, a nephew of ex-President Porfirio Diaz, Gen. Orzono, and nine colonels now seem well established.

Immense Iceberg Encountered.

BOSTON, May 29. — One of the largest icebergs reported by ocean liners this season was encountered by the Leyland liner Anglian, which arrived here yesterday from London. The officers say that the berg was about 200 feet high and 2,000 feet long. It was also directly in the path of the ship when discovered.

A Fortune Hunter.

Mrs. Roxley—I'm afraid there's not much energy in that young man who is calling on our daughter. He doesn't seem to have much snap.

Mr. Roxley—No, but I think he is after one, though.—Philadelphia Ledger.

No Opposition To Martin.

LONDON, May 29.—(C. A. P. Cable.)—Joseph Martin, M.P., who on Friday decided to resign his seat in order to ascertain whether the Government really intended to "throw him over" owing to his having voted against his party, on the Marconi division, says that he has received a letter from Mr. Illingworth, the Liberal whip, saying that the Government would not oppose him.

Upheaval In the Pacific.

SYDNEY, New South Wales, May 29.—The most severe earthquake shocks registered by Australian seismographs were recorded at 12.30 yesterday morning by the instruments at the Government observatory at River View. The waves lasted three hours. Indications were given of an unheaval in the neighborhood of the Friendly Islands, in the Southern Pacific.

No Drink Before Ten.

LONDON, May 29.—Beginning yesterday, the "No drink before ten" law will be rigorously enforced in Scotland. The act is aimed at the "black squad," namely, the open air workers in the shipyards, who are addicted to ante-breakfast refreshment generally a gill of whisky, followed by a pint of beer.

Ulster's Prayers Answered.

LONDON, May 29.—The Dean of Belfast has caused a sensation by his utterance in the cathedral when he expressed the belief that the safe passage of the gun-running boat Fanny was accomplished in answer to Ulster's prayer.

Locating the Blame.

"For all the trouble in this land
I've found the cause," said Ben—
"One half the folks are women, and
The other half are men."
—Cincinnati Enquirer.

"Wake up! Come out of it and can
That foolish talk!" said Nell.
"You overlook the goats, dear man,
And all the kids as well."
—Springfield Union.

In Wrong.

Employee—I don't like your methods of doing business, Mr. Grafton. I resign.

"Practical" Business Man (sneeringly)—You're a holier than thou guy, eh?

Employee—No; merely a square peg in a crooked hole.—Puck.

Her Name.

She was round, and she was ruddy,
And her cheeks were like the rose,
And she weighed at least one-eighty,
As the hay scale record shows;
She was sound as any dollar,
And no stronger girl you've met,
Yet this big and robust creature
Had been christened Violet.
—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Explained.

"So she was untrue to the man she was engaged to?"

"Yes. You see, he drinks, smokes and gambles."

"Oh, I see. She was too good to be true."—Exchange.

PROROGATION

Familiar Signs Are Evident at Ottawa

OTTAWA, May 29. — Invitations have been issued for the ceremony in Senate at prorogation of Parliament. The invitations are undated, but the House will close on Thursday or Friday of next week. The usual notice also has been hung out requesting members to leave their keys before proceeding to their homes.

In the Senate yesterday the Davis anti-tipping bill was given its third reading, and sent on to the House of Commons for consideration. The bill declares that the giving and receiving of tips is an illegal act, punishable by fine or imprisonment. There was no dissent expressed on the third reading.

Hon. T. W. Crothers, Minister of Labor, has given notice of an amendment to the Railway Act to compel railways to pay their employes fortnightly in place of monthly.

"Your wife says you have about the courage of a mouse," said the disagreeable relative.

"I wonder that she should make the comparison," replied Mr. Meekton. "Henrietta is afraid of a mouse."—Washington Star.

A Cool Hand.

Sergeant (to recruit)—What would be the first thing you'd do, Jackson, if you were on guard duty at the powder magazine and the thing blew up? Recruit—The first thing I'd do, sir, would be to fire a shot to give the alarm.—New York Post.

THE ROUTE IS CHANGED

Duke Will not Visit Little Lake Cemetery

His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught and the Duchess of Connaught will ride in Mr. Matthew's auto, Monday morning. With the royalty in the car will be Mayor Buller and an aide-de-camp. Such has been decided upon by the reception committee which has also decided to change the route owing to the royal party leaving the city via G.T.R. and the wretched condition of George Street.

Those who will also enjoy rides with royalty and members of the party are: In Mr. Irwin's car, Princess Patricia, Hon. Katherine Villiers, Col. Farquhar and Ald. Stratton. Mr. Cressman's car, Miss Yorke, Sir Edward Worthington, Mr. Sladin, Secretary to the Duke, Mrs. Buller and Mrs. Stratton. Mr. McBain's car, Col. the Hon. Sam. Hughes, J. H. Burnham, M.P., Col. and Mrs. Clegg. Several other cars conveying the city and county officials will also be in the procession.

The committee decided to abandon the idea of visiting the Little Lake Cemetery and also instructed J. J. Turner to extend the decorations on Stewart Street as far as the G.T.R. Station.

The revised route follows: C.P.R. station to Perry, to Locke, to Romaine, to Aylmer, to Lansdowne, to Park, to Townsend, to Park, to Rubidge, to Hunter, to Park, to Edgmont, to Monaghan, to Weller, to Belmont, to Hunter, to Park, to Brock, to Rubidge, to Hunter, to George, to Central Park.

The route after leaving the park is: George to Argyle, to Water, to Inverlea, to Dennistoun, to Smith, to Nicholls Park, to Concession, to McFarlane, to Canal. Returning from the lift lock the route is as follows: Maria to Burnham, to Water, to Brock, to George, to Simcoe, to Stewart, to King, to G.T.R.

Improving.

Husband—There you are, my dear, you see I'm improving. I brought the umbrella back.

Wife—That is very extraordinary, considering your umbrella is still in the stand, and that you went out with your walking stick!

SURVIVORS HAD TRYING NIGHT OF IT

Some Were Without Clothes When Picked up

Rimouski.—J. McWilliams, chief operator of the telegraph station at Father Point describes the arrival from the Empress of Ireland of survivors and dead bodies.

"When daylight broke we saw by aid of our telescopes, the rescuers picking up survivors from the nine life boats, while the Storstadt was picking up people from the water. The Eureka was first to arrive, and she had thirty-two survivors and several bodies, with a number of wounded. The scene aboard her was most distressing. Among the survivors brought in by the Lady Evelyn was Captain Kendall. Most of the rescued were naked and had suffered severely during the night as there had been frost. The Storstadt arrived later and landed the survivors she had picked up.

Mark Spencely, of the local Salvation Army fears for the safety of his grandson Walter Spencely, of Toronto, who accompanied the Army on their trip to the Old Land by the Empress of Ireland. Mr. Spencely stated to the Review late this afternoon that his grandson was on board beyond a doubt.

FUNERAL NOTICE.

TRAVELLER FEARS FOR HIS SISTER AND BROTHER

Had Intended Sailing on the Ill-Fated Boat

Montreal will be thrown into complete mourning over that disastrous affair the loss of the Empress of Ireland with its human freight," said George S. Ross of Montreal this morning while a guest at the Oriental for a few hours. Mr. Ross is of the opinion that brother and sister were passengers on the ill-fated steamer. He as yet failed to get in touch with them at Montreal and is consequently worried over what the outcome will be.

Mr. Ross left on the 11.43 for Montreal.

The brother and sister when last seen by Mr. Ross stated their intentions of leaving on the Empress of Ireland for the trip to the Old Land.

FINED $20 AND COSTS

The reserved judgment in the recent case of Rex vs. Fox, tried before Justices of the Peace, Squire, Pearce and Mattison of Norwood in which Fox was charged with being found drunk in a local option district, has been rendered and the Board fines the defendant $20.00 and costs amounting to $27.05.

It will be remembered that G. N. Gordon who acted for the defendant claimed that the by-law was not valid as the official seal had not been placed thereon but the department decided otherwise.

R. Ruddy, K.C., conducted the prosecution.

MERCANTILE LEAGUE BALL TO-MORROW

Two Games at the Exhibition Park

The Mercantile Baseball League will open to-morrow afternoon at the Exhibition Park at 2.30., when the Drafting Room and Red Caps will play.

The second game will be between the De Laval and Wm. Hamilton nines.

Mayor Buller will pitch the first ball, W. R. Breyfogle, general manager of the De Laval will bat, and R. Dobie, mechanical superintendent at the C.G.E., will catch.

The players of all four teams will assemble at Central Park at 1.30 o'clock and parade down George Street at 1.45. At the corner of King Street, a car provided free by the Radial Railway Co., will take the Maple Leaf band and players to the exhibition grounds. Other cars will give a service to the fans.

THREE PLAYERS ARE SUSPENDED

Toronto, May 29.—President J. P. Fitzgerald of the Canadian Baseball League, announced last night that he had suspended Shultz, the Beaver outfielder, and Beebe, the London pitcher, for three days, and had banished Manager Reisling, of the London Club for a week, the latter having edged on the Beebe-Schultz trouble at London, Wednesday, in place of acting as the peacemaker. In addition all three players have been fined $25 each. The suspensions begin today.

SOME OF THE WORLD'S BLACK SPOTS THAT DEFY WHITE MEN

Mystery Islands That Have Never Been Explored.

Leaving out of consideration the at.. unexplored portions of the arctic and antarctic regions—and there are millions of square miles of them—there are many spots on this little globe of ours that have yet to become familiar with the face of a white man and to smile or frown upon the fearless and hardy pathfinder.

New Guinea is one of the few countries that still present untrodden fields for the explorer, but there are a number of islands that remain a mystery to the world at large and that will probably so remain for many years to come.

One of these isles of mystery is Tiburon island, where not so long ago an explorer met his fate. His name was Wayne, and he is said to have been a clever mining expert.

Wayne went across to Tiburon in October, and not a trace has since been seen of him, nor is it likely that his fate will ever be known.

He was warned of the dangers that were before him. In spite of offers of double pay he could not get a soul to accompany him, so he crossed Hell's passage alone and, like all others who have preceded him, has never come back.

Tiburon is no lonely island in savage Melanesia. It lies in the gulf of California, separated from the Mexican mainland by only a few miles of salt water.

Yet it remains one of the world's black spots. It has never yet been explored by white men. Its only inhabitants are a tribe of Indians who, armed with bows and arrows dipped in some unknown but deadly poison, shoot down all who try to land.

The expedition of 1879 vanished into the interior and was never seen again, and the same fate befell the party headed by Professor Millies in 1904.

There is only one other island in all the world which can match Tiburon, and that is Malayta in the Solomons. Match it—that is, in the way of savagery. And even in Malayta there are white men on the coast. Valuable plantations of cocoanuts and other tropical produce have been planted on the shores of Malayta, but island is a mountainous country covered with thick bush and inhabited by fierce tribes of cannibals.

Gold is believed to exist in the interior of Malayta, and more than one expedition has been organized to search for the precious metal. But the bushmen, who steal noiselessly as serpents through the tropical forest, have wiped out every one of the explorers, and their smoke dried heads decorate the dark temples in the central mountains.

Other islands there are which are as impregnable as Tiburon and Malayta, but for different reasons. One such is Tromelin, a lonely speck of land thirty miles north of Mauritius. It is surrounded by a terrific rampart of coral, which is fully 150 yards wide. A mile out on any side of the island the sea is from 10,000 to 12,000 feet deep. The surf, which always breaks on the rocky fence of this submarine mountain top, makes landing practically impossible.

Yet it was here that in 1761 a French transport was wrecked, and 110 survivors out of over 800 aboard got ashore alive. Of these, seven, all black women, were rescued in the year 1776, having by some amazing miracle kept life in themselves for a space of fifteen months, with no food but shellfish and no drink but brackish water.

In the year 1607 that famous navigator, Henry Hudson, reported the existence of a rock island 800 miles east of Greenland. It was named Jan Mayen. That island was never seen again until the year 1860, when a party of English people, among whom was Lord Dufferin, caught a glimpse of it.

Then it vanished for another fifty years, to be seen once more in July, 1910, by the tourists aboard the yachting liner Oceana.

No one has ever set foot on Jan Mayen. No one is ever likely to, for no navigator would willingly approach it. It is the center of the thickest fogs on the surface of this planet, and from one year's end to another usually remains totally invisible.

Bouvet island, in the antarctic, is almost equally inaccessible. It is the summit of a dead volcano, which rises steeply from immensely deep water, and it has been sighted only twice since its discovery in 1739.

Once and once only has man set foot upon it. A boat from the German exploring ship Valdivia landed, but the people found exploration impossible. The rocky sides were not only of appalling steepness, but they were literally coated with smooth ice, making climbing a matter of impossibility.—Pearson's Weekly.

WORDS, IN NEW DRESSES.

Making Metagrams Is Now the Brainy Fad in England.

Some British newspapers are playing with a trick of spelling English words, the game being to make up a new spelling, in which none of the letters of the old spelling shall be used—that is, to substitute different letters that, in the positions into which they are put, will suggest the same sounds as the old spelling. The words thus undergo a complete change of costume.

Words so translated may be called "metagrams" or (in analogy with parafrase) "paragrams." Two examples given are "phya" for fire and "phyoocha" for future. These involve pronunciations that most Americans do not use or would not accept. Another case of this kind would be "syfa" for cipher.

More exact "metagrams" or "paragrams" may be found—"cyphed" for sift, "kaupby" for coffee, "phycks" for fix, "phyckst" for fixed, "kawph" for cough, "kawpht" for coughed, "cy" for sigh, "eauque" for oak, "pheauque" for folk.—From Simplified Spelling Bulletin.

Blue Mushrooms.

A blue mushroom, known as the Tricholoma Nudum, has just been added to the list of edible fungi. It has been produced from a wild wood fungus, which in its natural state appears only in the late autumn. Professor Matruchot planted a specimen in the cellar of the Paris observatory, where by careful cultivation he succeeded in evolving a mushroom which will grow all the year round. The purple-blue of the wild specimen has faded into a light blue shade. This new mushroom, Professor Matruchot declares, will be hailed with delight by chefs and gourmets on account of its exquisite flavor, which is faintly reminiscent of aniseed.—London Opinion.

Unfashionable to Owe Your Tailor.

I was told some time ago that the millionaires have actually made it fashionable for young men to pay their tailors. This was a reform indeed, and the west end gasped with surprise. Only the most obstinate or the most impecunious of our gilded youth are holding out against the innovation so monstrously bourgeois. The tailors of course are delighted. They say that the reason the millionaires have started this idea is that they get discount for ready money, so you see that, like many another reform, the present one originates in no very exalted motive.—London Gentlewoman.

LURING A LANCEHEAD.

Presence of Mind in Dealing With a Deadly Serpent.

In a French paper is told a curious serpent story, the scene of which was the island of Martinique and the dramatis personae Sergeant Legrand and Private Durand and the snake a deadly lancehead.

The soldier had been punished with a night in the cells for some trivial offense, but as the night was very hot the sergeant had left the door open. In the morning at 5 o'clock Legrand went to wake his prisoner and, to his horror, beheld a lancehead snake coiled up and fast asleep on the man's breast.

The sergeant did not lose his presence of mind. He stole noiselessly away, ran to the guard room and, followed by all the men on duty, returned to the cell with a bowl of milk and a tin whistle. Placing the bowl of milk at the entrance to the cell, the sergeant began to play the "Blue Danube." It is needless to remark that the weakness of the lancehead is milk and music. The serpent, which was a six foot specimen, awoke, glided from the soldier's body toward the bowl, but it had no sooner buried its head in its beloved drink than ten cudgels descended on it with terrific force, killing it outright.

The soldier, Durand, who was in a swoon, was taken to hospital, where he lay for many days on the verge of madness. He finally recovered and related his horrible experience—how he had awoke in the middle of the night as the serpent was coiling itself on his bare breast and how he had lain there in an agony for hours, not daring to move a muscle.

THE LATEST FROM DAME FASHION

WHAT CAN BE DONE WITH RIBBONS

There are so many things that can be done with ribbons this season that one is not surprised to find whole costumes made of it, or better still, the ruffles and peplums that will furbish up an old dress. Of chiffon ribbon is the tier of ruffles that covers the pleated silk skirt and the chiffon corsage. Of the same chiffon ribbon is the little tango cape and the party bag that holds the dainty lady's fan and mouchoir.

ULSTERITES WIN

LONDON, May 28. — All eyes in Ulster were turned on the Tyrone county council elections yesterday, and there is great jubilation among the Ulsterites who have secured a narrow majority of one.

Voters crossed from Canada and the United States. When a Glasgow steamer with six Nationalists and one Unionist voter was delayed off Moville, it was alleged that the casualty had been planned. But the voters reached the booths just before closing time. The register, being a local government one, included women voters. Ulster remains as quiet as the grave.

Went To Death Blindfolded.

TRENTON, N.J., May 28.—To shut out the sight of the death chair and the witnesses, Raefaelo Longo, who was put to death in the state prison here Tuesday night for the murder of his cousin, insisted on blindfolding himself before leaving his cell.

Longo was married in the death house Monday night so that his wife, to whom he had been joined by religious ceremony many years ago, could obtain some property he possessed in Italy.

PROGRESS IN AVIATION.

Europe Is Far Ahead of America in Getting Practical Results.

Two German aviators, flying with the wind, have made 100 miles an hour. If that speed could be maintained in continuous flight it would be possible, for instance, to leave New York after a 6 o'clock breakfast and arrive in Chicago for lunch.

Perhaps Americans are not, as a rule, aware of the progress being made abroad in aviation under the spur of military competition and necessity. So far America has treated the dirigible more as a toy than as a possibility in air transportation on a large scale. The announcement that Count Zeppelin will visit America next year and bring with him his largest dirigible is interesting.

As regards aeroplanes also, Europe seems at present to be in the lead in developing an invention whose credit belongs to Americans—the Wright brothers. M. Sikorsky's great biplane has made repeated flights over St. Petersburg and its environs, carrying from eight to sixteen persons and remaining in the air from one and a half hours to two hours. Its passengers were able to move about comfortably in a roomy cabin warmed by the exhaust of the motors and look down from the glass windows, lighted at night by electricity, upon the metropolis below. It carries four motors of 100 horsepower, and a fifth is to be added to increase its speed. There is also an observation deck on the roof of the cabin, but it will probably be little used until aerial flights become more common and passengers have a secure feeling of safety. The great Russian biplane, in fact, almost completely realises a ship in air.—New York World.

On Dehorning Cattle

This is he best time of year to dehorn cattle. Nearly all agricultural papers are advising the use of caustic potash when calves are about three days old to prevent the growth of horns, but the writer found that in his case, at least, this method defeated the purpose, says Theodore Ross, Secretary for Agriculture for Prince Edward Island, in Farmer's Advocate. Cows that have been dehorned when calves, use their heads almost as viciously as if they had not been dehorned, and although they cannot tear one another, they frequently do serious damage. They are liable to be hard on fences, throwing off poles or batons and breaking down wire. If, however, their horns are allowed to grow till they are coming two years of age, and are then removed the cow is practically quieted for life. As yearlings, they are learning that their horns are their means of defence, but they have not yet been able to do any injury. When their horns are taken off at this age, they are completely defenceless, and are hardly ever troublesome. The writer has been dehorning regularly at this age for some years. About fifteen years ago we first dehorned cattle. A valuable mare had been hooked, and the experiment was the result. Of ten cows milking we dehorned nine, the remaining one was old and was besides very quiet. That evening some of them did not eat all their feed, and they were off in milk from two to nine pounds each. The morning they all took their feed as usual and were off from four to ten pounds each. The following evening all except one were up to the old standard and inside of a week we were getting from twenty to thirty pounds more milk daily from our ten cows than we had been before they were dehorned. That spring we used the caustic potash on our calves, as we did also for the next two years. The poll cows gave us considerable trouble and we attribute the loss of some premature calves to the fighting of the cows. Since that time we have dehorned regularly and with the best results. If done at this time of year, the cut is healed before the flies become troublesome.

Not a Very Big Bluff.

There is a story of a man from out of town who came to New York and fell not among thieves, but liars. He listened to the tales of those who haled him about the city, and they came at last to Spuyten Duyvil. The Palisades were pointed out to him, and he heard that the Hudson river scenery was the most beautiful in the world. He turned away and was not impressed.

"But," they remonstrated, "those bluffs of the Palisades are 800 feet high!"

"Well," he returned sadly, "I've learned to know that that isn't a very big bluff in New York."

The story does not go on from there, but it ought to add, as if it were a moral, that that man knew New York very well for a stranger.

IS KILLED BY LIGHTNING

Indian Struck While Hurrying for Shelter

HAMILTON, May 28. — Scurrying from the fierce rainstorm yesterday morning, a young Indian, James Smith, and others sought shelter beneath an old shack at Burlington, the property of W. C. Bell, Brant street.

A few minutes after half a dozen had gathered, a bolt of lightning struck the structure, stunning three or four and killing the Indian.

Boy May Die.

CHATHAM, May 28. — Wilfred Meredith, the 13-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Meredith of Chatham Township, was struck by lightning on his way to school yesterday morning. He was badly burned and it is doubtful if he can recover.

The lad and three companions were caught in a rainstorm and sought shelter under a tree. A heavy bolt of lightning struck the tree and all four boys were hurt.

Struck While On Roof.

ST. CATHARINES, May 28.—William Stevens was struck by lightning and seriously injured yesterday while putting a metal evetrough on the roof of his house. His brother, with whom he was working, escaped injury.

THE RULING PASSION.

Saving His Own Life Was a Strictly Business Proposition.

In the Wide World Magazine Malcolm Savage Treacher tells the story of a German mountain climber who did not forget to be economical even in the midst of deadly peril.

A party was crossing a glacier on the slope of Mont Blanc when one of the travelers called to the others to stop and listen. Strange cries came from the ice beneath their feet.

"Some one has fallen into a crevasse!" exclaimed one of the party. "His groans seem to indicate that he is already beyond help."

"We must do what we can in any case," responded one of the guides, and he began a long and perilous descent into what proved to be the bosom of a concealed crevasse. At the bottom they found the poor gentleman who had fallen. He was, however, quite unhurt, sitting comfortably upon a bench of ice.

"We've come to save you," said one of the guides.

"You save me?" answered the gentleman quite tranquilly. "How do you know I want to be saved?"

"Because you called to us for aid," said one of the bewildered guides.

"Perhaps I did," replied the German, "perhaps I didn't. You came anyhow. Now, what'll you take to rescue me?"

And before he would allow the guides to hitch him to the rope and drag him to the surface he compelled them to set down in writing the exact amount they would require for the performance of their life saving duty. He was a business man, whatever any one could say against him, and, moreover, he knew the guides of Switzerland.

SENSES OF PLANTS.

A Theory That Flowers See and Hear and May Even Talk.

Jean Viaud-Bruant, who is one of the most famous French horticulturists, has just published a little book on flowers, in which he advances the theory (I believe it is not entirely novel) that flowers both see and hear. As a young man, he says, he began to study flowers, for which he has always had a passion, and he sought to understand the habits of the blooms which he cultivated. When he saw the growing plant reach out toward the necessary support he asked himself whether the action was the result of volition and whether the plant had eyes.

M. Viaud-Bruant is now apparently convinced that flowers both hear and see. There are some that are sensitive to anaesthetic substances, ether in particular, which suggests the existence of a nervous system, like that of a nervous woman. And he would even credit them with something analogous to the power of speech.

"One knows," he writes, "that the perfume of flowers is a manifestation of vegetable life, a living radiation. Perfume is as much a vibration as an olfactory sensation. The perfume is the voice of the flower. A bouquet is a wordless romance. Each perfume or, rather, each odorous sensation corresponds with a certain rate of vibration. There is an analogy between the perceptions of sound, light and scent. The strong scent corresponds with the deep notes, while the delicate odors correspond with the shrill notes."—Paris Cor. Cincinnati Enquirer.

Pleasant Old Customs.

Hospital patients of today are better off than their ancestors of "the good old times." Mr. Wheatley in his book on "London" quotes from a Scottish act of parliament of 1386 to the effect that "gif ony man brings to the market corrupt swine or salmond to be sauld, they sall be taken by the baillie, and incontinent, without ony question, sall be sent to the leper folks," and if there be no lepers then only "sall they be destroyed utterlie." The same pleasant custom obtained in Oxford in the fifteenth century, where all putrid meat and fish was by statute sent to St. John's hospital.

HOUSES OF PORCELAIN.

Erected In a Few Hours Without Mortar, Plaster or Nails.

A home of porcelain that can be erected with a screwdriver and wrench in a few hours is the plan of W. H. Turner, who calls himself "the pioneer of porcelain."

"In the construction of the porcelain house," he said, "there is a complete absence of all absorbent materials, such as bricks and mortar, plaster, whitewash, concrete, woodwork and paper. The complete porcelain house is constructed as follows: Framework, preferably of light rust proof metal. In this framework are fitted the huge porcelain panels, half an inch thick, six feet long and three feet wide, weighing five pounds to the superficial foot, decorated and glazed on both sides to resist wind, storm and weather, with steam tight joints made of copper coated asbestos tape.

"Porcelain is nonabsorbent, insect and germproof, and fireproof and washable, and it makes possible for all a perfectly hygienic home. As for warmth an inch thick wall of pure porcelain glazed both sides is better able to keep out cold than an eighteen inch brick wall. With bricks and mortar it takes months to erect a house of, say, five rooms. A porcelain house of the same size can be put up in a few hours."—London Mirror.

London Criticises New York.

The little differences between life in London and New York are by no means all to the credit of the latter. Our letter post crosses London in a couple of hours; theirs often takes a couple of days to cross New York. In London the goods you purchase in the morning may be sent home before the evening; in New York you are lucky if they arrive next day. The parcel post, too, is quite a new thing in America, and the telegraph department has not yet advanced to the stage of allowing prepayment. Add to this such facts as the absence of "boots" in the hotels, the guests having to resort to the street corner "shiners," and the display of dustbins, even in fashionable streets, along after midday, and it will be seen that the "smart" and "slow" of which the American is so fond when comparing himself with us are not always to be applied as he applies them. —London Chronicle.

Fine Stock to Own.

The Colonial Diamond Mining company of German Southwest Africa is probably the world's biggest dividend payer. It "reduced" its 1913 dividend by 1,300 to 2,500 per cent, having paid 3,800 for 1912. In 1910 2,400 was paid and 2,500 in 1911. The company's capital is only $2,500. Its managing director and chief shareholder was once a humble railway official named Satuch. Now he is a multimillionaire. He will soon be made chairman of the German imperial diamond administration.

Music Born of Sorrow.

There is no nation naturally musical, according to Henri Bidou, critic and historian. If a nation is musical, he says, it is because it has passed through such tribulation that it has been driven to express its sorrow and anxiety in its airs and compositions. Bach, he declares, is the culminating expression of sufferings induced in Germany by the Thirty Years' war, fifty years before Bach's time.

People sing "like cowards," he continues, to keep up their spirits in bad moments, and he finds that the real countries of music are nearly all frontier provinces exposed to external vicissitudes.

England he finds exempt to a large extent from the occasions in which poets "learn in suffering what they teach in song" because it is protected from invasion by the girdle of the seas. Music, then, he argues, is not an art of peace; it originates in strife and anxiety, not in tranquillity and concord. The overprosperous countries, he discovers, "not only have no history; they have no music."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

By the Author.

Rabindranath Tagore, the Indian poet, who gained the $40,000 Nobel prize for literature, is a well known figure in London society, and to a London correspondent he said recently:

"In India the little children babble worse at the age of five or six. We are not like you. With you, if a full grown man or woman suddenly manages to write a few rimes the thing is deemed almost a miracle.

"I sat in a magazine office the other morning while the editor opened his mail. He tossed a letter to me.

"'That's the sort of thing I'm continually receiving,' he said.

"The letter ran:

"Dear Editor—The poem inclosed is original in me, and I had no help in thinking out same. It is a true poem. I wrote it myself, and there is more where it came from if I had any inducement to think same out. You may say 'Original' at the top of same, for every word is by

In His Own Words He Was "Snowed up" With Paper Treasures.

De Quincey's greatest extravagance grew out of the morbid value he set upon papers and their not being disturbed. He was in the habit of accumulating these until, in his own words, he was "snowed up," which meant that when matters reached such an extremity that there was not a square inch of room on the table to set a cup upon and no possibility of making his bed for the weight of papers gathered there; no chair which could be used for its legitimate purpose, and the track from the door to the fireplace, always kept open until the last, was completely obliterated so that he had not even place in which to set his foot—then De Quincey locked the door upon his paper treasures and turned elsewhere. At his death there were at least a half dozen such places "papered" by him and being maintained at no small expense.

Such a thing had been experienced as his actually "papering" his family out of house, but in later years his daughters learned how to guard against such a contingency.

De Quincey usually spent the evenings with his family, who looked forward to these hours with much pleasure. Upon the arrival of the newspaper he would render the news in his own quaint manner, questioning the various members of the group about him and illuminating the various subjects touched upon with a wealth of memories, good stories or human experiences until the happiest flow of real conversation sprang from the circumstances of the moment.

He was not a tranquilizing companion for nervous persons to live with, as those nights were the exceptions on which he did not set fire to something. It was a common occurrence for one of his daughters to look up from her work and to say casually, "Papa, your hair is on fire!" to which he would respond casually, "Is it, my love?" and a hand rubbing out the blaze was all the notice taken.

On one occasion, when the maid rushed in to announce that Mr. de Quincey's room was on fire, he hastened to the rescue of his already "snowed up" apartment, refusing all suggestions that water be poured upon his treasured papers. Armed with a heavy rug he disappeared into the burning room determined to conquer without water or perish in the attempt, while the members of his affrighted household trembled for his safety outside the door, locked to prevent the abhorred water from being poured in. Presently, after occasional bursts of smoke and a very strong smell of fire, all were assured that the danger was over, the victor emerged triumphantly from his fight with the flames, and the dreaded element having been subdued for the evening all retired in a state of thankfulness.—From Caroline Ticknor's "Hawthorne and His Publisher."

"When and why did James G. Blaine get his sobriquet, the Plumed Knight?" asked the Boston Globe man, who needn't think everybody has forgotten that Blaine was a candidate for the Republican nomination for president in 1876 and that Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll in placing his name before the national convention launched the sobriquet thus: "Like an armed warrior, like a plumed knight, James G. Blaine marched down the halls of the American congress and threw his shining lance full and fair against the brazen forehead of every defamer of this country and maligner of its honor." Woes of an Old Time Writer.

High among unconventional writers stands William Prynne, a London journalist in the days when there were no journals, days when a bulky pamphlet took the place of a letter to one's favorite newspaper. Prynne published about 200 of such pamphlets and is said to have averaged a sheet of print a day throughout his life. And he worked in a quilt cap coming over his eyes to shield them from the light, and stuck at his table all day, being served with a roll and a pot of beer every three hours. And he reaped the reward of his literary efforts in the branding and pillory and ear cropping that every political writer risked in that age.

Honesty in Golf.

The sooner a boy, or a man for that matter, learns to live up to the motto "Honesty is the best policy" in golf, as in other things, the better for him. There is no game which gives a competitor a better opportunity to cheat. But for that very reason there is no game in which the cheat, when discovered, as it usually is sooner or later, is looked upon with greater contempt. —Francis Ouimet in St. Nicholas.

A WEDDING PRESENT

She Simply Had to Have It.

By MARTHA McCULLOCH-WILLIAMS

"I won't! I say it! I mean it! I won't! Not now, never, nor the next day! So there!" Adela cried, her fingers tight in her ears and stamping her foot hard.

"That's a pity! Such a pity!" Billy Bruce murmured, with his most engaging smile. "A pity you say it, I mean, because I know and you know perfectly that you will."

"Who's going to make me, or what? Certainly not you, not the little old scrap of a fortune," Adela retorted, sticking out her chin. Billy laughed softly, hardly more than a chuckle.

"True, we don't amount to much, the fortune and I," he said. "Still, there's rather more to us than you can get any other way."

"Oh, you think so! Your modesty won't kill you, not for a long time yet," Adela broke in, with a wicked toss of the head. Billy made her his best bow, saying half plaintively: "You didn't notice I held up my fingers for quotation marks. I was quoting—from Rob Torrens. He talked you over down at the hotel."

"I don't believe it! How dared you let him? What did he say?" Adela shot at him, a round red spot blazing in either cheek.

"He didn't say much—after I got to him. Benny Driggs was with him. They were going on at a great rate until I came. No; he spoke no harm of—anybody. Indeed, he was more sensible than one might reasonably expect," Billy continued.

"Unless you tell me I shall go straight and ask him—ask him if he said anything at all about me," Adela cried, her lip curling faintly. Billy stood a thought straighter. "You can't do that. He's leaving on the evening train. It's due, just about," he said. "I don't think you can mean to imply that I'm lying. I wouldn't do that if it would make you love me. Torrens said this, as nearly as I can recall his words: 'It is a good thing the little Ware girl has her future all settled for her. She's pretty enough, madcap enough, to make history, lots of it, if she had a free rein. And really Billy Bruce, plus $50,000, ought to console her fairly for losing me.'"

"You—what did you say?" Adela demanded, sparks at the bottom of her eyes. Billy's mouth was set into a grimmish smile. "It didn't seem to me a time for talking," he said. "I said nothing, but Mr. Torrens got off the piazza—and thought he was going to get off the earth about two seconds later—while I explained to the rest that I felt myself insulted by the color of his politics."

"Is that why he's going away?" Adela asked in a faint, small voice. Billy nodded. "I reckon so," he said. "Maybe he'll write and give you another reason. I think he had engaged to call on you tonight."

Adela put both her hands over her face and for a minute cried stormily. Billy watched her with something big and hard in his throat. Suddenly she flung down her hands and faced him, teary and woebegone. She was badly spoiled, impatient withal and selfish with the selfishness of eighteen.

"By all the rules of the game I ought to give in to you at once," she said, snapping out the words, "but I won't do it. Go away! I hate you—almost as much as I hate that," stopping and choking. "I don't want to see you—ever again—not unless my mind changes. I do not want to see any man at all."

"All right, I'll vanish," Billy said half wistfully. "But, Dell, have you thought of this? If you mope at home, seeing nobody at all, the town will have it you're breaking your heart for Torrens. Now I think of it, my going will help a lot. You can reasonably be supposed to be grieving after me."

"Oh, you'll kill me!" Adela moaned. "But where are you going? Not that it matters—if only you stay away!"

"I shall stay a couple of years. It'll take about that time for leisurely globe trotting," Billy said craftfully. "I've all along had it in mind, though I didn't mention it. I hoped so much we could go together."

Adela stared at him, forgetting in her amazement to cry. "Of all things!" she ejaculated. "Why, Billy! I never thought you'd care to go a hundred miles from home. You—you've been always so careful about money. Not that you were mean, but you didn't"—

"Make a splash," Billy supplemented as she stopped for a word. "No. That always seemed to be foolish and in mighty bad taste. But I shall be able to afford a lot of things now. You see, I began to let the rents of my farm accumulate as soon as grandad's will was read, giving us to each other. Money grows a lot when you leave it for ten years and put more to it every little while. I kept my mouth shut about it, but many a time I've told myself, 'This to give Dell the wedding present she'll like best in the world.'"

"Why didn't you tell me?" Adela said fretfully. Billy smiled, but drew a long breath.

"Telling would have broken the charm," he said. "I wanted to surprise you, and I didn't want to bribe you into taking me. I shouldn't be telling you even now if you hadn't made me see there is no chance of our coming together."

"Then why don't you go away?" Adela said, more than ever fretful. She was on the verge of fresh tears—tears she would not for the world let him see. If life had depended on it she would not have admitted, even to herself, that they were more for the hurt to her pride involved in his going without her than for the crushing out of what but yesterday she had fancied was her one true love.

Torrens had awakened it—Torrens, with his gay elegance, his careless, easy assumption of authority, so unlike Billy's respectful adoration. Billy was the inevitable, the commonplace. Therefore she had resented him even more than she had resented the family disposition of her hand.

Torrens had fascinated her from the beginning. She had felt it would be so finely romantic to fling away a lover and a fortune for his dear sake. And he had asked her to do it—a hundred times at least—as plainly as anything could be asked without words.

And now he had gone at Billy's bidding—gone without a word to her. Sharp across her consciousness had come the whistle of the departing train. In a passion of anger and humiliation she turned again upon Billy, saying in her hardest voice:

"Go tell everybody you threw me over—because of—the other—and don't let me see you ever again!"

She was sorry for the speech before the gate shut behind Billy, sorrier still as the days drew into a week—a week full of stir and wondering over Billy's approaching departure. She had not seen him again even at a distance. Daily he walked a block about rather than pass her gate. He did more—gave up his share in the money, putting the whole of it safely in trust for Adela. When word of it was brought to her she turned away her face, ran upstairs and was invisible until next day.

Torrens had written—a light, graceful, lying letter, pleading imperative business in excuse for his seeming rudeness, and at the very end hinting at wishing her joy with Billy. She tore the letter furiously into small bits and next minute wished she had sent it to Billy instead.

Billy was going that night—upon the same train that had taken Torrens away. All day Adela thought of him. All day she fought with herself.

At 5 o'clock she began furiously to make some small preparations. At 6, cloaked and bonneted, with a traveling bag clinched in her hands, she stole down side streets to the station and shrank into hiding there.

Billy would not come for half an hour. The train came at 7, but she must be in time. She had on a thick veil and had chosen the most muffling of her wraps. Thus nobody recognized her, not even Billy when he came in, the center of a hearty group.

They laughed and jested with him, all talking at once and very fast. They slapped him on the shoulder and poked him in the ribs, but somehow they were not very merry. Billy himself was not merry, though he kept up his part manfully.

Adela, watching from her covert, saw lines in his face unseen before. Otherwise she might have lacked courage for the desperate thing she had to do. It was a desperate thing, considering what had come and gone, to walk out and say in a weak, small voice, but so all could hear: "Billy—I—have changed my mind. I—I want my wedding present after all. Yes, there's time. I—I sent word to the minister to have everything ready, you see. I knew I could depend on you."

FOSSAL BALM
Goes Right to the Spot

If you have a cold in the head—if your nasal passages are inflamed, stuffed up, smarting—or if you suffer from chronic nasal catarrh—you can get quick relief by using Fossal Balm.

This is an antiseptic, healing salve put up in a collapsible tube so formed as to make it remarkably easy to use. When the elongated cap is removed it uncovers the nozzle-shaped end of the tube, about half an inch long. This is inserted in the nose and the tube squeezed gently, depositing a little of the Balm well up in the nasal passages. A little rubbing of the nose, and the indrawn breath, distribute the Fossal Balm throughout the passages, where it comes directly into contact with the inflamed membranes and the germs of disease. The latter it kills — the former it soothes and heals. The smarting irritation disappears — the nostrils are cleared, making breathing easy—and the catarrhal conditions, if they exist, are corrected.

Get a 50c tube of Fossal Balm from your Druggist, or write for it direct to us. National Drug and Chemical Co. of Canada, Limited, Montreal.

Cookery Notes

Careful Marketing.

The art of marketing properly is one which requires considerable study and skill, and the exact needs of the household should be ascertained to a nicety. There is no need to buy four herrings when three are ample, neither is it wise to buy perishable goods in large quantities.

Where one person has to plan the entire work of the household special care must be devoted to the marketing to allow sufficient time for the cooking and leave the mistress of the house leisure to attend to domestic matters.

A list of the various meat, fish, vegetables, etc., which are in season each month should be kept handy, and when the housewife takes her walks abroad to do the required amount of shopping she will know exactly what can be found in the shops and by careful experience note where the best quality of goods can be obtained for the smallest possible expenditure.

Food of poor quality is never economical. Doubtful eggs are a most unsatisfactory investment. Far better pay a little more for a reliable article than make an unwise purchase. This same remark applies to fish, meat and vegetables.

All goods which deteriorate quickly should be renewed daily. Butter should be as pure as possible and after purchasing should be removed from the paper and kept in a cool larder till required.

The choice of eggs is always rather a precarious venture, one fairly reliable proof being that if the egg appears clear when held before a lighted candle it may generally be assumed that it is fresh.

Good Coffee.

An authority on culinary matters says that in making good coffee a great deal depends on the kind of coffee that is used. The price is not always to be depended on in selecting it. Sometimes better results may be obtained with a moderately priced coffee than with an expensive kind. The best plan is to experiment until you find a kind that is satisfactory and then stick to that and to the dealer who supplies it. The quality of coffee is often influenced by the way it is kept in the shop; also sometimes when out of one grade an unreliable grocer will substitute another and cheaper quality. In the buying of coffee much depends on the good faith of the dealer.

A correspondent claims that she makes splendid coffee for breakfast in the following way: She uses a scant tablespoonful of coffee to a cup of water for each person. She puts it in the coffee pot with cold water in the evening before going to bed. In the morning she lets it boil for ten minutes, then sets it back on the stove and lets it simmer for another ten or fifteen minutes. In this way she extracts all the strength there is in the coffee.

An Administration Dainty.

The charlotte russe being a favored dessert at the White House and grape juice in the menage of the secretary of state, it would seem that the grape juice charlotte russe would be popular in administration circles. To make it take a quarter cupful of cold grape juice, one-half cupful of hot grape juice, one teaspoonful of gelatin, one-half cupful of sugar, one-half cupful of double cream, white of one egg, one tablespoonful of lemon juice, lady fingers, candied violets. Soak the gelatin for five minutes in the one-quarter cupful of cold grape juice, then dissolve in the hot grape juice. Add the sugar and lemon juice and let stand till cold. Beat the white of egg stiffly and gradually beat the grape juice mixture into it. Beat till it will hold its shape, keeping in ice water meanwhile. Line glasses with lady fingers and pour in the mixture. Decorate with the cream, beaten firm, and the candied violets.

Dutch Cabbage.

The good housewives of Holland are fond of cooking cabbage as follows: Take a small head of white cabbage cut in fine shreds, four tart apples peeled and sliced, one large tablespoonful of butter or drippings, a tablespoonful of salt, half a teaspoonful of pepper and a sprinkling of cheese or nutmeg. Stir over a slow fire for at least three hours. Mix together one tablespoonful of vinegar, a little flour (not more than a level teaspoonful) and a tablespoonful of jelly. Just before taking from the fire add this mixture to the cabbage. Let it boil up once or twice and serve.

Croquettes of Macaroni.

Boil one-quarter pound of macaroni in salted water until very tender. Drain and toss in saucepan with one tablespoonful of butter, half an ounce of Parmesan cheese, quarter of an ounce of cooked tongue cut in dice. Spread on a buttered platter, cover with buttered paper, press it well down and set away to cool. Divide with a knife into five parts, roll each one in grated cheese, then in beaten eggs and in cracker crumbs. Drain and serve on a folded napkin.

Baked Pumpkin.

Peel and cut some pumpkin into dice and stew until tender, but not soft. Drain and when cold place in a buttered baking dish, add half a cupful of sugar, a saltspoonful of salt and a tablespoonful of butter. Bake brown.

One swallow will eat at least 6,000 flies a day.

RATTLED THE ENEMY.

An Uncanny Scotch Ruse That Sent Them Flying In Terror.

Many a fighting Percy shared in English battles by land and sea and rarely did one of them come to grief. But in "Highways and Byways in the Border," by the late Andrew Lang and his brother John, the honored name is linked with a story of defeat in 1372 the Lord Percy of that day, the English warden of the marches, at the head of 7,000 men lay encamped not far from the river Tweed.

"To scare away from their poor little crops the deer and wild cattle that were wont, when night fell, to ravage them, the Scotch country folk of that district used to sound at frequent intervals a primitive kind of drum. To the ends of long poles they fixed what may best be termed huge rattles, made of dried skins tightly stretched over semicircular ribs of wood. Inside each skin they put a few round pebbles. When shaken vigorously these rattles would give out a noise quite terrifying to any four footed animal, especially when heard in the stillness of the night."

The clever Scotchmen planned a stampede, and in the pitchy blackness of midnight sent a number of picked men carrying their rattles carefully poised and muffled, who stole unperceived from bush to bush and from stone to stone until they were close upon the enemy's camp on the heights at either side. Then they sounded the rattles with a sudden din truly infernal.

Picketed horses, mad with terror, broke loose, rushed through the camp and trampled over the sleeping soldiers. Those who sprang awake, deafened and bewildered by the unholy uproar which but a few comprehended, were seized with a panic scarcely less abject than that of their horses. Many fled. The rest found themselves, as dawn broke, without either mounts, transport animals or baggage, all of which had been captured by the wily Scots. On foot, in wrath and humiliation, Percy and his 7,000 fell back across the Tweed.

Seldom in sober fact and modern slang has a formidable force been so easily and completely rattled!

A MESSAGE TO MOTHER.

It Came With the Passing of Her Dearly Beloved Babe.

It is time for me to go, mother; I am going. When in the paling darkness of the lonely dawn you stretch out your arm for your baby in the bed I shall say, "Baby is not there"—mother, I am going.

I shall become a delicate draft of air and caress you, and I shall be ripples in the water when you bathe and kiss you and kiss you again.

In the gusty night when the rain patters on the leaves you will hear my whisper in your bed, and my laughter will flash with the lightning through the open window into your room.

If you lie awake, thinking of your baby until late in the night, I shall sing to you from the stars, "Sleep, mother, sleep."

On the straying moonbeams I shall steal over your bed and lie upon your bosom while you sleep.

I shall become a dream, and through the little opening of your eyelids I shall slip into the depths of your sleep, and when you wake up and look round, startled like a twinkling firefly, I shall flit out into the darkness.

When on the great festival of puja the neighbors' children come and play about the house I shall melt into the music of the flute and throb in your heart all day.

Dear auntie will come with puja presents and will ask, "Where is our baby, sister?" Mother, you will tell her softly, "He is in the pupils of my eyes; he is in my body and in my soul."—From "The Crescent Moon," by Rabindranath Tagore.

Business and Army Recruits.

Army officers are apt to smile at the very time that business men wear grave faces. When trade and industry fall off the applicants for enlistment are also of so superior quality as to make glad the hearts of recruiting officers. Young men thrown out of work, especially those who are not expert, but "fit in" to trades and callings, are inclined to think that Uncle Sam's service presents the attraction of steady pay to the steady, even if the monthly wage is not more than $15. The army half loaf is better than the civilian no bread.—Boston Transcript.

"Knocked Into a Cocked Hat."

The meaning of this expression is not generally known. "Cocked hat" was a variety of the game of tenpins, in which only three pins were used, set up at the angles of a triangle. When in bowling at tenpins all were knocked down except the three at the corners the set was said to be "knocked into a cocked hat," whence the popular expression for depriving anything of its main body, character or purpose.—London Express.

Rubber Erasers.

India rubber was used for the first time as an eraser in 1770, when a very small piece was sold for 3 marks. It was, however, many years later before it was put into general use. Prior to this the crumb of bread was used for erasing purposes.—London Mail.

For the Children

Leopold of Belgium Would Be an Air Man.

Prince Leopold, heir to the throne of Belgium, doesn't care very much about his prospects as a ruler; he would much rather be an aeronaut. The young prince, who is besides Duke of Brabant, was thirteen last November and is a very robust and handsome lad. For some time he has taken the keenest interest in flying, but as yet his father, King Albert, has refused to gratify his heart's desire. Before he was set on being an aviator he was a poet. But his younger brother Charles, Count of Flanders, and his little sister, Princess Marie, made so much sport of his productions that he gave up writing verse. Perhaps in a few more years, if some new fad does not catch him, he may have an aeroplane of his own.

If the Shoe Fits.

For this game have each child remove his shoes and place them in a big box having a lid that can be partially removed. When all are in mix them thoroughly and then have the children each draw two shoes from the box. These he must put on whether they fit him or not, and thus shod he is to follow the leader wherever he may go. Some will be wearing two rights, some two lefts, some shoes in which they can only get their toes and some shoes much too large for them. The leader may go up or downstairs, through a darkened cellar or over chairs and stools with his ever lessening band of followers, for many will fall by the way. When time is called the one nearest him wins the prize.

The Wearing of Hats.

Jews wear their hats in the synagogues. The Friends also sit covered during the offering of prayers, which are said aloud.

Formerly it appears that the custom in the Church of England was for the men to sit covered during sermon time.

In an old book it is asserted that when Richard Cox, bishop of Ely, died in 1581 and was buried in Ely cathedral the congregation, a very great one, sitting in the choir to hear the funeral sermon, all covered.

Evelyn in 1664 mentions in his diary that he had caught a severe cold by flinging off his hat at dinner.

The hat, therefore, was very much more popular in ancient times than it is now.

Trick With Numbers.

Tell your friends to think of a number, multiply by 6, divide by 3, add 40, divide by 2; then let him name the result and you can tell him the number he thought of. The method is: Multiplying by 6 and dividing by 3 gives twice the number. Add 40 and you have twice the number plus 40. Divide by 2 and you have once the number plus 20; hence, if you subtract 20 from the result he gives you, you will have the number he first thought of.

Saved by Boy Scouts.

A recent fire in the Stoddard Baptist home at Garfield Heights, near Washington, D. C., endangered the lives of the seventeen aged inmates. A party of boy scouts from Anacostia, on a march in the neighborhood, carried out those who were ill, crippled and infirm from age. All the inmates were negroes.

A Vacuum Abhorred.

What is that which a young girl looks for, but does not wish to find? A hole in her stocking.

The Frost Fairy.

I wonder who sits up all night,
All night in the cold and rain,
To make the little stars of ice
That stick to the window pane,
The stars of ice and tiny ferns,
Just like all the ferns that grew
Down by the summer wood, except
That these are made out of snow.

I've blown on them until they melt
Right down the long window pane,
Next morning when I come to look
They are shining there again!
Some fairy with her scissors comes
When I am asleep, I know,
And clips the little stars of ice
And the tiny ferns of snow.
I don't see how she cuts them out
So straight in the dark—do you?—
And never nips a single leaf
Or cuts any star in two.

Tucking a Lace Blouse.

Instead of putting machine stitched plaits or tucks in a lace blouse or one of very fine material, catch the tucks down with French knots.

These can be worked in any shade you desire or can be white or the color that matches the blouse.

Net and lace are sure to shrink when washed, causing the machine stitching to pucker or break when the garment is ironed or pulled into shape. In any case the French knots make a very attractive trimming.

When the Thread Breaks.

If the thread breaks when sewing upon heavy linen rub the back of the cloth with white soap and you will have no more difficulty.

Keep in mind while working with colored silks not to dampen the ends of the threads in your mouth before trying to thread the needle. The silks are colored with poisonous matter, and quite often persons have suffered intensely from poison contracted in this manner. Dampen the finger tips and twist the thread.

A DEAD FLY
May be as Dangerous as a Live One!

It is certainly more repulsive, and, if left, will breed far more disease than ever it did when alive.

It is not sufficient to kill the fly. You must destroy the germs as well. These, if allowed to multiply, will spread disease and death. Give up using the fly swatter and the unsanitary sticky fly paper.

Buy WILSON'S FLY PADS—the only really effective method of exterminating the death-dealing housefly. They kill all the flies in the house in a few hours. No dead flies left lying about.

Be careful to follow directions found in each packet.

THE TAVERN AT OLD HADLEY

An Episode in the Days of Ghosts and Witches.

By F. A. MITCHEL

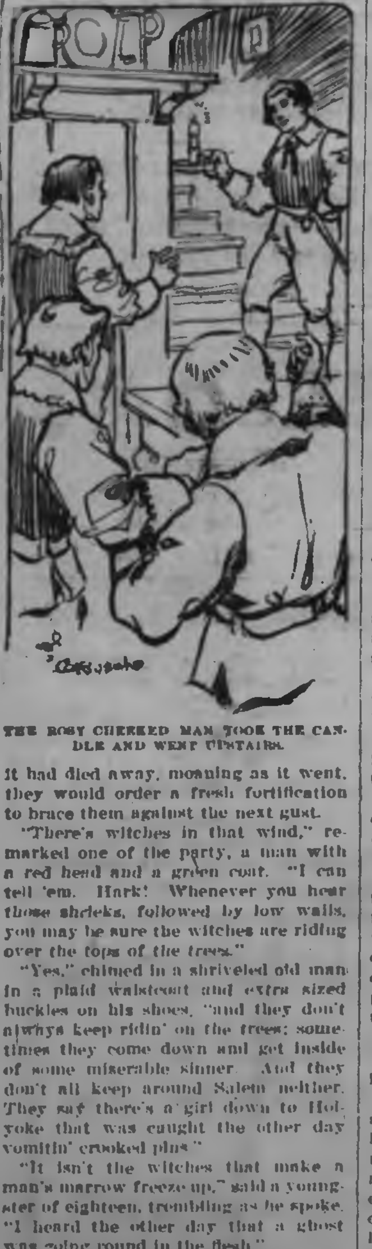
There is a town in Massachusetts that smacks as much, if not more, of the early colonial times than any other in North America. Its name is Hadley, and they call it Old Hadley, but why it is considered necessary to mention the fact of its age is not apparent. Certainly no one would ever look upon it as young Hadley.

Land was cheap when Hadley was settled. Consequently they laid out the main street of the town as wide as a modern block is long, with two rows of trees on each side, a row within a stone's throw of the houses, the other row within calling distance of the houses on the other side—that is, by a strong pair of lungs.

Later the settlers laid out another street not far from the first, but since there has never been use for two parallel streets in Hadley the first is now deserted. But the same trees planted several hundred years ago still stand there.

At one end of the street to which the town was moved there is a dwelling which in the olden time was the tavern. The bar is still there over which formerly passed many a mug of flip, but it is now dry. The visitor looks longingly upon it, half expecting to see the landlord hand out the steaming beverage, then turns away in disappointment, and the curtain that hides the bar is lowered.

One cheerless night long ago when the trees were throwing their great arms about in the wind a party sat in this barroom endeavoring to bear up against the weather by a frequent calling on the landlord for flip. They said it was the weather that rendered the stimulant necessary, but that was an age of superstition, and the real reason for their potations was a fear of ghosts. Every time a gust of wind would shriek through the trees above them the color would leave their faces, and when it had died away, moaning as it went, they would order a fresh fortification to brace them against the next gust.



THE ROSY CHEEKED MAN TOOK THE CANDLE AND WENT UPSTAIRS.

"There's witches in that wind," remarked one of the party, a man with a red head and a green coat. "I can tell 'em. Hark! Whenever you hear those shrieks, followed by low wails, you may be sure the witches are riding over the tops of the trees."

"Yes," chimed in a shriveled old man in a plaid waistcoat and extra sized buckles on his shoes, "and they don't always keep ridin' on the trees; sometimes they come down and get inside of some miserable sinner. And they don't all keep around Salem neither. They say there's a girl down to Holyoke that was caught the other day vomitin' crooked pins."

"It isn't the witches that make a man's marrow freeze up," said a youngster of eighteen, trembling as he spoke. "I heard the other day that a ghost was going round in the flesh."

"You don't mean it!" exclaimed the man in the plaid waistcoat, taking his clay pipe from his mouth that his chattering teeth might not bite off the stem. "I hope he won't come in here."

At that moment there was heard [illegible] a creaking and a splashing, [illegible] in a few [illegible] the Springfield coach drove up to the door. Among those who alighted was a man with a waxy complexion and dark rings around his eyes. As he entered with a measured tread [illegible] every one looked at him. The man in the plaid waistcoat made his escape through a rear door. Another arrival, the exact opposite of the waxy faced man—a rosy cheeked young fellow—shook the wet off him, kicked the mud off his boots and said:

"A mug of flip, landlord, and be quick about it."

The landlord scuttled back for the beverage, and the rosy cheeked man looked about him for a seat. The waxy faced man had seated himself at a table where there were others, but one by one they had arisen and gone somewhere else. The red cheeked party marched up to the table where the ghostly looking man sat and, drawing out a chair, settled himself in it. The others in the room looked on with holy horror, for the man's waxy flesh and dark rimmed eyes gave him the appearance of being an animated corpse.

"Friend," said the rosy man, "will you have a mug of punch with me? You look as if you needed something to warm you up."

"I'm not to be warmed," replied the other in a sepulchral voice.

"Where did you get that earthy smell there is about you?"

"Young man, do you wish to communicate with the dead?"

"Reckon I'm doing that now."

"Go up to your room, blow out the candle, and you will see your grandfather."

"Who'll bring him?"

"I will."

"You! Do you suppose I'm going upstairs to sit in a cold room in the dark while you stay down here with your nose in a mug of steaming punch? Thank you, I know when I am well off. However, I've 10 shillings in my pocket. I'll bet you that you can't call up the ghost of my grandfather or any other ghost."

"Ten shillings!" replied the waxy man contemptuously. "Do you suppose that I court material things?"

"Well, if you don't want the money you can give it for charity."

"Charity! Yes, but what is 10 shillings for charity? Make it £10 and I consent."

His vis-a-vis looked through his pockets and found only the 10 shillings and a few coppers.

"Friends," he said, "this man is an impostor. He is going about trying to impress people with the belief that he has something supernatural about him. If you'll stand by me I'll show him up. Raise the £10 among you to match his stake, and you'll be the richer by that amount."

This gave courage to the others, and a desire sprang up among those present to discover whether the waxy man was really one from the dead or playing on their credulity. But it must be remembered that a desire for money was as fixed among our ancestors as in us. An effort was made to raise the stake, but failed, since there was not so much money among the company. The most that could be obtained was £6. However, the waxy man generously offered to accept this stake instead of the larger amount, and the money was put up on both sides.

"Who's to hold the stakes?" asked the rosy cheeked man. "For my part, I would be willing that the man with whom I am betting should do so—that is, if he remains here in this room till the wager is settled."

"I hold the money!" replied the other sternly. "I never touch money except—except when I am as men are. Hold the stakes yourself!"

He said this in such a ghostly tone that it brought back something of the former fear of those present. So great was the awe that the gaping settlers did not think to protest when the rosy cheeked man stuffed the money in his pocket and, taking a candle, started upstairs.

"What number, landlord?" he asked.

"No. 8," replied the landlord, handing him a key.

When the man's footsteps had died away, a profound silence fell on the house. The man from the grave sat motionless, alone, at his table, and nearly every eye in the room was fixed upon him. The wind, which had continued to blow, gave several prolonged howls, at the end of which the man who had gone upstairs was heard to give a shriek, indicating some frightful experience. The man who had agreed to introduce him to his grandfather rolled his eyes about over the company, as if in triumph. No one stirred. Presently the landlord plucked up courage and started upstairs. He was followed first by the most courageous, afterward by the others. The door of No. 8 was found to be locked. The landlord called to the man within, but, receiving no answer, he broke it down and found the chamber empty.

"He's been spirited away," suggested the man with the plain waistcoat, shuddering.

"Didn't I tell you," said the youngster who had made the prediction, "that a ghost was going around in the flesh? He's the man downstairs."

By this time it was noticed that a sash in the bedroom was open, and it occurred to the landlord that the occupant had dropped out through the window. It was no great distance to the ground and a very easy fall.

"My friends," he said thoughtfully, "it's my opinion we've been robbed. He's gone with the money."

He hurried downstairs to find the waxy man. He, too, had vanished.

"What say you, friends?" said the landlord. "Shall we give chase to these rascals?"

"What!" protested the man with the red head and green coat. "Give chase on a night like this? I prefer to lose the few shillings I contributed to curiosity."

"No one has lost very much," said the landlord. "Come, gentlemen. We may as well drown our disappointment. I'll brew a bowl of punch for the purpose."

A couple of hundred years have passed since this episode took place in the tavern at Old Hadley. The low building still stands on the broad street. Of a windy night there is a thrashing of branches, a moaning in the trees, but the age of ghosts and witches has passed, and the present inhabitants turn over in their beds without a shudder.

Lacked Tact.

"A fellow told me today," confided Mr. D'Ipple, "that I didn't know enough to pound sand. He said that I was the blamedest idiot he ever saw. Now, what do you think of that?"

"I think it was dreadfully tactless of him," exclaimed Miss Keene indignantly.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Considerate.

"And would you marry me if I were a poor girl, working for a living?" asked the heiress.

"Darling," responded the accepted suitor, "it wouldn't be fair. You'd be doing enough in supporting yourself."—Philadelphia Ledger.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Sleepless Children.

Indigestion, hunger, excitement, too much home work in their lessons, fear of the dark and loneliness are the principal causes of sleeplessness in children.

Indigestion can generally be cured by giving them a pinch of bicarbonate of soda in a wineglassful of water.

If a child be hungry it should be fed, a glass of warm milk and some biscuits or any other light and easily digested food being given half an hour before going to bed.

No child under twelve or thirteen years of age should be allowed to study between supper and bedtime. It only tires the young brain and produces worry about the following day's work.

When a child is afraid of the dark it cannot help it and must be humored and treated with sympathy. It should be taught how baseless its fears are, but at the same time a light should be left in the room, care being taken that it does not cast dark shadows on walls and ceiling. The door should be left open that the child may hear the voices of others in the house.

Exciting games should not be played and exciting stories should not be told too near bedtime.

Treeless Falkland Islands.

There are no trees in the Falkland islands, consequently the country presents a bleak appearance. In the autumn the long grass, turning somewhat grayish, imparts a disagreeable and monotonous aspect to the hillside. On the return of spring the ranchers used to have a glorious time of it in literally setting the camp on fire. This was done by simply striking a match on the saddle pommel and casting it into the midst of the withered grass. No coaxing was needed, as the material was withered and dry as tinder. Presently the mountain side would be fringed with one long line of raging flames and curling smoke. Thus was the pasture renewed. Although no trees grow in these islands, there is ample evidence of the land having once been thickly wooded.—Chambers' Journal.

Old Dances In Old Times.

In Edward Scott's "Dancing In All Ages" are some curious details about the dances of old England.

"Joan Sanderson" was a "jolly dance" in Mr. Scott's definition, for before it was ended each lady had kissed all the gentlemen twice, and each man had been equally enterprising. Mary Stuart danced the "Volta," though "not so high and so disposedly" as Elizabeth. In King Charles' time people danced "Trenchmore," the "Cushion Dance," "Omnium Gatherum" and "Hoite cum Toite."

"All In a Garden Green," "Gathering of Peascods," "Lumps of Pudding," "Under and Over," "The Bath," "The Slaughter House" and "Have at Thy Coat, Old Woman," are dances not quite so old.

Gardening.

God Almightie first Planted a Garden, and indeed it is the Purest of Human pleasures. It is the Greatest Refreshment to the Spirits of Man; without which Buildings and Palaces are but Grosse Handyworks: And a man shall ever see that when Ages grow to Civility and Elegancie, Men come to Build Stately sooner than to Garden Finely; As if Gardening were the Greater Perfection.—Bacon.

The Demagogue Defined.

"Father," said a small boy, "what is a demagogue?"

"A demagogue, my son, is a man who can rock the boat himself and at the same time persuade everybody that there's a terrible storm at sea."—Woman's Journal.

CONTRARY FORCES.

Problem of a Bullet Fired From the Rear of a Moving Train.

Replying to the question, "Supposing, to use an overdrawn illustration, that a railroad train was going forward at the rate of 100 miles per minute and a gun was fired from the rear of the train in the opposite direction. If the velocity of the bullet as it left the gun would also have been 100 miles per minute had the gun been discharged by a person standing on solid ground, would the bullet leave the gun at all, and if so, at what rate of speed?" Edgar Lucien Larkin in the New York American says:

"The bullet would leave the muzzle of the gun with a speed of 100 miles per minute; the force of the explosive in the gun is the cause of the motion of the bullet, not that of the train. At the exact end of one minute the rear of the train and the bullet would be 200 miles apart. Before the gun is fired the bullet is moving with the train; at time of firing the bullet is at rest during an infinitesimal of time or a differential of time. The time in between the stopping of the motion of the bullet with the train and beginning of motion from the train is mathematically called a consecutive state and is such an important element of human knowledge that the highest branch of mathematics, the differential calculus, only is able to completely explore its wonderful properties."

KAFFIR "BOY" SERVANTS.

They Bathe and Oil Themselves and Then Don Filthy Clothes.

Most of the "domestic" work in South Africa is done by the Kaffirs, who are called "boys," no matter what their age may be.

When the Kaffir boys come from the kraals no one ever uses their native names. As soon as they are brought into contact with the whites they take a "white" name. This produces results not lacking in the elements of humor.

Among the house boys "Knife," "Fork" and "Spoon" are common names. "Table," "Chair," "Carriage," "Watch" and "Matchbox" are others more infrequently used. There is of record one boy who took the utilitarian name of "Ham and Eggs."

The Kaffirs are very fond of rice when they learn to eat it among the whites, and one stable boy thought he had found the finest name in the world in "Rice."

In some respects the Kaffirs are the cleanest people in the world. They are forever scrubbing themselves in hot water and anointing themselves with oil afterward. But the habit does not extend to their clothes. They will take an elaborate bath and then don clothes that never saw the washtub.—Washington Star.

Old Book Advertisement.

The advertising of children's books does not seem to have advanced in ingenuity since the time of old John Newbery. Here is a specimen of his art from the Morning Chronicle in December, 1767: "This day was published 'Nurse Truelove's New Year's Gift, or the Book of Books For Children,' adorned with cuts and designed as a present for every little boy who would become a great man and ride upon a fine horse and to every little girl who would become a great woman and ride in a lord mayor's gilt coach. Printed for the author, who has ordered these books to be given gratis to all little boys and girls at the Bible and Sun in St. Paul's churchyard, they paying for the binding, which is only twopence each book."—London Chronicle.

Strict About Guns.

Any one who handles a gun in Germany is held to more strict accountability than in America. A member of a hunting party in Prussian Saxony asked permission of a comrade to examine his gun. The owner handed it over, and while the man was examining it the gun was discharged, instantly killing a young woman standing near by. The owner of the gun was sentenced to one year's imprisonment, while the man who was handling the gun has to serve only a six months' term. The court held that the owner was criminally negligent in not withdrawing the cartridge. The man who held the weapon was treated more leniently because he was an inexperienced hunter.

No Particular Hurry.

Brown and his wife were at a moving picture show.

In the play on the screen the villain had just thrown the hero from a high cliff.

"Oh," exclaimed Mrs. Brown, "I hope the officers hurry up and catch the wretch!"

"Have patience, dear," said her husband. "The operator is turning the reel as fast as he dares."—Judge.

Borneo's Animal Curiosities.

In Borneo winged creatures are encountered where one would least expect them. Flying fish the size of herrings are found in all the waters, and there is the flying fox, the well known fruit eating bat, which the Malays call "kruang."

Unsympathetic.

"Does Alice bring her troubles to you now as she used to?"

"No; not since I began pointing out to her that she was to blame for having them."—Boston Transcript.

HUNTING THE CHINCHILLA.

Andean Natives Use Trained Dogs or a Sort of Weasel.

High up on the eastern slope of the Andes, in sections of Peru, Bolivia and Chile, the chinchilla has its habitat. Living at an elevation from 8,000 to 12,000 feet above the level of the sea, its chilly home is responsible for its thick, warm coat and also largely for the exorbitant price it brings. Such coats are hard to get and not plentiful, therefore they are wanted.

"It is a hopping rodent mammal," writes W. A. Reid of the chinchilla in the Bulletin of the Pan-American Union, "somewhat resembling our common squirrel, and when standing upon its hind legs, as it does when eating, the similarity is even more noticeable. Ordinarily the body of the animal is about ten inches in length, exclusive of the tail. It is covered with a gray fur, soft and silky, which on the sides is about an inch long.

"Chinchillas burrow in the ground and live together in villages, like our prairie dogs. The natives of the Andean regions hunt them with trained dogs or with grisons. What is a grison? The South American cousin to our weasel and just about as cunning, and he easily slips into the rocky crevices, where the chinchilla seeks to hide, and captures it.

"Since the fur of the chinchilla was first introduced into Europe during the earlier part of the nineteenth century the price of the skins has soared until a lady's muff and collar of only medium size made of this material command a price of $500 or more."

Printing Office Dialogues.

There must be some amusing conversations in a newspaper composing room, according to a young man who works in a printing office and who declares that dialogues like the following are of frequent occurrence:

Foreman of the Office—Brown, what are you doing now?

Compositor—I'm finishing "Setting a House on Fire;" most done.

Foreman—What's Jones about?

Compositor—He's finishing that "Awful Murder."

Foreman—Tell him to hurry it up and take hold of this "Runaway Horse." Morse, what have you on hand?

Morse—"Solid Men of Boston."

Foreman—Well, be sure and put them in small caps and then get busy with "A Warm Winter."—Youth's Companion.

Story Tellers and Liars.

A chap may be a great story teller when he's out at night with the crowd, but he's only a plain, ordinary, everyday liar, without any originality at that, when he gets home and begins to explain why he stayed out so late.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Mrs. Garrulous—I was outspoken in my sentiments at the club this afternoon. Her Husband—I can't believe you. Who outspoke you, my dear?—London Mail.

Genial Man.

"What's the use?" rejoined Mr. Groucher. "I can get tired without going to all that trouble."—Washington Star.

My Swimming Prize

It Was Lost, But Was Found

By JOHN TURNLEE

My summer outings are invariably passed at the seashore, for I am not only fond of the salt air, but of the salt water. I love to breathe the former and bathe in the latter. I learned to swim when I was a little girl eight years of age, and as I grew older improved so rapidly that I was at home as much in the water as out of it.

But one summer while swimming at a seaside resort I was taught the difference between the water and the land. I was swimming beyond the ropes, with no one near me, when I was taken with cramps. I called for help, but was too far from the shore for my cries to be heard. Fortunately a pier extended near me into the ocean and on the pier was a man. What he was doing there I did not know at the time. Indeed, I did not know that he was there. All I did know came to me after an interval of unconsciousness. Then I was lying on the sand with persons about me, some of whom were making me very uncomfortable by trying to get water out of me.

My first act on recovering my senses was to put my hand on my breast, where I expected to find a gold Maltese cross that was there when I went into the water. It was gone. Singularly enough my loss crowded out of my mind the fact that I had barely escaped drowning. The cross was a prize I had won at a swimming match when I was fifteen years old. I always wore it in the water and never at any other time. When I did not find it on feeling for it I assumed that it had become detached from me while I was being brought out of the surf.

Of course I asked questions as to how I came to be rescued. All I could learn was that a man saw me from the pier, jumped off into the water and swam for me. Before jumping he shouted to those on the beach, secured their attention and a boat was sent out for me. My rescuer reached me when I came to the surface and swam with me toward the beach. Those in the boat made such poor progress that he got me into shallow water almost before they got the boat launched. Indeed, I was not taken into it at all.

PINNED TO HIS BATHING SUIT WAS MY MALTESE CROSS.

As to the man who saved my life, I could gather very little about him. This was probably due to the fact that when I had recovered from my illness all those who had witnessed the rescue had left the place for their homes. At any rate, I could not find a person who was on the beach when I was brought ashore.

The next winter I was visiting a friend in a neighboring city and enjoying one social function after another. Jenny Hatch, the girl I visited, had known me from childhood and had often been with me in the water when I wore my prize won at the juvenile swimming match. One evening after a ball Jenny told me that she had seen during the evening my cross, or one exactly like it, on the lapel of a young man's coat. She had no acquaintance with him, consequently she could not speak to him about it. I asked her why she had not contrived to secure an introduction to him, whereupon she reminded me that it was the privilege of the man to ask for an introduction to a woman, not a woman's privilege to ask an introduction to a man.

The incident reopened the matter of my rescue the summer before. Could it be possible that my little cross was not under water after all, but had fallen into the possession of a stranger? My name was engraved on it as well as a statement of how it had been won. Why had this person worn it on the lapel of his coat instead of on his watch charm if indeed he must wear it at all? If I could have a look at it I could tell whether or not it was mine without looking at the inscription on the back. I charged Jenny if she saw the man who wore it again to leave no stone unturned to discover where he got it.

Several of my girl friends knew of the matter, and one of them came to me one day with a story that she had seen a young man at a reception who wore on his breast a gold Maltese cross. She had taken pains to ask one who knew him what it meant and was informed that it was a decoration given for saving life.

Naturally this story served to stimulate the interest already excited in me with regard to the decoration and its wearer. Was there any connection between my rescue and this man? I had always regretted not being able to express my gratitude to my rescuer, and now a wild hope sprang up within me that he had been discovered—discovered, but not attained. He was drifting near me as one ship may drift near another in a fog, unseen by me, only reported by others.

One evening at a dance I met and received marked attention from one Howard Woodruff. I told him that there was a young man floating on the social sea who wore a gold cross in which I was interested. He seemed much interested himself and asked me what there was in the cross that concerned me, whereupon I told him the circumstances of my rescue. He promised me that he would keep his eyes open for the possessor of the cross and if he saw him wearing it would interrogate him with regard to it and report to me at once.

For the rest of the winter Mr. Woodruff was continually tantalizing me with reports of this man who was wearing a decoration for life saving. He was always hearing of him, but never getting near him. At one time he told me that the man had won his decoration by saving some one from a burning building; at another he had heard an entirely different story—the honor had been bestowed for having snatched a child from before a locomotive.

Either of these stories would have settled my mind as to the matter if I could have depended on it. But upon questioning my informer I drew forth the fact that what he had heard was the merest hearsay.

As the winter was drawing to a close Mr. Woodruff's attentions to me increased, and he began to display some jealousy of this unknown person in whom I took such an interest. "I believe you are in love with him," he said to me one day. "In love with him?" I replied. "How can I be in love with one I have never seen?" "Well, then, you are in love with a fancy picture you have created of him. Ten to one it is no decoration he wears, but has been given him by some girl with whom he is spoons."

I grew fond of my admirer—indeed, so fond of him that when he asked me to be his wife I consented. He was always quizzing me, and the man who was wearing the Maltese cross was a favorite subject with him. He asked me when the spring came on whether I would go to the seaside resort, and, when I said that I would, but should not be so venturesome as before, he said he would spend his vacation with me there.

"Perhaps we will meet the man who is sporting your cross," he added. "If we do I shall get him out in the water and drown him."

This display of jealousy pleased me, and I retorted I had a sentimental fancy that the man who wore the cross was the person who had saved my life, and if I should meet him I was sure I should fall in love with him. Then my fiance looked grave, and I laughed him back to his former status.

When the summer came I went to my usual resort several weeks before my lover joined me. As soon as he came he asked me if I had seen anything of the fellow who had saved me or the one who wore my prize and if they had turned out to be one and the same person. I teased him for awhile by hinting that I had met him and that he was an Adonis. Whether he believed me or not I didn't know. At any rate, he pretended he did. Lovers are never very certain about anything concerning the loved one and are easily frightened.

The morning after my fiance's arrival we went to the beach together for a bath. We met on the sands, each in bathing costume, and what did I see pinned to his bathing suit but my Maltese cross. I looked at him with eyes big as saucers. He burst into a laugh.

"You have been very stupid," he said.

"Is that my cross?"

"Of course it is."

"Where did you get it?"

"Last summer, when you collapsed in the water and I brought you in, in some way or other it became detached from your bathing dress and got caught in mine."

I was paralyzed.

"I thought I would keep it," he went on, "and fool my friends by letting them think it was a decoration of some sort. I've had no end of fun with it. At last I heard of your inquiries and concluded I had better not wear it any more. In case I should meet you you might claim your property from me."

"Do you mean to tell me that you are the person who saved my life?"

"I dragged you ashore; others got the life back into you."

"And you have been fooling me all this time?"

I was half angry, but the smile he gave me brought me round, and I began to realize that my rescuer stood before me. If we had not been in the midst of a throng I would have thrown myself into his arms; as it was I impulsively grasped his hand in both of mine.

"Come," he said, "let's go take a dip."

Despite the onlookers, we walked hand in hand to the brink and swam out to the place where I had collapsed.

TRAGIC SLEEPWALKING.

Incident Upon Which Bellini Based His Celebrated Opera.

Somnambulists can maintain their footing in the most perilous places so long as they remain in a state of somnambulism, but if suddenly awakened they instantly lose their self possession and balance.

On one occasion a young woman living in Dresden was seen at midnight walking on the edge of the roof of her house. Her family were immediately told of her plight, but were afraid to go near her. The neighbors gathered about the house and placed mattresses and blankets along the street in hopes that they might save her in case she fell.

She danced for over an hour on the slanting roof, apparently retaining her balance without difficulty, and every now and then she would advance to the edge and bow to the silent crowd standing many feet below her.

At last she climbed down on to the wide gutter which ran in front of the window through which she had come, with the evident intention of re-entering the house. The crowd watching her so intently drew a sigh of relief. But, unfortunately, her terrified relatives, thinking to assist her, had placed two lighted candles in the room near the window, and as she approached the light fell directly in her eyes.

Instantly the shock awakened her, and she swayed back and forth in her perilous position; then, with a frightful scream, she fell headlong to the ground. She was fatally hurt and died in a few hours. It was on this tragedy that Bellini wrote his celebrated opera "La Sonnambula."

Who Says Hens Have No Brains?

"Hens have no brains," declared the wife of a modern farmer as she chased a fat old Wyandotte toward the roosting place she should have sought voluntarily.

Before I could challenge the woman's statement the hen by a brilliant strategic movement completely eluded her pursuer and with a triumphant cackle disappeared in the tall grass. The method of her escape showed brains, there could be no two opinions about that, but it was her cackle that should have settled any wavering doubt in the mind of her detractor, for that cackle was uttered at exactly the right moment, not an instant too soon, not a second too late. And it takes brains to know just when to cackle.—Atlantic.

The New Way.

Dorothy and Eleanor met one morning out at the country club.

"Does Florence look any different since she and her husband have separated?" asked Dorothy.

"Oh, yes," was the reply. "She wears her hair a la divorce."

"Heavens!" exclaimed Dorothy. "How's that?"

"Why," smiled Eleanor, "parted, of course."—Detroit Free Press.

Upon the Road.

Perhaps one of the best known puns is that put into the mouth of John Gilpin by Cowper. It will be remembered that, according to the poem, John Gilpin borrowed a horse from his friend to ride to Edmonton to celebrate his wedding day, but the horse had other plans and took the jovial Gilpin to the house of his friend, who, on seeing his ruffled condition, asked him why he had come. Gilpin replied:

I came because your horse would come,
And if I well forbode
My hat and wig will soon be here—
They are upon the road.

HUNTING WITH CAMERA

NEW SPORT QUITE AS EXCITING AS EVER OLD WAS.

Animals Are Now Snapshotted In Their Native Haunts and the Photographer's Risks Are Immense—Two Englishmen Have Been Doing Lions and Lionesses In the African Jungles.

Such diverse subjects as children and wild animals provide some striking illustrations of the wonderful development of modern photography. "Gone are the days when a photographer tells a youngster to laugh and look happy, in order to secure a good picture," says a London photographer. "A child in its normal condition of high spirits, and even naughtiness, is better for my purpose than any amount of goodness faked up for the occasion," while animals are no longer snapshotted at the Zoo, with strong iron bars to protect the camera and operator, but in their native haunts, and are even made to photograph themselves.

Cameras are set instead of traps, and the ingenuity of the hunter of game with the camera is illustrated by the manner in which pictures were taken of some wild deer. An old well-weathered box was placed on a log, in a little clearing, baited with cabbage leaves and turnips. It was left until the deer fed around it without suspicion. A hole was then cut in the box, and the camera placed within it, a string from the flashlight stretching across the feeding place. When they came to feed, the deer trod on the string, and several unique photographs were the immediate result.

But this was tame business compared with the daring photographic feats of Mr. Cherry Kearton and Mr. Albert Wyndham. The latter returned to this country a short time ago with a collection of photographs showing African lions and lionesses in their native haunts. On one occasion a wounded lioness sought refuge in a thicket. Ultimately Mr. Wyndham and his companion—the latter armed with a gun—came up with the wounded beast, who with a savage roar turned on the operator. "She seemed about to sprig," says Mr. Wyndham, "as my companion shot her, standing at five yards, clean between the eyes. The camera clicked at the same instant, and at about the same distance. The animal, which rolled dead at our feet, proved a beauty, measuring from nose tip to tail tip eight feet 11 1-2 inches."

How he took cinematograph pictures of a lion is thus graphically described by that intrepid photographer, Mr. Cherry Kearton, whose pictures of wild life in the Indian jungle and the swamps of Borneo have proved such an attractive feature of of the music halls. Mr. Kearton on one occasion photographed a lion at fifteen yards after the natives, by whom he was accompanied, had given it a running fight for about half a mile. The animal charged into some bushes, and thinking it would make a short cut Mr. Kearton dashed after it with his camera.

"I looked into the bush," he says "and saw the lion's tail rolling round. Following up the tail, I became conscious of two great eyes and a mouth wide open, revealing a terrible set of teeth. The animal was growling fiercely, and I came to the conclusion that I must look it straight in the face and not flinch. I did so for several seconds, and backed with my camera. After several seconds of agonizing suspense, on glancing out of the corner of my eye, I was overjoyed to see the natives charging with their spears. The lion at that moment sprang out, but was knocked down within four yards of me. It sprang up again, however, and laid out four men. The fact that one of my men threw a spear clean through the lion's body and through the arm of a man the lion had pinned down will show you with what force the native can throw this weapon."

In one respect, at any rate, the photographing of wild animals might be compared with the photographing of children, for in each case strategy is required. "The best results," says one of the most successful photographers of children in the London "are obtained when the youngsters are allowed to run about the studios as if it were their own nursery, entertained with games and toys, the fact that they are to be photographed being carefully concealed. Immediately a child notices that its photograph is to be taken it puts on a strained, unnatural expression which results in a bad likeness.

"Again, the most delightful and picturesque photographs of children are obtained when the youngsters are dressed in any old garments. The photographer of to-day is well aware that elaborately-dressed children seldom make a good picture. Usually children come to the studio in stiff and starched dresses. These I proceed to shed by degrees, as various poses are suggested, and often the last photograph in the case of tiny mites is nature unadorned. I prefer almost any dress or the absence of it to what is known as 'the Sunday best'."

Her husband sighed as he shook his head.
"You're right! The cosmetics which there are mixed
Have cost me a fortune to have it fixed."

INVENTED FOUNTAIN PEN.

Canadian Druggist Was Pioneer In Now Huge Industry.

Books of reference, even dictionaries, name and describe the fountain pen, but in such a way as if it had been the product of spontaneous creation. None of the writers seem to know the name of its inventor. Watt, Morse, Howe, Bell and other names of inventors and discoverers are household words, but no one apparently is familiar with the name of the inventor of the fountain pen. This can scarcely be said of the inventor of any other instrument of equal utility. Yet the personal element is most interesting in all spheres of human action. The fountain pen is now made by scores of competing manufacturers the world over, and the business has risen into millions. All since 1876, when patents were issued at Ottawa and Washington to the inventor.

Duncan Mackinnon was born in the township of York, county of York, Ontario, in 1838, and died in 1882. He received a liberal education in his native county. After teaching school for a short time he took up pharmacy, and the year 1874 found him the proprietor of a drug store in the city of Stratford.

About this time he read a paragraph in The Scientific American asking some inventive genius of the world to produce a "fluid pencil," that is, a writing instrument much like a lead pencil, substituting ink for the lead. Mr. Mackinnon was at once seized with the importance of the suggestion and was soon at work, using the metal penholders of the time for his experiments.

The chief difficulty lay in securing control of the inkflow. This was finally accomplished by putting an air tube in the centre of the fountain. This was, and is to-day, the most essential part of the mechanism. Without it there would have been no fountain pen. Before final results were reached Mr. Mackinnon made trips to various cities in search of skilled artists, including Providence, New York, Philadelphia, and Cincinnati.

The pen was first made in soft metal. This experiment failed, for the ink corroded the metal, and the points soon wore off. Hard rubber was next chosen and proved so successful that it is still the material used. There was still one difficulty to overcome, and that was to secure a hard metal point. This, too, was finally accomplished by the use of iridium, the hardest of all metals, and with which the gold pens now attached to the fountain are tipped.

It will be noticed that what the inventor kept steadily in view was the production of a "fluid pencil." He had not thought of attaching an ordinary pen to the fountain. This fluid pencil, although still in the market, is not suited to fine penmanship. Others soon discovered this. Cross was the inventor's manufacturer. This gentleman conceived the idea of substituting an ordinary pen for the point, and proceeded to manufacture and sell, regardless of business ethics, or possible infringement, calling his pen the stylographic. Other makers, the world over, followed in quick succession. The rest is present-day history.

Like many other inventors, Mr. Mackinnon plowed the field and sowed the seed, but others reaped the harvest.

A Chinaman's Oath.

A Chinese oath was recently administered in British Columbia with all the ceremonial accompaniments that are observed in China when an oath is taken in court. Seven Chinamen were charged with rioting, and one, Moh Quong, a witness, was to testify.

The oath was taken on the lawn at the rear of the courthouse, in the presence of the full court and many interested spectators. It was written in the Chinese language, to which the witness affixed his signature. The charge against the seven men was read to the witness by the interpreter, whereupon the witness took the following oath:

"Being a true witness, I shall enjoy happiness, and my sons and grandsons will prosper forever. If I falsely accuse, I shall die on the street, heaven will punish me, earth will destroy me. I shall suffer adversity, and all my offspring will be exterminated. In burning this oath, I humbly submit to the will of heaven, which has brilliant eyes to see."

After the witness had signed his name to the oath, a young white cock with red comb and yellow legs was brought forth. Three punk sticks and a pair of Chinese candles were stuck in the ground and lighted near a block of wood. Next the oath was read by the interpreter to the witness, after which the latter wrapped the piece of paper on which the oath was written round the joss paper. The witness then laid the cock on the block and chopped its head at a single blow. After that he set fire to the oath with a candle, and held it until it was wholly consumed.

And Out He Went.

Corporation Counsel Reginald Geary, of Toronto, tells of a funny experience on his last trip to London, Eng. Those who have visited London know that the number of passengers carried on certain busses is limited by regulation.

Mr. Geary was riding in one of these one day, and the kindly Irish conductor, though quite aware that his 'bus was full, had permitted a young and sickly woman to squeeze in. The 'bus had not proceeded far before the usual crank spoke up. "Conductah!" he exclaimed, "you've one over your number, y'know!"

"Have I, sir?" asked the conductor with affected concern. Then beginning to count from the opposite end, leaving the complainant until the last, he repeated: 'Wan, two, three, four, foive, six, sivin, eight, noine, tin, 'leven, twelve, thir—so I have, sir, an' be the Lord Harry, ye're the wan. Out ye go!"

And out he did go.—Star Weekly.

GREAT LOSS OF LIFE IN DISASTER IS CONFIRMED

Canadian Press Despatch.

Quebec, May 30.—When the train bearing the survivors reached here at 7.45 last night, it carried 29 first class passengers, 29 second class and 101 third class. Of the crew 237 were saved. It is stated that 37 additional survivors have been landed at Rimouski since the train left. This would make the total number rescued 433. As the crew and passengers totalled 1387, the dead or missing number 954. These are the figures given by the C.P.R., while calculations of newspaper correspondents make the totals 1032. Both estimates will probably be corrected later.

(Montreal Herald)

Playing "Nearer My God to Thee," the Salvation Army of Peterborough, Ont., passed the streets of Montreal at one o'clock on their way to the steamship, Alaunia, which is waiting at the port to take the men as far as Plymouth, where they will board a boat for London, England, to the Internatinoal Congress of Salvation Army to be held there. The band is to take the place of those men who were on their way to the congress in London on the Empress of Ireland. According to the leader of the Salvation Army there were 175 men belonging to the Salvation Army Band, on the ill-fated ship and as it is unknown how many perished, the same number of men will sail to-day for London, England.

The army comprising over a hundred men stopped at Victoria Square at 12.30 to-day and after the band played in memory of those who were drowned on the Empress of Ireland, it marched up Beaver Hall Hill, turned in at Dorchester Street towards Windsor, where the band will play again in memory of the dead.

Mr. J. J. Turner, Sr., of this city received word from Mr. Ruben Birch of Toronto, stating that Mrs. Birch, who is Mr. Turner's cousin, and her two daughters, were passengers on the "Empress of Ireland" and it is feared they have been lost.

Their names appear among the list of passengers lost.

Henry H. Lyman of the well known drug firm in Montreal, and well known throughout this city, having spent considerable time here visiting with Mr. Nugent of the Nugent Drug Company last summer, is amongst the unaccounted in the Empress of Ireland disaster.

The friends and relatives of Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Tylee of Montreal, whom it was thought lost their lives in the disaster yesterday morning, will be delighted to know that their names appear in the list of the saved.

HEAR REPORT FROM MARKET COMMITTEE

Retail Merchants Will Likely Wait on Council

A general meeting of all the Retail Merchants is called for Monday night at the Y.M.C.A. at 8.15.

There are a number of very important matters to be dealt with and most likely there will be a deputation appointed to wait on the City Council the same evening.

The report of the Market Committee who were appointed at the last meeting to investigate the market conditions and restrictions will be dealt with. This committee with T. C. Elliott as chairman have gone into the market conditions very fully and will have some important suggestions to offer which it is believed will very much improve the market if acted upon.

The Secretary will report on the work accomplished since the last meeting.

The appointment of a Permanent District Secretary will be discussed and the report from the Provincial Board on this matter will be dealt with.

Further matters in connection with the Annual Picnic are also on the slate.

Mr. Thos. Barrie the President and other executive officers desires to see a strong representation of all the merchants at the meeting.

VETERANS PARADE.

The Veterans of the Imperial Service and the Canadian Veterans of 1866-70 will parade at the Armouries on Monday morning, June 1st, at 9.30 for the reception of the Royal party.

By order,

J. W. Miller, Pres.

MRS. IRVING WAS HYSTERICAL

Thwarted all Efforts of Husband to Save Her

DIED TOGETHER

Canadian Press Despatch.

Quebec, May 30.—F. E. Abbott of Toronto, was the last man who saw Lawrence Irving, the famous English actor, alive. Irving's wife had become hysterical, and thwarted all her husband's efforts to save her. Abbott said, "Can I help you?" and Irving replied, "look after yourself, old man, but God bless you all the same."

Abbott dived overboard and supported himself on a piece of timber. Irving and his wife by this time were on the deck. He was kissing her, and as the ship went down, they were clasped in each other's arms.

TO HELP MANHOOD OF PETERBORO

Manhood is the best asset of any city, and no agency has proven itself more effective in building clean, strong, well developed manhood than the Y.M.C.A.

The Association now makes its annual appeal for funds, $4,500 being required in subscriptions to meet the expenses of the current year.

If a few of our leading citizens would contribute the price of a pair of automobile tires the amount needed would be provided easily. However, we are sure that our citizens will contribute as liberally as possible, and that the amount required will soon be subscribed.

EDITORIAL COMMENT ON THE EMPRESS DISASTER

Montreal Journal of Commerce.

Until an investigation is held, and the blame placed where it properly belongs, criticism must be withheld. The only thing that can in justice be said is that the utmost care should always be exercised in navigating the St. Lawrence, especially when fog and ice are prevalent. From the reports issued to-day, it would appear as if the Empress was stationary, owing to the dense fog, and was struck amidships by the Storstad.

It is a most regrettable accident, and will give ample material to those who are continually decrying the St. Lawrence route. It must be admitted that ice and fog were particularly bad this year. With care, however, the difficulties incidental to the navigation of the St. Lawrence can be overcome. Every possible effort should be made to exercise the necessary caution.

Ottawa Free Press

A collision may take place in the open ocean and only the best of lookouts can avert a catastrophe that is always possible to ocean travel. With the larger use of ocean routes and the well-defined lines of travel, the chances of these collisions are much increased and call for vigilance ever present. Where the human factor came to fail will be a matter for future inquiry. The look-out on the Empress must have been arranged so as to avoid the possibility of failure and yet in some way the failure happened.

The St. Lawrence route is so picturesque and within the shelter of the Gulf so consoling to those who may have had some buffeting in the open ocean that anything that militates against its popularity is a distinct loss to the Dominion.

We trust that the full inquiry that will follow will show that the St. Lawrence route was not particularly to blame for a tragedy that might have occurred anywhere. The all-Canadian route has increased so much that anything leading to a temporary check is to be regretted, apart altogether from the general feeling aroused by the tragedy.

Montreal Star

That this should happen in the peaceful waters of our own Gulf, brings it doubly near to us—our own noble ship, our own people, and our own home waters. When the paralyzing effect of this first blow passes, and we can better appreciate the awful calamity that has befallen us, we will then be in a fitter mood to utter those sad words of sorrow and sympathy which are welling up at this hour in all our bosoms. But to-day we can do nothing but stand aghast at the stunning suddenness and the crushing completeness of the catastrophe.

Our hearts go out to every family which has been bereaved. The tragedy of the "Titanic" has been once more repeated. When shall the sea cease to take its terrible toll? We of the Anglo-Saxon race can surely cry again with deeper meaning and a more intimate pain—"If blood be the price of admiralty, Lord God, we have paid it all."

Ottawa Citizen.

Despite the ingenuity and intelligence of man the elements that render ocean travel pregnant with danger at all times have not been overcome. Those who go down to the sea in ships are as much in the hands of Providence today as were Columbus and his men in the tiny craft which made the first great journey across the unknown seas.

Brantford Courier.

What can be said in the fact of such a calamity—a calamity which has sent a thrill of sorrow and regret throughout the civilized world?

It is common in connection with such tragedies to talk of the "lesson" conveyed. That is, in reality, the immutable fact that human agencies and designs are, after all, subjected to the great forces of nature and a higher Power.

And the poor souls who, in the midst of health and happiness and hope—the husbands and wives, the children, the all of them—suddenly brought face to face with death—the mere thought is agonizing.

God rest them.

Toronto Star.

The ocean takes its toll, in spite of the advance of science and the co-operation of civilized nations in life-saving.

Toronto Globe.

To face death unafraid, whether it comes in the sick room, in tempest, fire, or flood, is the supreme test of fortitude. In our sorrow for those who died and for those who are bereaved let us remember that a thousand Canadians went to their deaths—as Britons for centuries have gone masters of themselves, with head erect and spirit unconquered by the king of terrors.

Toronto Mail and Empire.

Science has wrought miracles for the greater protection of those afloat. Wireless telegraphy, air-tight compartments, the construction which has produced what is called "the unsinkable ship," have added greatly to the safety of ocean travel. But science cannot eliminate the element of error, it cannot eradicate the spirit of recklessness. None of the aids that the workers for safe transit have bestowed on navigation could avail to prevent what happened in the early hours of Friday morning. The Empress of Ireland was rammed by another vessel, and so crushed as to be unable to remain afloat for more than fifteen minutes after the impact.

FOUR NAMES LIKELY TO GO BEFORE CONVENTION

There seems to be keen rivalry for the endorsement of Conservative representative for the west riding. Several names have been mentioned. E. A. Peck, M.L.A., will submit his name to the convention and it is confidently expected that he will receive the nomination but there is likely to be an upset as Mayor Buller, R. J. Soden and ex-Mayor Bradburn also intend to submit their names. The convention will be held in the Conservatory of Music hall on Monday evening and will no doubt prove to be one of the keenest held in the history of the local Liberal-Conservative Association.

FRATERNAL DAY.

The delegates from the fraternal societies of the city with all others interested in the arrangements for Fraternal Day, Sunday, June 28, are requested to meet in the Sons of England hall, Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

HIS MAJESTY CABLES THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, May 30.—King George cabled the Duke of Connaught: "I am deeply grieved over the awful disaster to the Empress of Ireland in which so many Canadians lost their lives. Queen Mary and I both assure you of our heartfelt sympathy with those who mourn the loss of relatives and friends."

His Majesty also cabled Sir Thomas Shaughnessy: "In the appalling disaster which has befallen your company by the loss of the Empress of Ireland in which so many perished, I offer you my sincere sympathy."

King George has received a telegram from President Poincare, expressing the regret and sympathy of the French people. King George also sent a messenger early this morning to the European manager of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to express his sorrow and regret at the disaster. The Lord Mayor of London has decided to open a relief fund. General Booth will hold a memorial service in Royal Albert Hall on June third.

TORONTO SENDS OUT MESSAGE

Will Provide Fund to Assist Relatives of the Lost

Canadian Press Despatch.

Toronto, May 30.—Acting Mayor McCarthy has sent a sympathetic message to Col. Rees at the Salvation Army headquarters in Toronto and has cabled General Booth in London, "The great heart of the city of Toronto sorrows with you this day." Mr. McCarthy says the city will provide any fund needed to assist relatives of those lost on the Empress up to one hundred thousand dollars or more.

CAPT. KENDALL'S STORY OF HOW THE EMPRESS WAS LOST

Collier's Bow Tore Through Liners Tough Steel Plates as if They Were Tin ---Passengers Might Have Been Saved Had the Former Not Backed Out --- Storstad Answered Signals First Given Out by the Empress

Canadian Press Despatch.

Rimouski, May 30.—Capt. Kendall, who is suffering from injuries, and yesterday reported dying, was a little better this morning, and was able to talk about the disaster. His story as related to friends is as follows:

At one thirty Friday morning the Empress had passed Rimouski and was proceeding on her course. The weather thickened—not an actual fog, but what sailors describe as misty. He was on the bridge and ordered the ship slowed down. Then he made out the lights of the approaching steamer and ordered a stop. The Empress whistled and the other steamer answered, indicating that Capt. Kendall's signal had been understood.

The steamers were two miles apart when the first action was taken by the Empress. As the two boats approached, the Empress engines had come to a full stop, but she was still proceeding forward under her momentum. The captain then ordered the engines reversed to slow astern. The Storstad meanwhile kept on her way towards the liner. It is thought that Captain Anderson of the Storstad tried to cross the Empress' bow and plunged into the starboard side just amidships.

It was not a severe shock. One man said he heard "a grinding, scraping sound," but the heavily laden collier had weight behind it, and her bow tore through the liner's tough steel plates as if they were tin, piercing her in a spot where not all the double hulls or bulkheads ever made could save her."

If the Storstad had held her bow in the gaping wound she might have kept the Empress afloat long enough for the people aboard to swarm aboard the collier and given the liner's crew time to launch life boats, but she backed out and the Empress immediately began to list.

Fifteen minutes after the blow was struck she rolled over on her side and in another instant plunged to the bottom.

FEWER CASES FOR THE HOSPITALS SINCE THE STRICT INVESTIGATION

Number of Patients Charged up to City Shows a Decrease With Official on the Job

Finance Chairman Ald. Anderson, in conversation with the Review today spoke of the great benefits the city was obtaining by the work of Mr. Finch Miller in connection with the hospital cases, which for some time appeared as if they would overwhelm the city treasury.

"The number being admitted to the hospitals and charged to the city has certainly decreased more than by one half since his appointment, or else the epidemic is over for the season," said Ald. Anderson. The work of the new appointee to the newly created position is being warmly spoken on by the aldermen as to the good work being carried on.

The reports presented to Ald. Anderson show careful investigation and thoroughness in methods by Mr. Miller.

COULD NOT LAUNCH BOATS BECAUSE OF HEAVY LIST

Crew Were on Deck and had Best Chance to Save Their Lives

Quebec, May 30.—These are some important points attending the collision.

Owing to her heavy list, only two lifeboats could be launched from the Empress.

Most of the first and second cabin passengers were caught in their cabins by the inrush of water.

A boiler explosion occurred which wounded many sailors and passengers.

Hundreds of women lost their lives by stopping to dress.

The fact that such a large number of the crew appear among the survivors is explained by their being on deck at the time of the collision, and most of them were picked up after swimming.

GEORGE STREET CHURCH

The sermons at George Street Methodist Church to-morrow will be of a special nature. In the morning, Rev. Mr. Peever will deal with the temperance situation in Ontario, while in the evening his theme of discourse will be the loss sustained by the sinking of the "Empress of Ireland."

PETERBOROUGH, SATURDAY, MAY 30, 1914

LOSS OF THE EMPRESS.

WITH ABOUT FOURTEEN HUNDRED people on board, the noble Empress of Ireland steamed majestically down the picturesque St. Lawrence, heading for the open sea. Many a time had the giant steamship, one of the finest on the Canadian route, glided down the stream that, since the days of Jacque Cartier, has had a charm and beauty all its own. This time it again set sail with a full quota of passengers, who gave a sigh of relief as the big liner drew away from her moorings, but who also looked confidently forward to the time when the isles of Britain would gladden their sea-tired eyes. Little thinking of danger, the passengers betook themselves to slumber with what prayers and thoughts they did, but the expectations of a far-away shore many were not destined to see. Down crept over the water of the river a dense fog, enveloping all in a mist that was to be for nearly a thousand souls a pall of death. Out of this mist came the big collier, a low-lying boat heavily laden, that gave the Empress such a death blow that in fourteen minutes she took her final plunge.

The Empress was apparently equipped with every contrivance to insure safety to her passengers in case of disaster. She carried enough life boats to save all on board. She was equipped with life preservers, wireless, water tight bulkheads, fog signals, look out and search light. Yet so deadly was the blow that scarcely any of these could be utilized. The disaster was apparently a pure accident, arising out of the hazard of the sea. Very likely it could happen any place where a fog, a most dangerous condition of sea travelling, could occur. But, even so, an inquiry must be instituted, to ascertain if all human agencies for the prevention of disaster were in operation. If they were, the disaster will be a most serious blow to ocean travelling over the Canadian route, for no one would be able to tell when such a catastrophe would be repeated. An inquiry is essential to fix responsibility in this case, and to declare on the safety of the St. Lawrence route.

In the meantime, the Review extends sympathy to all those who over the length and breadth of Canada have felt the weight of this deadly and unexpected blow. Truly, in an hour when we think not, the universal summons comes.

VALUE OF BRITISH INSTITUTIONS.

SOME PEOPLE, particularly those of nationalist tendencies, think that Canada owes little to Britain. They take the view that the development of Canada has been wholly due to the work of Canadians. Aside from the fact of the millions and millions of British capital that has been instrumental in opening up this great country, is the advantage Canadians have gained from English institutions and laws. This may seem like a small matter at first sight; but comparisons may be easily made which show how very important British ideas of Government have been in the progress of this country.

If we turn to South America we will see countries that have been colonized some centuries before substantial development began on the Atlantic sea-board or in the valley of the St. Lawrence. The whole South American continent is made up of countries possessing an older civilization than that of Canada, yet they are far behind this country, and one of the principal reasons for their backwardness is the lack of stable government.

Take the United States of Colombia, for example, a country rich in many things. Its coffee plantations are very valuable and the product grades among the best in the world. In 1912 it exported coffee to the value of nearly $17,000,000. Its production of bananas is also large and profitable. Rubber is indigenous to Colombia, but eastern competition has placed this industry under a cloud. Excellent Sea-Island cotton is grown; stock raising and tobacco growing are also important occupations. Colombia produces the finest emeralds in the world, the mining of these stones being a Government monopoly. Up to the time of the discovery of the California gold fields, it was to Colombia that the world looked for its principal supply of gold. The precious metal has been mined in the republic for nearly four hundred years. Gold was the lure that the early Spanish Conquistadores constantly followed. It influenced all their actions. It has been calculated that up to the year 1882 nearly two million pounds avoirdupois have been taken out. Colombia contains other minerals, such as silver, platinum, copper, iron, coal, salt and petroleum, the latter being worked by a Canadian company.

It will thus be seen that this country is a wealthly country and has always been so. It possessed in the first instance all the potential resources necessary for progress and wealth. But the Spanish system of government, particularly the old Spanish colonial system, was never conducive to colonial progress. In the first days of colonization in America she adopted a policy of exploitation or of working her colonies solely for the benefit of the central government. During all the years that Spain controlled South American countries, of which Colombia was one, she sought only to extract gold and other wealth from them. No attention was paid to education, to the building of healthy, progressive towns and cities, or to setting up a sound system of law and government. In fact, the iniquities that took place under the Spanish administration of law, were well known in other countries. In time, revolution was the inevitable consequence, the domination of Spain was thrown off, but the people, having no training in the art of self government, were unable to evolve a settled form of Government after a long and bitter struggle. Having gained their independence they then fought among themselves, and civil wars were frequent. The last civil war was not concluded until the year 1903. This long period of political disturbance left industry at a stand still, and to this day the Latin countries of South America are feeling the bad effects of Spanish rule. Had this country possessed a sound system of government in the beginning, it would now be one of the strongest and wealthiest nations in the world.

The comparison of Canada under British institutions with Colombia under Spanish laws illustrates to what degree Canada has profited from the blessing of being under Britannic rule. Canada owes a great deal of its success to the accident of being a part of the British Empire.

JACOB RIIS.

THE DEATH of Jacob Riis removes one of the best known and one of the most successful of American editors. Coming to the United States about half a century ago as an obscure immigrant boy from Denmark, he possessed, to appearances, no potential resources beyond those of most strangers from a foreign land. Yet he was different to a striking degree. He had character, will and capacity in plenty, and becoming imbued with the spirit of the country, was able to take advantage of opportunities. He had a critical faculty, which is naturally very active in a newcomer, and which fitted him well for newspaper work. As editor of the New York Sun, and as the author of several books dealing with social problems, he gained national reputation. He was intimately associated with Col. Roosevelt, and was one of his leading supporters and admirers.. Aside from what he did for the United States, his career is another example of what a new country like the United States or Canada can do for the quick mind, able to profit by its opportunities. Riis won success and at the same time accomplished a great good work for the people of the United States.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE PREVALENCE of stock gambling on margin has roused the framers of the Criminal Code to the necessity of action. According to the Montreal journals, prosecutions will be instituted against those buying or selling anything but full bona fide interests in the stock. This will do away with the buying and selling of margins. The code already provides punishment.

MAY 27th will be known to history as the day on which the Montreal Evening News made its first appearance. Not having received a copy of the new journal we do not know whether to recommend it to our readers or not. But it ought to be a good paper.

"God made woman beautiful," says Puck, "so the men would love them, and He made them foolish so that they would love men." And there's something that was never so well figured out before.

A Vast Increase.

Vancouver Province.

How the moving picture show business is increasing is revealed in the figures of American exports. In March the export of films amounted to 23,000,000 lineal feet as against 3,000,000 in March of last year. At the same rate of increase for the year the total will be 195,000,000 lineal feet or enough to encircle the globe and reach to the North and South Poles.

Fitting in One's Place.

Montreal Mail.

It doesn't matter much really what one's position may be, so long as one fills it well. The main thing is to fit into one's place, whatever the place may be; and when one does that all other things take care of themselves. There is no superiority but in superiority of service. The way up is always open to all climbers.

The enthusiast who put his life into the making of the first rude lens did a humble thing, yet he lifted mankind nearer to myriads of new worlds. The man or woman who only adds columns of figures, if they always be added right, is a very bulwark of successful business. True merit doesn't wait for recognition; it asserts itself.

No one can bunco the world very long. One may fool an employer for a while, but one cannot fool nature for a minute. Every step must be forward or backward; there is no sidestepping or standing still. He who does not grow shrinks. But he who strives upward finds strength and skill and confidence and enthusiasm added unto him at every step.

Fishes that idly float and drift are carried by the currents of the streams downward to the sea, where in the course of evolution they become lobsters; the fishes that stem the current and leap the rapids and attain the pure waters of the stream-head become game trout.

It is not very different with men and women.

A GLANCE AHEAD

By Walt Mason

The summer time will soon arrive, that season which is hottest; then every man in town should strive to be the leading swattist. For steaming winds and brazen skies, which make the cornfields flourish, will also multiply the flies, encourage them and nourish. And flies are such a pesky crew, they made one's reason totter; and so the first thing that you do should be to buy a swatter. The good old doctors disagree whene'er they have a chance to; one doc goes haw, another gee — we can't guess where they prance to. But on this question of the flies, they speak up as one sawbones; they tell us that we ought to rise and wade in blood and rawbones. So haste and send your little son, or failing him, your daughter, to hardware dealer with the mon to buy a trusty swatter. And then from every lowly cot we'll drive the pesky critters, and sing and chortle as we swat, and hand the flies their bitters. And thus we'll benefit the race — that isn't far-fetched, is it? We'll make the world a better place in which to sit and visit.

Birthdays of Note

SATURDAY, MAY THIRTIETH

His Honor, George William Brown, Lieutenant-Governor of Saskatchewan, celebrates his fifty-fourth birthday on this date. Born on a farm in Grey County, Ontario, he went west as a young man, arriving on the site of the future capital of Saskatchewan before the townsite was laid out. He took up a homestead about nine miles north and farmed there for seven years. Then he moved into Regina, studied law, and was called to the Bar, entering upon a legal practice which extended up to his appointment as Lieutenant-Governor in 1910. In the interval he was elected a member of th old North West Assembly, in which he remained until the formation of the province. He can recall many interesting reminiscences of pioneer days in the West. When he arrived in Regina, there was only one mail a month, buffalo were numerous, there was no railway and not a bushel if grain was grown in the district. In fact he was practically the first settler.

SUNDAY, MAY THIRTY-FIRST

The Hon. Hewitt Bostock, who recently succeeded the late Sir George Ross as leader of the Liberal party in the Senate, was born fifty years ago to-day at the Hermitage, Walton Heath, Surrey, England. He is undoubtedly one of the most accomplished and scholarly members of the Upper House, being a graduate of Trinity College, Cambridge, and a barrister of Lincoln's Inn. After practicing law in England for a short time, he decided to come to Canada for the sake of his health and engaged in fruit ranching. He went accordingly to British Columbia and took up his residence at Monte Creek. He now has widespread interests in the Western province and is deeply concerned in its welfare. It only took three years to get an entree into politics and in 1896 he was returned to the House of Commons for Yale-Cariboo. He was elevated to the Senate ten years ago, being at the time the youngest member of that august body and it is to be expected that in the coming years he will be one of the strong men of his party.

Also born to-day:—

Lieut.-Col. W. C. Macdonald, Toronto, born 1856.

Prof. C. A. Chant, Toronto, born near Unionville, Ont., 1865.

Joseph Demers, St John's P.Q., born Henryville, 1861.

"No man is ever humble enough to realize that he's not the most desirable catch in the community."

"Don't write the item until I telephone you later in the evening," interrupted Gilbert. He had been plotting and planning along social lines ever since Kerr had told him of Gloria's return. Several things he had already thought of flashed through his mind. The impossibility of Locust Lawn as a social center was one of these, and Gilbert had something to suggest before having the Banner write the story which would herald her return. "You can add this, though. Say that Judge and Mrs. Gilbert will issue invitations next week for a dance to introduce Miss Kerr."

No sooner had the reporter gone than Kerr turned to Gilbert and said with what was for him unaccustomed warmth:

"That's mighty good of you, Amos."

"Not at all." Then the lawyer went on in an injured tone, "I'm only sorry that you put the franchise up to me as a trade. I'm not doing it for that."

"I knew you'd do it for the girl's sake, but I want you to get what you can out of it, Amos. I owe you that much."

Gilbert was glad that his wife entered at this minute, for a discussion of Gloria's social future probably would not bring out all sides to the question without a woman being a party to the conversation.

"I just have to talk to some one," Mrs. Gilbert confessed immediately, "and I didn't have the heart to go into the library. I peeped in just now and they were sitting in front of the fire laughing and talking and appearing to be having the best time in the world. I don't know why, but it made me think of the times when you used to come to see me, Amos."

Husband and wife smiled at each other, and he said:

"You were a beautiful girl, Julia."

"I'll tell you what," Mrs. Gilbert went on, conscious of the compliment but not desirous of herself making a comparison. "Gloria is a beautiful girl, and what is more, I can see that she has a beautiful character. I'm so sorry she has been away so long."

"What could I do, ma'am?" asked Kerr. "I couldn't take care of her at Locust Lawn."

Locust Lawn had been in Gilbert's mind all the time, and he had waited only to sound his wife before speaking. Her enthusiasm was such, as evidenced in what she had just said, that he thought now was the proper time to broach the subject.

"There's only one thing to do, Mr. Kerr," he said. "Gloria must come in and stay with us. Locust Lawn is all right as a home for you, but as it stands it is no place for a young lady in society; especially, since you want me to be plain spoken, no place for a young lady who has had such advantages as your daughter."

"Exactly, exactly," asserted Kerr. He had seen that, and it had been one of the thorns in his flesh all day.

Mrs. Gilbert was quick to see that it was the only thing to be done. She had become as much interested in Gloria as had her husband, and now she added [illegible]

"The [illegible] has expressed my own ideas exactly," she said. "Mr. Kerr you must let her come to us. We have fallen in love with her already."

"Have you, ma'am?" Kerr asked. "Then I'm awfully glad."

"Make the invitation for a month," Gilbert directed, "and then we can ask her to stay on."

"I'll do nothing of the kind," said his wife airily, as she started on what was to her a pleasant errand; "I'll ask her for the rest of her natural life and if she wants to stay that long she's welcome."

CHAPTER VII.

Gloria plunged into the work of making over Locust Lawn according to her own ideas with her usual enthusiasm. Accompanied by Mrs. Gilbert, she haunted the architect's office, carrying with her magazines containing pictures and descriptions of beautiful homes. When the plans for the alterations were finally approved, David Kerr learned with a sigh of relief that the changes could be made without driving him from the shelter of his own roof.

At the same time Gloria was planning for the changes in the country place she and Mrs. Gilbert were also busy preparing for the ball which would serve as her formal introduction to Belmont society. Her time was so engaged that she thought the suggestion of her hostess an excellent one when Mrs. Gilbert said that it might be better not to become tangled up with too many social engagements at a time when it was more vital to see that the Locust Lawn alterations were properly under way. The girl was aware, from what she had heard her father and others say, that things were dull at present, and she did not wish to spur them into a premature activity. When the ball was given for her it would be time enough to begin.

Mrs. Gilbert was not letting things drift, although the daughter of David Kerr was not aware of it. Every one in Belmont knew what Glora did not: That she was about to make a great effort to secure recognition. Belmont was not in a receptive mood. Its first thought was that she was the child of a shrewd political trickster who had fattened at the expense of the town. The offspring of the leopard should not hope to be without spots.

Mrs. Gilbert was clever enough to have girls to luncheon whom she thought might become interested in Gloria. They came, and in the majority of cases surprised Gloria by their charming manners and their beautiful clothes. Her court was to be even more brilliant than she had dreamed. The girls were invited one at a time to give both Gloria and the visitor the opportunity of becoming well acquainted.

The luncheon guests came to call afterward, but by a strange mischance it was always when Gloria was not at home. She would go to the architect's office with Mrs. Gilbert, and would find on her return that several cards had been left for her. The ball was so near that she made no attempt to pay any calls herself. She was too busy.

Although railing at the fate which took him away most of the time, the first three weeks after Gloria's removal to town were spent by Judge Gilbert in Chicago. Occasionally he ran over for a day, but even then his wife and their guest saw little of him. This would have made their evenings hang heavy on their hands had it not been for Joe Wright. He got into the habit of dropping in after dinner every evening and several times a week Mrs. Gilbert had him to dine with them. Late in the afternoons he and Gloria often drove together, the season of the year keeping them most of the time on the city streets. Once he drove with her to Locust Lawn, but as it was late when they reached there he did not get out, sitting in the runabout while Gloria ran into the house for a few minutes.

Neither Wright nor Gloria ever made an effort to direct the conversation into the intimate channel it had taken the night they first had met in Belmont. One might almost have thought they had agreed to consider themselves merely good friends, so impersonal were they in what they said. For this there was a reason; rather, there were two reasons, his and hers.

Wright was keeping a firm grip on himself because he knew the truth and was afraid. Gloria was self-possessed and would not have permitted him to pass the border of friendship, had he dared, because she wished to know Belmont well. Even a hint of an entangling alliance would prove a hindrance. Thus it was that each was happy in the other's company. And if perchance they looked the sentiment that each had inwardly resolved not to breathe, they were happier still in the thought that some day their dreams would come true.

The paper was occasioning Wright no great anxiety. Somewhat to his surprise the advertising revenue was showing most gratifying gains caused by the increase of local business. The Banner had more advertising, but the new owner of the afternoon paper had no cause to complain. Even his advertising manager could not explain it. Main street merchants who had been out of the paper for years began to send in copy without solicitation.

This made the head of the advertising department think that the millennium was about due. The real reason, unknown to every one except the merchants receiving the message, was that Dave Kerr had sent out the tip for them to throw some of their patronage to the News.

This was a shrewd move on the part of Kerr. He wanted Wright to have such a volume of business that if he should order all the advertising he could influence cut off, the paper would be instantly crippled. If the News had not much business, then anything Kerr might cause to be dropped out would only show that his power was slight. If he had to strike a blow he wanted it to be with a sledge hammer.

Another important consideration which led him to take this step was that the merchants might believe, and be tipped it off in a manner which would be most apt to make them jump to that conclusion, that he was himself interested in the News. This would tend to minimise Wright's influence if he should attempt a crusade, since the public would wink and say: "It's all a bluff, old man Kerr himself is interested in the paper." The boss even calculated that this would be strengthened by the frequency with which Wright was seen in his daughter's company. He was not looking for trouble, he never welcomed it, but he sought always to be prepared when it came.

During her first weeks at Mrs. Gilbert's Gloria saw little of her father. She had at first frequently dropped in at his office, but he had intimated that it was no place for her. Sometimes she would be at Locust Lawn when Tom brought him home in the afternoon. When Judge Gilbert was home from Chicago once he dined with them. Every day, however, she talked to him for some time over the telephone. He always seemed interested, apologized for not seeing her more, and let her rattle on until she had quite exhausted the news of the day. Occasionally he complained to her of his rheumatism —no one had ever heard him speak of it before—and she would beg him to take good care of himself, since it was with him that she wished to dance first at her ball.

TEETHING BABIES

Teething time is usually a time of worry to mothers. It is usually accompanied by nervousness, stomach trouble and extreme fretfulness. The mother can avoid all this; she can have her baby pass through the dangerous teething time without pain or crossness. Baby's Own Tablets are the mother's greatest friend at this time. They sweeten the stomach, regulate the bowels, allay feverishness which usually accompanies the coming of new teeth, and in this way make teething easy. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Most men are industrious from necessity.

WOMAN'S MOST SUCCESSFUL MEDICINE

Known All Over The World —Known Only For The Good It Has Done.

We know of no other medicine which has been so successful in relieving the suffering of women, or received so many genuine testimonials, as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

In nearly every community you will find women who have been restored to health by this famous medicine. Almost every woman you meet knows of the great good it has been doing among suffering women for the past 30 years.

Fox Creek, N. B.—"I have always had pains in the abdomen and a weakness there and often after meals a soreness in my stomach. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done me much good. I am stronger, digestion is better and I can work with ambition. I have encouraged many mothers of families to take it as it is the best remedy in the world. You can publish this in the papers."—Mrs. WILLIAM S. BOURQUE, Fox Creek, N. B.

In the Pinkham Laboratory at Lynn, Mass., are files containing hundreds of thousands of letters from women seeking health, in which many openly state over their own signatures that they have regained their health by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, many of whom state that it has saved them from surgical operations.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Asthma.

One means of obtaining relief when suffering from the complaint is to extract the juice of eight lemons and mix it carefully with one ounce of honey and one ounce of cod liver oil. Take two tablespoonfuls of the mixture when the cough comes on. Physical exercise for ten or fifteen minutes, either night or morning, is advisable, and sufferers should pay careful attention to diet, avoiding all indigestible foods.

Useful Proverb.

"Do you," he asked, "believe in early marriage?"

"Well," she replied, "I used to, but I am willing to say that at present I believe 'better late than never' may be applied to marriage as well as to some other things."—Exchange.

WEALTH OF HAIR

Parisian Sage Makes Thin Lifeless Hair Soft and Abundant.

Beautiful hair, fluffy, lustrous, abundant and free from dandruff, is one of woman's greatest charms. It's her main delight—yet so many of the fair sex who would be most attractive but for their streaked, thin and lifeless hair, go on thinking there is no remedy. Quickly put aside such thoughts. Beautiful hair is largely a matter of a little care and attention. Parisian Sage rubbed into the scalp and applied to the hair with a sponge or cloth will work wonders. Do it daily for a week, then occasionally, and you will be surprised and delighted with the result—not only will the hair become abundant, soft, fluffy, radiant with life, but really doubly beautiful.

Parisian Sage supplies hair and scalp needs. It surely removes dandruff with one application and cleanses the hair of all dirt and excessive oil. It is not sticky or greasy, is delicately perfumed and contains nothing to injure the hair or scalp. All drug and toilet counters sell it in fifty cent bottles. Look for the trade mark—"The Girl with the Auburn Hair."

Delighted users pronounce Parisian Sage the best, most pleasant and invigorating hair tonic made. Try at least one bottle. The Warne Drug Co. will refund the money if you are not satisfied.

London's Homeless.

The annual census of homeless persons in the British capital has just been taken by the London County Council. It shows that 2,881 persons on the night the count was made in London without homes. The numbers have declined since the original census was made ten years ago, principally because of the new casual ward scheme by which wanderers are questioned by the police and given tickets of admission to the casual wards.

Britain's Oldest Barrister.

Last week Mr. W. A. G. Hake, the oldest living barrister in England, or perhaps in the world, celebrated his 103rd birthday. Mr. Hake has lived for more than half a century at 3, Old Steine, Brighton, the quaint cobbled house in which many of George's IV.'s guests were lodged. A near neighbor, Mr. Glover, has reached the age of 102, while still another centenarian lives at Hove. For the last thirty years Brighton has not been without a centenarian resident.

The chief trouble with pride is that too often it interferes with reason."

FOR OUTING WEAR.

Sweaters Shaped on Cutaway Lines.

NATTY NEW SWEATER.

The season's sweater may be shaped on cutaway lines. Very modish are turned over collars and cuffs. Shown here is a sweater suitable for golf or other outdoor sports. It is of green, with the collar and cuffs in a shade of deep cream and with a row of ball buttons trimming the front.

THE COIFFURE.

The Style of the Season's Hats Demands Due Attention to It.

It has been some years since women gave the public a glimpse of their locks in the streets. But this season one often sees the entire line of growth.

The change is in the back of the hat. It no longer rests on the neck. It tilts up rakishly, or the crown is so small that the sweep of the hair shows from ear to ear.

So it is well to look to your coiffure. It must be lifted in the back and drawn away a little from the forehead, and, though the ears are not yet entirely uncovered, there is a tendency to lighten the locks over them.

The tangette curl is not becoming to every woman, so beware of it, unless you can make it an accessory to beauty. It can age the face and lend commonness to the features, but on the other hand, if it suits you, it is artistic and coquettish.

Of course you know you can buy these little side curls and pin them in, or you can cut a lock of your own hair, wet it and press it round into a ringlet, then fasten it to the cheek with a drop of spirit gum.

All the new coiffures are close to the head. Sometimes the hair is simply swirled round with a comb set up and down in the back.

Taking Nasty Medicine.

The most disgusting dose in the world can be made quite bearable if you first eat a strong peppermint and then hold your nose while you drain the glass containing the medicine. The peppermint dulls the sense of taste, and the nose holding stops you from getting any smell. Before you let go of your nose eat a biscuit, which will remove any drops that may cling to your lips and so put an end to the whole thing.

A Sewing Hint.

You need not stoop for hours when sewing a hem or seam. Sit in a low chair or on a stool. Pin one end of the seam to something high, such as the head of the sofa. Then you will be able to keep your work tight and travel down it by means of moving your chair a little. You will hold it as if it were in a frame, and there will be no more of that tedious crouching work.

Don't Swat That Fly

Mashing flies is unsanitary and dangerous because it always leaves the disease germs to be distributed through the house when dry.

LIFE IS ALWAYS DYING.

And Just as Soon as We Cease Dying We Cease to Live.

Living is a continuous process of dying. When we cease to die we cease to live. One can readily understand this by means of a very concrete example. Suppose you arise some cold morning and find the fire in your furnace has "gone out." It will do no good to utter malicious invectives against the poor furnace. Just philosophize as follows: "My furnace has ceased to die. In other words, it has ceased to consume that very expensive article called coal. The continual consumption of coal is fire or life in the furnace. When the consumption or dying ceased the fire or life ceased." Accordingly you proceed to make the furnace "die" some more.

What is true of the furnace is true of ourselves. All organic life exists in a state of continuous decomposition and rebuilding or a continuous state of dying and living. As soon as decomposition ceases reconstruction ceases, or, in common terms, as soon as we cease dying we cease living. Certain poisons, if swallowed by a human being, destroy life by annihilating the decomposing or dying process which is necessary for life. When they enter the system a chemical compound is formed which resists decomposition. Upon examination of the dead body it will be found that putrefaction does not take place. With these poisons in the body there is no process of dying; hence there is no life.

The same truth holds in regard to our mental and moral existence. If we cease to struggle or think and are content to live a purely animal life the activity of our brain powers quickly ceases and we are mentally dead. Struggle, action, aspiration, is dying, but it means living. Introduce the poison of vice and there is a cessation of mental life as fatal as that caused to the body by arsenic.—New York American.

PROCLAMATION OF DISSOLUTION OF LEGISLATURE IS ISSUED

Elections On Monday, June 29

Nomination Will Be Held on Monday, June 22, According to Announcement Given Out by Premier Whitney—Address to the Electors Reviewing Record of Government Accompanies the Notice.

TORONTO, May 30.—"A proclamation has been issued dissolving the Legislature. Nominations for a new Legislature will take place on June 22, and elections on the 29th. The Government having received information that the voters' lists will be ready, the uncertainty which has delayed action in this matter, is removed, and writs will be issued in a day or two in accordance with the proclamation."

The above announcement, issued by Sir James Whitney, Premier of Ontario, yesterday, confirms rumors of the past few weeks as to the date of the provincial elections. In accordance with his custom, Sir James handed out an address to the electors of Ontario, "The Issues of the Day," in which he recapitulates the achievements of his Government since the last election, referring specially to the Workmen's Compensation Act, the legislation providing for the establishment of radial railways by municipalities and hydro-electric development under the direction of Mr. Beck and his colleagues. He declares that the public revenues have been more than doubled, and calls attention to the extension of the T. & N.O., and the administration of the license laws. "We believe," says the address, "that a policy which keeps shops open while closing the bars, will have a tendency to encourage and increase the sale of liquor in large quantities, and the consumption of it in the home. That policy we leave to our opponents. References to New Ontario development and public highways report, and an appeal for support on the Government record, conclude the address.

New Montreal-Toronto-Detroit-Chicago Train Service

Effective May 31st Westbound, June 1st Eastbound.

In connection with the coming change of time on the Canadian Pacific Railway, effective May 31, many improvements in train service have been made, notable among these being the inauguration of solid de luxe trains, carrying Buffet-Library-Compartment-Observation Cars, Electric-lighted Standard Sleepers, together with Standard Dining Car Service between Montreal, Toronto, Detroit, Chicago, via Canadian Pacific and Michigan Central Railroads.

These palatial trains will be known as "The Canadian," operated through the Michigan Central tunnel between Windsor and Detroit.

Westbound—leaving Montreal 8.45 a.m., arriving Toronto 5.40 p.m.; leaving Toronto 6.10 p.m., arriving London 9.25 p.m.; leaving London 9.33 p.m., arriving Windsor 12.10 p.m.; leaving Windsor 12.20 a.m., arriving Detroit 11.35 p.m. (central time); leaving Detroit 11.55 p.m., arriving Chicago 7.45 a.m.

Eastbound—leave Chicago 9.30 a.m. (central time), arrive Detroit 3.55 p.m.; leave Detroit 5.05 p.m. (eastern time), arrive Windsor 5.15 p.m.; leave Windsor 5.25 p.m., arrive London 7.55 p.m.; leave London 8.03 p.m., arrive Toronto 11.20 p.m.; leave Toronto 11.40 p.m., arrive Montreal 8.55 a.m.

RIVER DRIVER IS DROWNED

Wesley Hicks Met Death While at Work

Wesley Hicks, an employee of the Peterboro Lumber Company, was drowned yesterday morning at seven o'clock while endeavoring to loosen a log jam on the Mississagga River, about eight miles above Gull Lake. When the jam broke he rode one of the logs but when it collided with another he was knocked off and the velocity of the current swept him under.

The unfortunate man was unmarried and resident about a mile north of the Burleigh. He was a very large man physically and considered as one of the best men on these waters.

WHY BUILD ANOTHER ?

Contractor Says City is Using Incinerator as Sewage Disposal Plant

"The city is using the incinerator as a sewage disposal plant," was the statement made to the Review late this afternoon by A. H. Reid of the Reid Incinerator Co., of Toronto, and builder of the local plant.

Mr. Reid, accompanied by K. C. Balfour of Toronto, are here to-day in connection with an inspection of the plant for the benefit of Medical Health oOfficer Dr. Pichard, of Brandon, Man.

Mr. Reid pointed out that in the first place the incinerator provided for eight per cent. night soil being consumed. Fully forty per cent. night soil is being used and about fifty per cent. garbage. It was impossible to get results from anything like this.

"As for being any odor, that is very strange," commented Mr. Reid, who, continuing said there should not be any odor.

"We are constructing plants in Red Deer, Stratford and Swift Current, also Sault Ste. Marie," concluded Mr. Reid.

Boy Scouts representing Pontypool, Bobcaygeon and Norwood will arrive in the city tomorrow for the visit of the Duke of Connaught and party on Monday. The Scouts combined with the local Scouts will take part in the ceremonies of entertaining the Royal party.

CONFEDERATION AND CENTRALIZATION

Written Specially for the Review.
By J. P. Laycock, M.A.

Confederation is the Canadian test of centralized government. Imperial centralizationists consider it an advanced step in British consolidation: the successful operation of the federal principle in the main over-sea dominions augurs well for its introduction in the United Kingdom and the United Empire, and at the same time lessens the number of necessary negotiators. Imperial decentralizationists regard it as a progressive step in practical imperial disintegration, unifying contiguous colonies and strengthening their efforts for complete self-government. Each as strenuously declares they pursue the natural evolution of self-government; which is right time will tell.

Canadian Liberalism is trying to extend the principle of individualism to the government of the individual dominions, and is true to the fundamental meaning of the name as understood by the doctrinaires of the old European school. Canadian Conservatism is attempting to apply the compromise between extreme individualism and extreme paternalism, and is faithful to the modern revision of the doctrines of John Stuart Mill. The struggle is simply an application of the old conflict with the individual community placed where the individual citizen was put, and is bound to end in a similar way. It was natural that when excessive individualism ran riot in the early half of the last century colonial control in colonial concerns should favor extravagant provincialism; it was natural that the reaction of political opinion from 1867 to the present day should limit the governmental powers of the older, and smaller communities by bringing them under the federal principle, and should foster the idea of some form of centralization of government in imperial affairs. The British North American, Australian, South African colonies, have flourished faster by unification, the division of the complex labour of government between the parts and the whole, and the compromise between centralization and decentralization. The United Kingdom more and more is searching for one method of devolution to obtain the same advantages for its partners. Why not a similar reform in British government at large by the triple erection of Provincial, federal, and imperial governmental machinery? The first is practically already in existence; what remains is the creation of the last through the adoption of a give and take policy by the authorities of the United Kingdom and the over sea dominions, a measure rendered more necessary as imperial interests grow in complexity, as grow they will.

Let us listen to the protest of Canadian Liberalism. Even as Confederationists in 1867 contracted the rights of each colony concerned so would imperialists seek to abridge the liberties of Canada. There is no parallel between the past and the proposed federation: the British American colonies were self-governing, the empire contains units which never can be; the one sought a customs union, the other can never seek this successfully; the one united realizing the evolution of self-government, the other cannot unite because the evolution has been along lines of decentralization.

The strained effort to prove that Canadian consolidation in the past is no precedent for closer unity between Britain and Transmarine Britain is due to the fact that the operation of the centralizing principle in Canada, Australia, South Africa, and the United States shows that within properly defined limits, not necessarily identical in each case, it can operate without injury to the interests of the inhabitants of the integrating provinces. The compact of Confederation consequently is the nightmare which upsets, confounds, disintegrates the theory of disintegration. It reveals the principle of centralization operating in Canadian concerns after the riot of provincial self-government. Following a similar development of self government in over sea dominion affairs, largely because of a similar opposition from the temporarily centralized administration, are we to perceive again the voluntary consolidation by the communities concerned in which process certain powers may be surrendered to the administration set up by the contracting powers? Federation in Canadian in imperial history, is the revolution, if one so desires to call it, which runs counter to the constitutional evolutionary dogmas of Canadian Liberalism; but which in the view of imperialists reveals a growth toward a new state of affairs undreamed by decentralizationists whose wings have been dragged in the dirt and whose eyes cannot penetrate through their own illusion to the truth beyond.

The experiment of 1867 does not sanction the deduction that the operation of the centralizing principle subjects the partners to the tyranny of the federal government. On the contrary the absence of provincial agitation for the restoration of privileges previously held and the limitation of any existing clash of opinion practically to matters of interpretation of the original contract, show that the local interests of the people of the provinces are judged sufficiently protected by the resolutions of the local assembler and the more direct influence of their representative in the Federal house. Prior to Canadian unity, as there was no direct constitutional relationship between the colonies concerned, partial forfeiture of provincial rights was inevitable; but imperial consolidation, so far as the dominions are concerned, would deal with powers yielded up by the British parliament as well as with local rights surrendered by the daughter states. There is thus more to gain by imperial than was by Canadian unification.

British imperial history in Canada, as elsewhere, has been remarkable for the development of two antagonistic principles side by side. The British North America Act has enabled the federal government to become more and more centralized at the expense of provincial rights won by the contracting colonies from the mother country. The struggle for local autonomy has enabled Canada, like other oversea dominions, to participate in the constitutional powers forfeited by the parent state which are giving to the empire more and more a decentralized form of government. The reason for the development of Canadian self-government even beyond the sphere of local concerns has been the lack of Canadian representation in the past and existing imperial governmental machinery; with the solution of this difficulty the reason for decentralization in imperial governance disappears.

There is a sort of fatalism imported by certain historical and constitutional thinkers that as progress may follow certain principles for a certain time it must follow them forever, that because decentralization was the tendency once it must be the tendency always. This theory overlooks the fact that such principles might have been operating within a limited field and that once a larger area is reached modification is necessary. If decentralization had been the sole principle operating in Canadian history, Confederation would never have been realized and in its stead we would logically have had movements of municipalitie,s then of villages and finally of individuals, for complete self-government. But, no: no theory of centralization appeared so as to secure equipoise; the result was a seeming revolution, in reality, natural and inevitable. The invasion of the over sea dominion governments into the field of imperial legislation likewise reveals not so much the need of complete self-government as the necessity for the erection of additional governmental machinery.

To assert that imperial consolidation is undesirable because of difference of circumstance is fallacious. It is the assumption that imperial federation must be in detail upon the same basis as the local union of 1867, that what once happened must recur, that what once was the problem and solution must always be the problem and solution. A custom's union was essential, it is said, to Confederation, impossible in closer connection; these American colonies were self-governing, part of the British Empire. As well argue that Confederation was necessary to bind the colonies together with the Intercolonial Railway, that the transmarine dominions of the British crown can never be linked together with twin rails of steel, and that consequently closer communion is impossible. Even should the points of difference outnumber those of resemblance, this does not prove another union impracticable, but simply that the different problem requires a different constitutional answer. Special needs must be met in a special way.

Many of the arguments used against imperial unity, slightly varied to suit the particular environment, might have been urged with equal force against Canadian unity. The former would abridge local liberties, the latter colonial liberties. The one would throttle pseudo-nationalism, the other healthy provincialism. British and Canadian spirit made Canada what it is; British North American and colonial sentiment was one factor saving Canada in 1812. Imperial unity would place Canada in permanent inferiority to the United States; Canadian unity would remove the superiority of New Brunswick over Maine. And still Confederation came.

Confederation then teaches this lesson: it is possible for political units in decentralized relationship to consolidate without infringing upon the interests of the individual. How much more feasible is it then in the proposed imperial union when the connection between the mother land and the daughter dominions is at present much closer than that which existed among the North American colonies. There were men in 1867 who were strong enough to say that the streams of colonial autonomy had flown long enough in their course adequately to protect individual rights. They blocked the tides, diverted the channels, and the waters flow along them to this day. There are Canadians today who are strong enough to say that the stream of self-government has flown long enough in its course adequately to protect individual rights. They are blocking and will continue to block the tide, divert its channels, and the waters shall flow along them until they reach the expanding sea of cosmopolitanism.

THE RECEPTION ON MONDAY

Some Pointers for Guidance of Citizens

All motor cars other than the ones which are to carry the royal party, will not be expected to line up in front of the C.P.R. station on Monday, but will remain on George Street. At Central Park the royal party will alight on McDonnel street, where a space from there to the platform will be arranged. Those who are to be presented to the Duke, Duchess and Princess Patricia, will approach from the south steps of the platform and leave by the north steps. After the reception, the royal party will inspect the armouries and will leave that place via Murray Street. After that the royal party will proceed to lock 6 via the route published and travel via the Bessie Butler to the lift lock.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

THE SEVENTH DAY.

To the Editor of The Review:

Dear Sir,—

Rev. Mr. Rollins properly objects to a violation of the civic law that forbids working on Sunday but he is wrong in his implication that it is a violation of the moral law as he well knows, for the seventh day of the week (Saturday) is "the Sabbath of the Lord thy God" as commanded in the fourth Commandment and not the first day of the week (Sunday). God's laws are immutable and eternal, and perfect as Himself. It was observed by Christ Himself and His Apostles, as well as by the prophets of old. The change was made by presumptious men many centuries afterwards, so that the keeping of Sunday is only a tradition of men which slowly moved westward until it became the law of the land. With an open Bible and the passing of the dark ages, the people should not be kept in ignorance.

Yours,
LAYMAN.

The Peterborough Technical Society were afforded an interesting address last evening by Acting Crown Attorney Joseph Wearing, M.A., on the Workmen's Compensation Act.

YOU CAN DEFY HEADACHE!

Yes you can, with a box of ZUTOO Tablets in your pocket or home.

Taken when you feel a headache coming on, one little tablet will ward it off—nip it in the bud. Taken later it will cure the headache in twenty minutes.

Why then continue to suffer when a box of ZUTOO will make you headache proof. You would be suprised to know how many people, who never before used a headache remedy, are now using ZUTOO Tablets. Why not you?

ANOTHER PEDLER'S LICENSE ISSUED

The efforts being made by the Retail Merchants' Association to make every person doing business in the city pay their equal share of the city's taxes is bringing results.

A tea peddler who has been working this city for years without a license, was forced to pay $50 into the City Treasury this week, for the privilege of doing business for one year.

Another peddler has quit doing business, and still another has taken to the peaceful country roads, where he may or may not be molested.

Y.M.C.A. BOYS LOOK FORWARD TO BIG TIME

New Features for Camp at Sandy Point

"Sure, we're going to camp," is the hearty slogan of the boys of the Junior Department at the Y.M.C.A. these days. The annual Y.M.C.A. Boys' Camp is being held from June 29th to July 11th, during which time the boys spend the time of their lives with every convenience of camp life, under expert supervision and clean healthy surroundings.

New features in regard to sports and hikes, have been added to the list, while under the capable leadership of Boys' Secretary Galley, something new is always being introduced for the approval of the boys.

The programme includes baseball tournaments, sports of all kinds, fishing trips, hikes, regattas and everything dear to the heart of the average athletic youngster, while his comfort will be looked after by capable senior leaders and also his appetite by good cooks.

WOULD HAVE MATRONS ON ALL THE TRAINS

W.C.T.U. Pass Resolution Endorsing This Plan

The May meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was held yesterday afternoon in their room at the Y.M.C.A. with the President, Mrs. Taylor, in the chair.

The attendance was good. After Scripture reading by Mrs. Wood, five or six members offered earnest prayer. Mrs. McKay read a paper on the need of having a matron on all through trains and on nearly all trains entering our great cities. These Train Matrons would have some first aid training; be of cheerful demeanor, and ever on the watch for the wolves of both sexes who prey on ignorant girls and women travelling alone. They would be supplied with leaflets on the dangers of our cities to young women, etc., and they would make it their duty to become acquainted with all women on their trains warning them as need required. A resolution was passed by the Society, fully endorsing this plan.

After beautiful solos by Mrs. Lane and Miss Grey, the meeting was closed with prayer by Mrs. Whalley.

INMATES OF HOME HAVE AUTO DRIVE

Yesterday afternoon the Automobile Association treated the inmates of the Protestant Home to a pleasant outing. At three o'clock ten cars left the institution and drove through the city and out to Chemong Park. After a short time in the park they returned to the city and drew up before Hooper's, where ice cream was served to the entire party. They drove back to the Home about five o'clock and all expressed themselves as having thoroughly enjoyed the outing.

Those who had the pleasure of thus adding to the enjoyment of the aged, by sending their autos, were: Miss M. Robertson, Miss J. Hill, Miss Brightman, Mrs. Collier, Mrs. Barrie, Miss Eastwood, Walter Green, A. H. Cressman, A. P. MacLean, and S. J. Keyes.

The secretary of the Automobile Association asks the Review to state that the fee for joining is only five dollars, not ten, as some have stated.

TEMPERANCE LEAGUE AND THE CANDIDATES

Advanced Stand on the Temperance Platform Will be Supported

A meeting of the members of the Citizens' Temperance Committee was held last evening in the parlors of the Y.M.C.A., to decide what action should be taken in view of the approaching political campaign. The meeting was representative in character.

The resolution passed recently by the County Temperance Association was discussed and unanimously adopted. Thus the Citizens' Temperance League has pledged its support to the county organization. Letters are to be sent to both the Liberal and Conservative conventions urging them to nominate candidates who will be acceptable to the temperance interests and who will take an advanced stand on the temperance platform. If both parties nominate acceptable candidates and adopt a policy in harmony with the desires of the Temperance Association, the temperance forces will not take any part in the approaching fight. If either party takes a more advanced stand than the other, and the candidates is acceptable, then the League will back that candidate, no matter which party he represents.

Reports presented at the meeting showed that the temperance forces throughout the country and city are anxious and determined to take advantage of the existing situation. It was reported that a number of delegates to the Conservative convention to be held on Monday night have pledged themselves to speak in favor of the temperance platform. Preparations are being made to have the party represented in the same manner at the Liberal convention, whenever it is called.

In the event of the Temperance Association taking part in the campaign it was decided that it should do so as a separate organization and that it should not identify itself with either political party. The temperance people will maintain their own organization, see that their supporters' names are duly registered on the voters' list, provide speakers, and will assist in getting out the vote on election day. Reports presented showed that the temperance sentiment is strong and that men belonging to both parties who have supported their parties all their lives, are willing this time to desert their parties, if necessary, to sand by their temperance principals. It is felt that all this sentiment needs is leadership to make it a big factor in the approaching campaign. One minister who was present, reported that he had been canvassing the members of his congregation and found strong party men ready to back the temperance platform. It was decided to ask the temperance electors to refrain from pledging their votes to either party until the candidates for both parties are in the field and have announced their stand on the temperance issue.

During the evening the chairman read a letter that had been sent out by a publishing company in Toronto to the hotel keepers of the province, including the hotel keepers of Peterboro, asking for contributions to a special issue of a certain paper that is to be issued in the campaign against the "abolish the bar" policy and pointing out that if the candidates who favor the abolition of the bar can be defeated in the approaching campaign it will have an effect in stemming the tide of local option and Scott Act sentiment now so prevalent throughout the province.

A resolution was passed requesting that the League should protest to the License Commissioners against the transfer of a shop license, application for which has been made recently. The meeting was presided over by Mr. H. B. Cowan, the chairman of the committee.

VISITORS TO SEE INCINERATOR

Brandon Medical Officer of Health is Here

Medical Health Officer Dr. Pichard and Mrs. Pichard of Brandon, Man., accompanied by A. H. Reid of the Reid Incinerator Co., Toronto, and K. C. Balfour are in the city today inspecting the incinerator. Dr. Pichard was sent here by the Brandon council to inspect the incinerator and report on its workings. Dr. Pichard was more than pleased with the workings of the vast burner and is of the opinion that one similar will be installed in Brandon.

FARMER HURT IN RUNAWAY

George Street was the scene of a rather exciting runaway this morning. A horse belonging to a farmer named Mann from near Buckhorn bolted and in its mad rush struck a post causing the occupant of the vehicle to be thrown heavily to the ground. His head by striking the paved curbing, was severely cut. The injured man was able to resume charge of the outfit the horse being caught at the corner of London and George Streets.

JUDSON DAY.

At Murry Street Church to-morrow morning the one hundredth anniversary of the commencement of the work of Adoniram Judson in Burmah will be recognized.

Every Baptist church in Canada and the United States has been requested to join in this general celebration.

The story of Judson's life will be the theme of Mr. Webb's sermon and the music chosen is of an appropriate character.

Dr. Judson perhaps suffered more and accomplished as much as any missionary since the days of Christ and the story is as interesting as it is instructive.

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH.

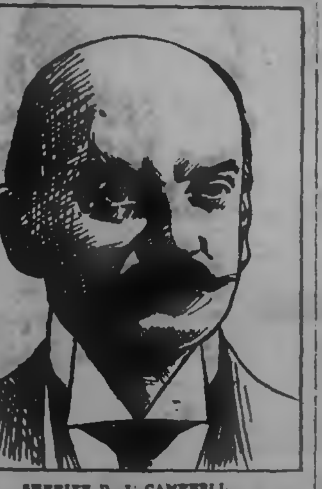
DUNCAN CAMPBELL, OF MACLEOD, PIONEER SHERIFF AND OLD TIMER

Among the quite distinguished old-timers in the Canadian West, Duncan J. D'Urban Campbell, late sheriff of Macleod Judicial District, Alberta, occupies a prominent place.

Born at St. Hilaire, Quebec, on July 16, 1855, young Campbell was educated at his home schools and at Bishop's College, at Lennoxville. He entered the Bank of Montreal in 1874 and resigned in 1882. When the Regina settlers came West to colonize a new land, he was with them, but shortly afterward came on to Macleod at the invitation of Lieut.-Col. Irvine, commissioner of Mounted Police. He was under contract to supply beef to the Indians on the western reserve till the Canadian Pacific Railway reached Gleichen. During that time he also supplied the railway dining service as far as Morley, Alta.

He was appointed one of the five deputy sheriffs of the territories in 1883, and was also at this time appointed postmaster at Macleod. He occupied the position of deputy sheriff until April, 1897, when the Supreme Court was organized in Alberta and he was made sheriff of the South Alberta judicial district, which position he held till the organization of the province, when he was appointed sheriff of Macleod judicial district.



SHERIFF D. J. CAMPBELL.

Mr. Campbell had one of the largest judicial districts in Western Canada, requiring six bailiffs.

He superintended the hanging of Charcoal, the only Blood Indian that ever paid the death penalty, at Macleod. This desperado murdered an Indian on his own reserve and then shot Mounted Police Sergt. Wilde, in the discharge of his duties on patrol. Mr. Campbell also made arrangements for the hanging of a Chinaman and a Galician at Macleod.

In the early days the territories had no penitentiary, and for years after the organization of the province there was no place to incarcerate prisoners serving long terms. Sheriff Campbell has taken many a horse thief to Stoney Mountain, Manitoba. Among the noted Indians he escorted to the "Pen," was Nez Perces Sam, a redskin desperado, over whom Winnipeg people got so excited.

Sheriff Campbell has been in continuous service as sheriff for more than 30 years. His successor in office is A. B. McDonald, late superintendent of Banff National Park. Mr. McDonald was the defeated candidate for Federal representation against John Herron, in 1896.

In the social life of his home town, Macleod, Mr. Campbell has always taken a prominent part. His office as sheriff excluded him from accepting many Parliamentary honors that were offered him. He has been a keen advocate of all that goes to help a town educationally, and in civic affairs he has been active and prominent.

Although appointed to office by a Conservative Administration, Mr. Campbell has never taken any part in politics since his appointment, and had just as many and just as warm friends among the Liberals as among the Conservatives. He has been longer in office than any other sheriff in the Province of Alberta, and has seen many Governments come and go.

In religion Duncan J. D'Urban Campbell is an Anglican, and prominent in the work of the church in Macleod.

Gift of an Island.

It is announced that the Duke of Argyll has transferred the island of Tiree to his nephew and heir, Mr. Niall Campbell. The island, which is some six hours by steamer from the mainland, is thirteen miles long by six miles broad, and the population is slightly under 2,000. Its surface is very flat, and the soil is fertile and particularly adapted to cattle grazing. The island contains ancient burial grounds and architectural remains. The snipe shooting is said to be the best in Europe.

HOW TO CURE STOMACH TROUBLE

The Common Cause is Lack of Blood—Therefore You Must Build up the Blood

There is the most intimate relation between the condition of the blood and the activity of the stomach. The blood depends upon the stomach for a large part of its nourishment, while every act of digestion, from the time the food enters the stomach and is assimilated by the blood needs plenty of pure well-oxidized blood. The muscles, glands and nerves of the stomach work only according to the quality of the blood.

The most common cause of indigestion is lack of rich, red blood. Not only does impure blood weaken the muscles of the stomach, but it lessens the product of the glands of the intestines and stomach, which furnish the digestive fluids. Nothing will more promptly cure indigestion than plenty of pure blood. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the safest and most certain blood-builder. A thorough trial of these pills gives a hearty appetite, perfect digestion, strength and health. Here is proof of the value of these Pills in cases of indigestion. Mrs. Alfred Austin, Varna, Ont., says: "My system became run-down and my stomach very weak. I had no desire for food and what I did take caused me great distress, and did not afford me nourishment, and I was gradually growing weaker, and could scarcely do any work at all. I did not sleep soundly at night and would wake up not at all refreshed and with a feeling of dread. Some years previously I had used Dr. Williams' Pink Pills with much benefit and this decided me to again try them. My confidence was not misplaced, as by the time I had used six boxes I was again feeling quite well."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all medicine dealers or will be sent by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by sending to The Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Embroidery For Children.

Embroidery is still much used on frocks for children. One of the prettiest sorts of afternoon frocks for a child is of white crape embroidered in a big, effective design in white cotton, made with a wide colored velvet sash of bright blue or black. Such a frock is decidedly dainty, yet it has all the advantages which stout wearing qualities give to children's clothes.

LOCAL MARKET

With the seeding completed the farmers are more or less men of leisure these days, hence the market this morning was a litle larger than it has been for the last few weeks. Butter sold from 24 and 25, while eggs hovered around 21 and 22. Contrary to expectations, the fowl is still very plentiful, yet the price is decreasing very slowly. Chickens sold from 70 to $1.10 each. One large turkey weighing a trifle over 20 lbs., sold for $3.50. Just three weeks ago to-day a similar bird realized $4.25.

The outside market was likewise fairly busy with potatoes in abundance. The "murphies" went at $1.50 per bag. The quotations:

PAIN NEARLY DROVE HIM MAD

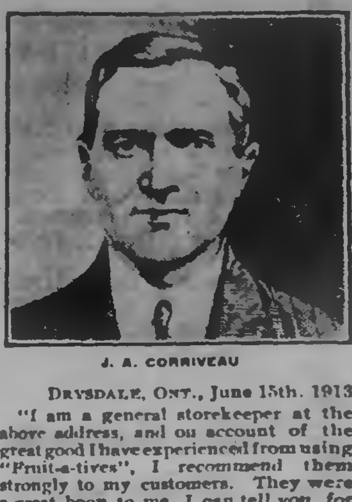
Suffered Horribly Until He Turned To "Fruit-a-tives"



J. A. CORRIVEAU

DRYSDALE, ONT., June 15th. 1913

"I am a general storekeeper at the above address, and on account of the great good I have experienced from using "Fruit-a-tives", I recommend them strongly to my customers. They were a great boon to me, I can tell you, for about two years ago, I was laid up in bed with vomiting and a terrific pain at the base of my skull. The pain nearly drove me mad. Doctors feared it would turn to inflammation of the brain but I took "Fruit-a-tives" steadily until I was cured. I have gained fifteen pounds since taking "Fruit-a-tives" and I verily believe they saved me from a disastrous illness."

J. A. CORRIVEAU.

For Headaches, Neuralgia, Rheumatism and other diseases arising from an impure condition of the blood, "Fruit-a-tives" is invaluable and infallible.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. At all dealers or sent on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

ON MUSIC

FURDER than bein' able to play "Turkey In The Straw" on the fiddle, I must confess that I'm no musician. My ole fingers air too warped up by rheumatism to do much playin', but I will say as I have got the fines' pair of listenin' ears you ever see. When I hear music I jest naturally revel in it like a barefoot boy in a sun-warmed pool.

Fact is I've got what you'd call a trained ear—self-trained, I mean. I've sorter eddicated it to catch all the harmony there is in anythin' and stay plum deef to the dischords. And it sure beats all what a pair of satisfactory ole ears I've got.

Firm Machine Stitching.

To hold machine stitching so it will not need tying take two or three stitches, lift the foot and begin over again. At the end of the seam turn the goods and stitch back a few inches over what has been done. This will not do for very fine sewing, but looks well enough for common work. It is more quickly done than tying and stays better.

Small Pieces of Soap.

When tablets of toilet soap break and get too small to use, put them into a muslin bag, tie up and keep in the bathroom for washing hands with.

Are You Going to Muskoka This Summer?

If so take the 10.20 a.m. fast express from Toronto, daily except Sunday, via Grand Trunk Railway and arrive Muskoka Wharf 1.45 p.m. where direct connections are made with steamers for points on Muskoka Lakes. This train carries Parlor Library Buffet car and first-class coaches and passengers are assured of a comfortable ride along the most interesting route to Muskoka Wharf, which is the original gateway to the far-famed Muskoka Lakes.

The curative odor of balsam and pine, and the preponderance of water area to land surface, together with the high altitude (1000 feet above the sea) render hay fever an impossible condition and perfect immunity from this annoying ailment is assured.

Return connection is made with train leaving Muskoka Wharf at 10.30 a.m. daily except Sunday, arriving Toronto 2.55 p.m.

Tourist tickets at low fares are now on sale to Muskoka Lakes points, good for stop-over and valid to return until December 30th, 1914.

If you are contemplating making a trip ask Grand Trunk Agents for full particulars or write C. E. Horning, District Passenger Agent, Union Station, Toronto, Ont.

SHAUGHNESSY'S STATEMENT.

President of C. P. R. Issues an Official Message.

MONTREAL, May 30—Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, president of the C.P.R., has issued a statement regarding the loss of the Empress of Ireland, in which he says, in part:

"The catastrophe, because of the great loss of life, is the most serious in the history of the St. Lawrence route.

"That such an accident should be possible in the St. Lawrence and to a vessel of the class of the Empress of Ireland, with every possible precaution taken by the owners to ensure safety for the passengers and the vessel, is deplorable. The saddest feature of the disaster is, of course, the great loss of life, and the heartfelt sympathy of everybody connected with the company goes out to the relatives and friends of those who met death in the ill-fated steamship."

Laurence Irving and Wife Lost.

WILL PLAY ON EAST SECTION OF THE GREEN

Tennis Club Completes Arrangements

The Peterborough Tennis Club has been re-organized. At a meeting held last evening, it was announced that the members would be able to play on the east section of the bowling green. It is the intention to lay out three courts and to permit ladies to play in the morning. The members expect to be on the courts by the first of the week.

A Tennis Club is in coure of organization in connection with Charlotte Street Methodist Church. The lawn on the west side of the Church will be used. When the flower beds are rolled out there will be plenty of room for one double court and the handiness of the court should assure success. A meeting will be held Monday evening to organize.

COMMENT

As You Like It

It's a long thirst that can't get a quencher. A week ago the London Advertiser devoted such space in telling its readers how the Peterboro players baited Umpire Walsh and how this man Walsh was the greatest ever. On Wednesday this same umpire gave the worst exhibition of umpiring that was ever witnessed in London according to the Advertiser. The reason for the worst exhibition as the 'Tiser terms it is that Umps Walsh saw fit to banish Reidy, Danford and Hammond for baiting. The trio were justified in kicking according to the 'Tiser. The 'Tiser should take a few lessons in fairness as intelligent readers do not fall for the stuff that paints the home boys as angels and the visitors vice versa.

Doc Reisling was suspended for a week for his part in the run in with Umpire Walsh on Wednesday. It is claimed that Umps Walsh urged Beebe to retaliate after Schultz had struck him. Yet Reisling pitched yesterday.

The Petes lost by one run again yesterday. Sterling pitched nice ball but the batters fell down which bears out the contention that when the pitchers are good the batters are bad and when he batters are good the pitchers are very bad.

Joe Picard says that you never can tell. Joe is a great believer in wins but he says if the Petes do happen to win he'll hardly be able to believe his own eyes when he lamps the score board.

Hank Dink owner of the Dink Hollow Club has a great team. The other day the Dinks beat Zeke Green's hireling 88-77. Dink sez if they keep up the good work he'll send 'em to the big show as he read where New York and Chicago only scored 4 runs each in a game the other day.

A fellow blew into Dink Hollow yesterday and approaching Seth Dewberry told him he was an inventor of air brakes. Seth is the manager of the ball club. The stranger told Seth he had the invention but did not have any money but if Seth would give him $25 he would make a brake for a train.

A. Nut editor of the Weekly Squirrel has gone to New York to see a ball game.

Karluk Crushed In Ice.

NEW YORK, May 30. — The Karluk, which carried the Stefansson expedition to the Arctic, was crushed in the ice last January, according to a message received here yesterday from St. Michaels, Alaska. The crew is marooned on Wrangel Island.

The message announcing the fate of the Karluk read as follows:

"Karluk crushed in ice January, 60 miles off Herald Island. Bartlett arrived here to-night. Whaler Herman of Siberia, assistance for crew Wrangel Island."

Becker Sent To the Chair.

NEW YORK, May 30. — Charles Becker was yesterday sentenced to die in the electric chair at Sing Sing prison during the week beginning July 6, for the murder of Herman Rosenthal.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

People who feel their importance need to feel it, as they'd never know they had any otherwise.

It is all right that people should know where to find you. Still, it is not a bad thing to know how to dodge, either.

LET THE GOOD WORK GO ON

It is a question of how much money you have and not how much you earn.

Some men swear too gently to be called really profane men.

There are people who are quite sudden without being at all rapid.

The man who has a taste for lemons has misfortune at a disadvantage.

There is always plenty of room where good work is being done.

There might have been a time when truth was mighty, but recently it has seemed to have got over the habit of prevailing.

MANY CITIES AND TOWNS WERE REPRESENTED ON ILL-FATED SHIP

Toronto is heaviest Loser With Sixty-One Citizens Aboard the Empress of Ireland—Hamilton and London Are Stricken and Other Communities Suffer—Windsor Lost Eight Persons.

TORONTO, May 30.—Of individual cities Toronto is the worst sufferer from the wreck of the Empress of Ireland. The latest reports indicate that this city has lost sixty-three lives in the disaster.

The bulk of the Salvation Army contingent had their homes in Toronto, and among them were: Commissioner David Rees, Mrs. Rees, Capt. H. Rees, Capt. R. Rees, Miss A. Rees, Col. Sydney Maidment, Mrs. Maidment, Brigadier Potter, Master Willard Potter, Brigadier John Walker, Major D. L. Creighton, Mrs. Creighton, Major Hugh Findley, Mrs. Findley, Staff Capt. A. Eastes, Mrs. Pantting, Miss Alice Ford, Mrs. Ernest Ford, Mrs. Adj. J. Green, Miss Jessie Green, and Miss Lily Morgan.

Well-Known Montrealers Perish.

MONTREAL, May 30.—A number of the best-known business men in Montreal and Canada were on the ill-fated Empress.

Major Henry Herbert Lyman is well known throughout Canada as head of the old-established wholesale drug firm of Lyman, Sons & Co. On the death of his father, he followed him in the presidency of the Toronto sister house, as well as in the senior partnership of the Montreal business.

Lionel Kent is manager of the Energite Explosives Co., Ltd., with works at Liddifield, Ont., near North Bay.

A. E. Barlow is a mining engineer and was for two years president of the Canadian Mining Association. He also was a lecturer at McGill University.

Hamilton Homes In Mourning.

HAMILTON, May 30.—Telegraphic news of the sinking of the C. P. R. liner Empress of Ireland plunged many Hamilton homes into the deepest gloom yesterday, for over thirty local people sailed on the ill-fated boat. Among them are: Harry Yates, Mrs. Harry Yates, Mrs. Price, John Reilly, Mrs. George Spurgeon, Jas. T. Taylor, Miss Florence Taylor, S. A. Bandmaster Woodard, Mrs. Woodard, Miss May Woodard, J. J. Cayley, Mrs. Nonely, Mrs. S. Burgess (Dundas), Miss C. Hopp (Dundas), Charles Boardman, Mrs. Boardman, William Prince, Mrs. Prince, Gilbert Prince, F. J. Rutherford, Mary E. Hill.

Nine From Galt.

GALT, May 30.—The awful marine disaster yesterday morning has hit Galt pretty hard, and the whole community is plunged in horror, grief and acute anxiety. Nine citizens and one former resident are known to have taken passage on the ill-fated Empress of Ireland.

They were Thomas and Mrs. Burrows, two children and the four months old son of Thomas Leach, Miss May White, a young lady who had been a resident of Galt for two years, and three foreigners.

Robert Law, of Brantford, until a short time ago a resident of Galt, was also a passenger.

Londoners on Board.

LONDON, Ont., May 30.—The complete list of Londoners on the Empress of Ireland is as folows:

Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Falkner, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Kerr and five children, Sarah, Maggie, George, Nellie, and Catharine, and Mrs. Kerr's father, William Russell, Fred. Laskey, Mrs. Maud McGacbern, Miss Marjorie McGacbern, Frank Hopper, Wm. Hopper, Edward Beale, Mrs. Cottrill; Mrs. Mary Rabburn.

Queen's Student Probably Dead.

KINGSTON, May 30.—"If I don't get drowned I will be back to college next fall." This is what E. P. Godson, student of the Queen's School of Mining, stated when he left here two weeks ago for Toronto. He was a passenger on the Empress of Ireland on his way home in Fenbury, Worcestershire, Eng. He was a second year student. He is believed to have been lost.

Eight From Windsor.

WINDSOR, May 30.—Eight Windsor people were passengers on the ill-fated Empress of Ireland, and the incomplete list of those saved does not show any of their names. There are: Miss Carrie Harvey, Mrs. Bertha Hunt, Mrs. Edward Dutton (Walkerville), Mrs. Allan Reeves and young daughter, Mrs. Florence Allgrove, Vera Allgrove (aged six), Evelyn Allgrove (aged two).

Two From St. Catharines.

ST. CATHARINES, May 30. — In addition to Miss Catharine Miller, Miss Nellie Ingleton, granddaughter of Joseph Ash, superintendent of the St. Catharines Isolation Hospital, is also known to have been a passenger on the Empress of Ireland. She left to visit her parent at Leyton, London, England.

Port Colborne Man Lost.

PORT COLBORNE, Ont., May 30.—Herbert Andrews, 27, a young Englishman, who has been living here for the past two years in the employ of the Canada Cement Co., was a victim of the Empress of Ireland disaster.

SURGEON GRANT TELLS GRAPHIC STORY OF ESCAPE

Tumbled Out of Berth and Rolled Under It—Was Pulled Through Port Hole.

QUEBEC, May 30.—A graphic description of the scene on the Empress after the collision was given by Dr. James F. Grant, the ship's surgeon on the Empress, who described the awful scene as follows:

"I was in my cabin and heard nothing until the boat listed so badly that I tumbled out of my berth and rolled under it. I concluded that something had gone wrong and tried to turn on the light, but there was no power. I tried to find the door bolt, but the list was so strong that it took me considerable time to open the door. When I reached the alleyway it was so steep, due to the way the ship was canted, that my efforts to climb up were rendered impossible by the carpet, which I was clinging to, breaking away. I then scrambled up and managed to get my heard through a port hole, but I was unable to get my shoulders through. At that time the ship was lying almost flat in the water on her starboard side; and a passenger who was standing on the side of the plated side of the ship finally managed to pull me through the porthole.

"About a hundred passengers were standing on the side of the ship at the time, and a moment after I had joined them the ship took another list and plunged to the bottom. I next found myself in the water, and swam towards the lights of the steamer Storstad, and when nearly exhausted from the struggle and the exposure I was picked up by a lifeboat, which went on to the scene of the disaster and was loaded with survivors who were pulled out of the water and taken on board the Storstad. Then we were heated and wrapped in blankets, and I was provided with the clothes which I now wear, and which enabled me to do what I could to help the survivors, some of whom were in such an exhausted condition that they died."

STORSTAD IS AFLOAT.

Collier Which Wrecked Empress Can Steam to Quebec.

SYDNEY, N.S., May 30.—The collier Storstad will be able to reach Quebec under her own steam, according to a wireless message received by the Dominion Coal Co. from the Government steamer Lady Evelyn. The message made no mention of the Empress of Ireland's passengers being on board the Storstad.

The Storstad is a freighter, owned by A. S. Klavenness, Lysanger, Norway, and is chartered by the Black Diamond Line. She was built at Newcastle-on-Tyne in 1911. For some time she has been plying in the coal trade between Sydney, N.S., and Montreal.

The Storstad registers 3,561 tons net. She is one of the biggest of what is known as the Black Diamond boats, measuring 440 feet in length with a 23½-foot beam.

NEARLY ONE THOUSAND GO DOWN WITH C.P.R. LINER

Most Appalling Disaster in History of Canada and Third Greatest in Modern Times Occurred With Sinking of C.P.R. Liner off Father Point.

QUEBEC, May 30.—Out from this port Thursday afternoon with all the stately pride of a great ocean liner went the Empress of Ireland of the Canadian Pacific service, bound for Liverpool. She carried almost fourteen hundred persons, including many men and women of distinction on both sides of the Atlantic. As the huge ship left her dock and headed down the river the band of the Salvation Army Headquarters in Toronto played "God Be With You Till We Meet Again." The two hundred delegates to the Army Congress on board stood around the band, a brilliant bit of color in the scene.

To-day the Empress of Ireland lies at the bottom of the St. Lawrence, rammed in a dense fog Friday morning by a heavily-laden collier as she lay to near Father Point, awaiting day and the sun. Of all the great company that sailed out so confidently Thursday but little over four hundred returned last night. Almost a thousand bodies lie entombed in the ill-fated ship, or drift amid the eddies of the St. Lawrence.

As the Empress steamed down the river the fog thickened, and after she took the mails aboard off Rimouski Captain Kendall, whose first voyage in command it was, decided that the better course would be to lie to till morning. The activity following the taking aboard of the mails being at an end, the passengers and the bulk of the crew were in their berths. Out of the fog, steaming rapidly toward Quebec, came the deeply-laden collier Storstad, a Norwegian ship engaged in carrying coal from Nova Scotia to up-river ports. She struck the Empress amidships with such force that the side of the great ship was pierced, and the plates were ripped off for a considerable distance below the waterline. At once she began to fill, and as the water poured in she careened over so far that the launching of the boats became a matter of the utmost difficulty. In fourteen minutes from the time the collision occurred the Empress went down, carrying with her hundreds of passengers who had not been able to make their way up on deck.

The calls of the wireless operator for aid were heard at Father Point Wireless Station immediately after they began, and two Government steamers which had steam up raced to the spot indicated. Before they arrived the Empress had gone down, and all that could be done was to gather the survivors, many of whom had taken to the boats or thrown themselves into the cold water with but little clothing on them. It was almost three hours before the work of rescue was completed, and the survivors were landed at Rimouski and mustered for roll call. It was only then, when parents failed to find their children and husbands their wives among the survivors, that the full horror of the disaster began to make itself felt. For a time there was a ray of hope that others might be saved and landed later, but the number of passengers who reported was pitifully few. As Captain Kendall stated, many of them had not been able to make their way on deck, and were, therefore, carried down with the ship. When the train bearing the survivors reached here at 7.45 last night it carried 29 first-class passengers, 29 second-class and 101 third. Of the crew 237 were saved. It is stated that 37 additional survivors have been landed at Rimouski since the train left. This would make the total number rescued 433. As the crew and passengers totalled 1,387, the dead or missing number 954. No ocean tragedy in Canada's history has cost so many lives, and only two others in modern times, the sinking of the Titanic and the burning of the Volturno in mid-Atlantic have exceeded the loss in yesterday's horror.

Stories of the frightful panic which broke out in the darkness as the ship listed and her lights went out; of the futile efforts of the crew to lower the boats, which was made impossible by the strong list of the ship, and the desperate struggle which occurred in the water after the ship gave the last plunge, are told by the survivors, all of whom were witnesses of the disaster which will go down in the history as the most appalling in the story of navigation in the St. Lawrence river.

The most prominent men among the victims were Commissioner Rees of the Salvation Army, who was in charge of the Canadian contingent to the convention in London; the actor, Laurence Irving, son of Sir Henry Irving, his wife, and Sir Henry Seton-Karr, the famous sportsman and big game hunter.

Some idea of the terrible excitement that existed on board the ship as she started to sink is found in the story related of an Ottawa passenger, J. W. Black, who did not wait for the boats but jumped with his wife into the river and kept afloat until picked up.

The Empress of Ireland was valued at $2,000,000, and with her cargo of a value of $250,000, was fully insured.

At low tide this morning the top of the funnels of the Empress of Ireland could be seen. She is lying right in the channel. It is thought here by navigators that it may be possible to raise her. At present the wreck is a menace to navigation.

KENDALL GAVE AWAY HIS BELT

Stayed Till the Last and Leaped Into Water

QUEBEC, May 30.—Assistant Purser Hayes, in an interview last night, speaking about Captain Kendall, states that the captain said good-bye to him on the bridge, as the water was lapping at their feet. The captain had a life preserver, but handed it over to a passenger. They jumped together and Hayes was picked up by lifeboat No. 3 after an interval of 30 minutes.

After the ship had foundered they discovered Captain Kendall clinging to a piece of wreckage. He was taken in to No. 3 boat and immediately took active command and saved 73 lives in that boat alone. After placing these safely on one of the rescue steamers, Captain Kendall returned to the disaster and rowed around in No. 3 boat for over three hours, searching carefully for any survivors.

Captain Kendall himself took one of the oars and was indefatigable in his efforts.

S. A. ARMY AT KNEE DRILL

Londoners in Prayer When Tidings Arrive

LONDON, Eng., May 30.—A dramatic scene was witnessed at the Salvation Army headquarters here yesterday. Directly news of the disaster was received every person in the huge building was ordered to knee drill, namely, to prayer, over the catastrophe. The scene of a busy office in the heart of the noisiest part of London suddenly stopped in stillness was impressive to a degree.

Comrades Play in Streets.

MONTREAL, May 30.—The Salvation Army band from Peterboro, Ont., which is to leave for England to-day by the Cunard liner Alaunia, added a touch of pathos to the terrible shipwreck by playing in the streets of this city yesterday "Nearer, My God to Thee," and "God Be With You Till We Meet Again."

W. H. PERRY LOST

The name of W. H. Perry, who left Peterboro and sailed on the Empress of Ireland, appears among the list of those who were lost in the disaster.

CUSTANCE—KAY.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at St. James Church today, at one o'clock by the Rev. J. N. Clarry, when Mr. Robert C. Custance of this city, formerly of Nottingham, Eng., was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Miss Dinah Kay, of Lancashire, Eng. They were attended by Mr. and Mrs. F. Howarth.

A number of friends and acquaintances of the couple were present. Mrs. (Rev.) Clarry officiated at the piano. Mr. and Mrs. Custance will reside at 276½ Wolfe Street.

The regular meeting of the I.D.O.E. was held on Thursday afternoon at the Armouries. Mrs. J. Mills read a report of the recent convention at Toronto. A pleasing vocal solo was given by Mrs. James McDonald and a pleasant social time spent at the tea hour.

The Nicholls Oval Tennis Club opened the season with a tea at the Oval Thursday afternoon

Mr. and Mrs. T. H. G. Denne have gone on an extended trip through Nova Scotia. They will be absent four or five weeks.

Mr. Hughes-Charles, of Montreal, is renewing friendships in the city.

Mrs. J. Benson and children of Winnipeg, are coming to spend the summer with Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Brock, Weller Street.

Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] T. Nelson left today for Glasgow, Scotland, after an extensive stay in the city.

Mr. Nelson had been confined to the Nicholls Hospital for some time with illness.

Mr. F. C. Daly of Lloydminster, Sask., is among the guests at the Oriental.

Dr. and Mrs. Pichard of Brandon, accompanied by Messrs. A. H. Reid and K. C. Balfour of Toronto motored from Toronto to this city last evening and are registered at the Oriental.

Mr. A. S. Manning of Albany, N.Y., is in the city on business.

Mrs. Allan will give an address at the vesper service at the Y.W.C.A. on Sunday at 5 o'clock. There will be suitable music.

Miss Tess Wallace of North Bay, is visiting Miss Estelle Knox, 142 Hunter Street, east.

SYMPATHY AT OTTAWA

Political Leaders Express Their Grief

OTTAWA, May 30.—The wreck the Empress of Ireland was brought up in the House of Commons yesterday morning and brought sympathetic utterances from both the Premier and the leader of the Opposition. Rt. Hon. Mr. Borden referred to the terrible loss of human life, but hoped that the report as to the number of lives lost was exaggerated. He said it was an accident that could not have been prevented by any action which the country could have taken to render navigation safe. It was just one of those accidents which could not be prevented by any action on the part of the Government. He expressed sympathy for the families of those who lost their lives and intimated that some assistance to them might be considered later.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said it was hard to understand how an accident a few miles out could not have been prevented, but he hoped that investigations would show that it could not have been. He was overcome with the terrible news and expressed his sincerest sympathy for the families.

Connaughts Send Message.

TORONTO, May 30.—The following message has been sent by H.R.H. the Governor-General to Premier Borden:

"On behalf of the duchess and myself, I desire to express to you our deep grief at the terrible disaster to the Empress of Ireland, and our heartfelt sympathy with the families of those who have perished."

Prince of Teck Grieved.

OTTAWA, May 30—Rt. Hon. R. L. Borden yesterday received the following message from the office of the High Commissioner in London:

"Have received following message from Prince Alexander of Teck:

"Grieved to hear of disaster to Empress of Ireland. Kindly convey the sympathy of the princess and myself for the relatives of the victims.

(Signed) "Teck."

SAW WRECK IN DREAM

Kingston Woman Had Prevision of Disaster

KINGSTON, May 30.—Mrs. Smith, wife of Ensign Smith, officer in charge of the local Salvation Army corps, had a very peculiar dream on Thursday night. At three o'clock she was awakened from sleep as a result of a horrible dream, in which she imagined something dreadful had happened to the army. Rising Friday morning she learned of the sinking steamer, and received from Ensign Smith word that he had arrived in England.

Smith had arranged to leave on the Empress of Ireland with the rest of the officers, but changed his plans at the last minute, due to the advice of his wife. His wife advised him to leave on the earlier steamer so that he could visit his father while in England.

Memorial Services To Be Held.

MONTREAL, May 30.—Reference to the disaster which overtook the Empress of Ireland and her passengers will be made from nearly every pulpit of Montreal Sunday. At St. James' Methodist Church there will be a memorial service in the evening. The church will be draped.

LLOYDS SUSTAIN A HEAVY LOSS

LONDON, May 30.—Not since the foundering of the Titanic have Lloyds Underwriters sustained such heavy loss. The Empress of Ireland was insured in this city for $1,400,000, in addition to which must be considered her cargo, which is variously estimated at around a quarter of a million. At first it was considered extremely unlikely that a fine 14,000-ton steamer only built in 1906 should founder in fourteen minutes. Reinsurance business was done at two guineas per cent. when the news was first heard, and this shows how wholly Lloyds disbelieved the report.

THE CHANGING WEST

The Western Canada of today is very different from the Western Canada of five years ago. Most people realize this in a sort of a way, but it is safe to say there are few living outside of the Western Provinces who fully understand how swiftly are the changes that are building a nation out of sparsely settled provinces. This matter is dealt with in an extremely interesting way by the May issue of the "Canada Life Echoes" which has just come to hand. This issue takes the form of a special Northwestern number and it contains much information about the Western Provinces that is not generally known, and also a tabulation of the grain production, etc., of each province which should be not only of great interest at the moment, but also of much value for reference as occasion may arise. Unusually interesting photographs of Western life and scenes are liberally scattered through the publication and there is also an article on the irrigation of three million acres in Alberta. This little magazine is published by the Canada Life Assurance Company, and, while they last, copies will be sent on request, to W. R. Scadding, District Agent, Canada Life Assurance Company, Peterboro.

SURVIVORS IN QUEBEC.

Few Women and Children Among Remnant Saved From Liner.

QUEBEC, May 30.—Of 1,387 souls who left for Liverpool Thursday afternoon on the C.P.R. Empress of Ireland, not more than 400 returned last night to tell the awful story of a marine disaster unparalleled in Canada. If one thing more than another stood out as the survivors limped, walked or were carried from the relief train at Levis, which reached here at eight o'clock, it was the presence of so few women in the crowd of 400, not more than 25 in all. As they stole out of the train among the three or four hundred men their drawn faces showed only too well the awful experiences of the night before, when the steamer on which they were passengers was rammed by the collier Starstad. Clad only in the scantiest of clothing, principally sweater coats and skirts, and with their hair dishevelled, in striking contrast to the women were the faces of the children, who seemed as bright as if nothing of the disaster lingered in their memory. The survivors were brought to this side and cared for by the C.P.R.

Very few children were saved. On the train that brought the survivors to this city there were only three children to be seen. Many were drowned. One of the really wonderful rescues was the little eight-year-old girl, Gracie Hanagan, daughter of a Salvation Army bandsman. Her father and mother were both drowned, and the little girl coming up on the train thinks that both her father and mother will join her again, coming on the next boat.

When asked how she was saved she replied, "Oh, I saved myself."

Patience may be the lazy man's only virtue.

CITIZENS OF PETERBORO WELCOME HIS MAJESTY'S REPRESENTATIVE IN THE LAND OF THE MAPLE LEAF

WE ARE GENUINELY GLAD TO BE AMONGST YOU TO-DAY SAYS DUKE OF CONNAUGHT IN REPLY TO ADDRESS READ BY MAYOR

Royal Visitors Receive Enthusiastic Welcome During Their Visit — Boquets for the Duchess and Princess — Duke Presents Medals to Col. Rogers and Capt. Hounsell

To the strains of God Save The King and amid vigorous cheering by thousands of citizens and residents of the vicinity, His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught stepped from his private train at the C.P.R. station a few seconds after 10 o'clock this morning on his first vist to Peterboro. At exactly three minutes after one o'clock his special train of five cars steamed out of the G.T.R. station for Port Hope, where His Royal Highness and party will be entertained this afternoon. After inspecting the guard of honor at the station, His Royal Highness was escorted through the principal thoroughfares to Central Park, where a reception was held and he inspected cadets, scouts and veterans. From Central Park, the armouries were visited after which the party went for a trip over the lift lock. Nothing in the form of an accident occurred to mar the day, and the committee's plans were carried out to the letter, only a delay in turning the Bessie Butler in the turning basin, preventing the party from arriving at the G.T.R. station before one o'clock, at which time the departure for Port Hope was scheduled.

The Arrival.

The royal train steamed in from Toronto exactly at 10 o'clock. The station platform was crowded with a throng eager to get a glimpse at the Duke, the Duchess, Princess Patricia and the other members of the party.

When the Duke and party appeared on the platform they were met by Mayor Buller, A. H. Stratton and other officials and the band of the 57th Regiment played God Save The King. The guard of honor, which was in charge of Captain McLean, was drawn up behind the rear platform of the station. With his aides, the Duke inspected the guard and commented whenever he noticed a service medal on the breast of one of the hundred soldiers. The colors were also inspected. They were borne by Lieutenants Hagerman and Leck.

As soon as the inspection was completed, the royal party were placed in the autos at their disposal and the drive around the city was commenced. At least twenty autos took part in the drive, all those who had been invited to the reception at the park being allotted room in the motor cars. The drive covered all the principle streets of the business and residential sections. Arriving at the park the party alighted from the autos on McDonnel Street. The ladies proceeded directly to the platform in the centre of the park, while the Duke inspected the cadets, scouts and veterans.

The Cadets.

There were 140 collegiate cadets under command of Captain Jamieson on hand. The unit, which consisted of buglers, signallers and the file made a very good showing, and were highly complimented on their excellent physique, carriage and general efficiency.

The veterans received a warm congratulation from the Governor-General. The vets were under the command of Lieut. Col. Miller. South Africa and '66 men were prominent and a personal word of congratulation was given each one by his Royal Highness as he passed them.

There were 90 boy scouts from the city and vicinity in uniform and the youngsters made a very good showing. The Duke with his aide de camp addressed the boys briefly, pointing out the good training they were receiving and the work they could do. District Commissioner Rev. F. J. Sawers was in charge of the scouts, while the other officers were: Scout Master Milby, Scout Master Comber, Scout Master Caterrel, Pontypool, Assistant Masters Brooks, McNeilly and Sedgewick.

The Reception.

Following the inspection the Duke was escorted to the platform, where Mayor Buller read an address of welcome on behalf of the city. There were at least five thousand people on the grounds when the ceremony was taking place. The Duke's reply to the Mayor's address follows:

Mr. Mayor, Ladies and Gentlemen:

I must thank you in all sincerity for the loyal and kindly address which has just been read. Your feeling allusions to the members of my family touched me extremely, and the fact that my brother visited your city when he was Prince of Wales, and that this circumstance is so well remembered, lends an additional personal interest to my visit.

During this spring I have travelled over a great deal of Ontario and it is no exaggeration to say that I have been immensely struck by what I have seen. Your province has been exceptionally favoured by nature, and her resources have been energetically and capably developed by man.

THE CIVIC ADDRESS

Field Marshall His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, K. G., etc., etc., Governor-General of Canada.

May It Please Your Royal Highness:—

As Mayor of Peterborough, on behalf of the Council and the people of the city, I bid Your Royal Highness and Their Royal Highnesses, the Duchess of Connaught and Princess Patricia, a hearty welcome and thank you for the honour conferred by this visit and for the great pleasure you have thereby afforded this community.

The eminent ability you have displayed in the service of the Empire, as soldier, counsellor, statesman and administrator, is well known, and must ever be highly appreciated in every part of His Majesty's dominions.

When we learned that one who had been so long and so closely identified with the great events of the Empire, and who had taken such a prominent part in shaping its course during the many years of its development and expansion, was to be our Governor-General, we were more than gratified, and our gratification was enhanced by the fact that Your Royal Highness was a Prince of that honoured and worthy House to which we owe a willing, dutiful and affectionate allegiance.

To have this opportunity of greeting you personally is therefore a distinct pleasure, but that pleasure is heightenend when we greet you as a son of the beloved and never-to-be-forgotten Queen Victoria, as a brother of his late Majesty, King Edward, revered by all his subjects, and as an uncle of our Most Gracious Sovereign, King George. Only once before have we been so favoured as to receive a visit from a member of your illustrious family, and that visit of your Royal brother, the then Prince of Wales, is still held in fond remembrance, and will ever remain a notable event in our city's annals.

With all other Canadian subjects of His Majesty, we fully recognize the service Your Royal Highness has given to this Dominion in bringing to the performance of your duties as Governor-General the same ability, sagacity and devotion which have characterized your labours in other important spueres throughout the Empire, and well feel assured that Canadians will always recall your tenure of office with pride and with satisfaction.

To you as our Governor-General, and as a member of the Royal family, we wish to give expression to our devotion to the interest of the Empire and to our loyalty to our Gracious Sovereign. No truer Britons, and none more loyal can be found anywhere than in Canada, and there are none more truly British and none more truly loyal than are the citizens of Peterborough.

It is a matter of especial gratification to us that Her Royal Highness, the Duchess of Connaught, is able to be with you on this occasion, and we wish to tender to her own heart-felt wishes for her health and happiness.

We hope that your continued residence in Canada will be an enjoyable one for yourself and for Their Royal Highnesses, the Duchess of Connaught and the Princess Patricia. We are sure that the interest which you have taken in the development of this Dominion will not cease with your term of office, but will continue to bear good fruit in years to come, and we trust that your Canadian sojourn will remain a pleasant memory.

Peterborough, Canada, June 1st, 1914.

WM. BULLER,
Mayor.

DIFFERENCE OF $2 SAVED THE LOCAL SALVATIONISTS

Adjutant McElhiney Had Practically Decided to Sail With Toronto Contingent but Made "Eleventh Hour" Change in Plans

Fate played a leading part in the terrible tragedy of the St. Lawrence so far as this city is concerned. A difference of a few dollars per man in the rates of the Empress of Ireland and those of the Alunia relieved this city of the terrible shadow of death which has fallen over Toronto and other places to a marked degree. The local Salvation Army band and its followers had originally intended to sail with the Toronto contingent via the Empress of Ireland and up till about ten days ago those were the arrangements. Adjutant McElhiney who had charge of the arrangements had almost completed the purchasing of the tickets and bookings when he found that the party could sail via the Alunia for about two dollars per soul less than the rate asked for on the ill-fated Empress of Ireland. As the Alunia sailed only a day later than the Empress the plans were altered.

Mrs. McElhiney, wife of the adjutant, when speaking of the stroke of fate which is now seen to have proven a blessing so far as Peterboro is concerned stated that the adjutant had investigated the rates of the two boats only after he had practically decided to sail with the late Commissioner Rees and the Toronto party. "The adjutant found that a saving could be effected by sailing on the Alunia and also that the accommodation would be almost on a par with that provided for on the Empress. He therefore changed his plans at practically the eleventh hour," said Mrs. McElhiney.

QUICK ACTION SAVED GIRL

Wanted to See Duke and Stepped in Path of Car

The quick action and presence of mind of an unknown bystander at the corner of Hunter Streets today at noon was the means of averting an accident. A young girl named Manning was waiting for the Vice-Regal party to pass. Just as a large touring car came rapidly down the street, the girl jumped out to see the approaching parade. Several women in the crowd turned, while a scream rent the air as the two ladies in the auto noticed the child standing too scared to move. A jostle in the crowd and some bystander grabbed the youngster to safety much to the distracted mother's joy.

There is not the slightest doubt had it not been for the action of the stranger a serious if not fatal accident would have marred the day's joys. The driver of the car did not have sufficient time to bring the auto to a stop.

WHEN ROYALTY PAID VISIT TO PETERBORO 54 YEARS AGO

The visit to Peterboro today of Royalty, will bring to the minds of the older residents, the visit of the late King Edward, then the Prince of Wales. The Prince came to Peterboro about 11.30 on the morning of Friday, September 7, 1860, and remained in the city several hours.

The party came from Cobourg, arriving at the station in Ashburnham and proceeded along the decorated streets to the court house park where addresses of welcome were read to the Prince by Augustus Sawers, mayor of the town and Wm. Lang, warden of the county.

The brief reply was made in the following words:

Gentlemen: I thank you sincerely for the addresses which you have presented to me.

"In the Queen's name, I acknowledge the expressions of loyalty to her crown and person; and for myself I am grateful to you for this welcome to your neighborhood."

There were 15,000 people in and near the park and like today the school children took part in the welcome. For the occasion the town council and the county councils provided $2,400 to be used by the committee for decorating and other purposes.

The Prince was driven about the town and departed from the station on Bethune Street.

CALAMITIES ARE NOT INDICATIVE OF GOD'S WRATH

We Must Pay for Higher Civilization Says Rev. R. G. Peever

Speaking to his evening congregation at George Street Methodist Church, Rev. R. G. Peever made feeling reference to the loss of the Empress of Ireland and one thousand souls, and said that to his mind, calamities such as those of recent time were not indicative of God's wrath.

With the ever-ascending civilization there were corresponding dangers, if the mind of man failed and this was always possible. We could not he said, charge these calamities up to the Almighty but we must charge them up as an accompaniment to the higher civilization which we enjoy and for which we must be prepared to pay.

At St. Paul's.

Reference was also made to the disaster by Rev. R. Pogue who asked for the sympathy of the congregation of St. Paul's for the stricken, and also that the congregation stand when the organist played the Dead March. There was a special prayer for the bereaved and sorrowing friends and two appropriate hymns God moves in a mysterious way and Jesus Saviour Pilot Me, were sung.

FAMILY OF DUKE OF CONNAUGHT

The family of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught consist of :—

Prince Arthur, born at Windsor Castle, January 13, 1883. Lately married the young Duchess of Fife.

Princess Victoria, born January 15, 1882; married to the Crown Prince of Sweden on June 15, 1905.

Princess Patricia, born at Buckingham Palace on March 17, 1886.

CHILD FELL FROM SECOND STOREY WINDOW

Fourteen Months Old Child Died From Injuries

Cricket Place, East City, was the scene of a sad fatality last evening about 8 o'clock when the fourteen months old son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Allen, 24 Cricket Place, was fatally injured. The little tot had been put to bed about 8 o'clock. The bed was close to the window and as the child moved about, he neared the window, knocked the wire screen from its place, and he fell, to the ground, fifteen feet below. He was conscious when picked up.

Dr. Gallivan was imemdiately summoned and removed the child to St. Joseph's Hospital where it was found to be suffering from a compound fracture of the skull making recovery almost impossible. Three hours after the fall the child passed away.

The parents are distracted over the affair.

Besides the sorrowing parents there are two sisters at home.

MRS. McELHINEY TELLS OF HER EXPERIENCES HELPING THE STRICKEN

Returned to the City on C.P.R. Train Carrying Some of the Survivors of the St. Lawrence Tragedy

Tired and care worn Mrs. McElhiney, wife of the local Salvation Army adjutant stepped off the C.P.R. train from Montreal which arrived here Saturday afternoon on its way to Toronto with the remnants of previous noble and happy families of the Queen City who had undergone the terrible ordeal in connection with the sinking of the Empress of Ireland in the early hours of Friday morning. The scene in the private car was beyond imagination. There were widowed mothers who but a few days ago had been in happy union with their family, orphans whose parents had gone to the bottom and husbands mourning the loss of their wives. All were scantily clad and when one looked upon Staff Captain McAmmond clad in a suit which fit him not it was difficult to recognize in him the picturesque officer of the army who in uniform was one of its most striking figures. There was also little Gracie Hanagan who is the only surviving members of a Toronto family. She still thinks her daddy and mamma will meet her in Toronto and did not seem to realize the seriousness of the catastrophe.

Tired as she was Mrs. McElhiney conducted a meeting at the temple last evening in which she related some of her experiences in helping in the work of caring for the survivors as they were rushed into the Bonaventure Station at Montreal. During the evening Mrs. McElhiney received a wire from her husband. It was a radio via Fame Point a wireless and lighthouse station on the extreme coast of Gaspe peninsula. The message was as follows:

Safe, all well, good weather, love.

After the meeting Mrs. McElhiney found time to tell a Review reporter of her experiences. She was one of the first to help in comforting the survivors who were brought in via G.T.R. from Rimouski. She did not sleep from early Friday morning until late Saturday night as she was up all Friday night helping the unfortunate passengers. As a train arrived at Montreal no time was lost in providing clothing for the passengers. The work of clothing them and giving them food was carried on at the station the workers going right into the cars. After that the survivors were taken to the Salvation Army Temple and to hotels.

"The Army has suffered a blow which is staggering. Some of its noblest men and women have been torn from the ranks and offices by the terrible disaster. I have not noticed much in the papers about Captain McGrath, territorial band director but I suppose the wires have been kept to busy that it was impossible to send all the news. There were also some discrepencies which I suppose are accounted for by the rushed service.

Intended Visiting Peterboro.

Bandmaster McGrath was one of our finest men. He was also a musician of the finished type. He was to have visited Peterboro on his return from the congress, in order to further instruct the band. The band lost everything. Those who were saved have lost money, instruments and in most cases dear relatives and friends. One death which struck home was that of Mrs. Peryer, mother of our bandmaster. Another good man who went to his death heroically was Captain Edward Dodd who served as a soldier in this city and who was recently editor of the War Cry. We also lost Miss Heckstead who was superintendent of nurses at Grace Hospital, Winnipeg. On the train of survivors which came from Montreal was Earnest Green, the only surviving member of a large family, Captain Spooner, Major and Mrs. Attwell, Staff Captain and Mrs. McAmmond and numerous other members of the army. The plight of Grace Hanagan was pitiable. The poor girl who is all that is left of a family did not seem to realize that she would never see her loved ones again. Ernest Green one of our younger boys lost everything. He told me that before retiring he had placed all the money he had in the world in his trunk. In the confusion which reigned he lost everything. He was tossed into the dark waters of the river and picked up by a lifeboat."

Scenes were Undescribable.

"The scenes on the relief trains were undescribable. Women with only water soaked kimonas to protect them from catching cold, their hair tattered and unkempt presented pitiable pictures. Men whose nerve had been as strong as steel previous to the disaster looked the picture of nervous wrecks. It was the most trying experience I ever had. To see men who in their usual raiments looked majestic, now clothed in suits which were far from good fits was a striking characteristic of the surroundings. The same can be said of women who had prevrously worn excellent clothes but who after the rescue were glad to wear anything which was offered to them."

Adjutant Heard News First.

Mrs. McElhiney stated that the news of the tragedy was received when the Peterboro party were stalled in one of the suburbs of Montreal. A railroad man called the adjutant aside and told him. The adjutant did not break the news to the party at once but it was seen by his face that something terrible had occurred and finally he was forced to tell the truth of a disaster which has cast a gloom over the entire civilized world.

Mrs. McElhiney stated that the C.P.R. officials did all in their power to eleviate the sufferings of the survivors. The officials also kept the army officials posted as to the names of the identified dead and the rescued.

A message has been received by the army officials to the effect that Commissioner McKie who served in Australia was coming to take the place of the late Commissioner Rees.

COMMANDER OF ESSEX SAYS THE EMPRESS OF IRELAND CANNOT BE SALVAGED

Bubbles Still Rising Where Ship Sank

Canadian Press Despatch.

Rimouski, June 1.—The search for the Empress of Ireland's dead was continued today by the British cruiser Essex and numerous small craft employed by the Canadian Pacific. The wreck is three miles from the shore and bubbles are still rising to the surface at the spot. Commander Tweedie of the Essex says the Empress is beyond all hope of salvage because of the great extent of the damage inflicted on her hull. He thinks the hull will have to be blown up to remove danger to navigation.

THOMAS SHORE FRACTURED ANKLE

Thomas Shore, who is employed as caretaker of Graham's Pool Room on Hunter Street, had the misfortune to fracture his left leg at the ankle this morning while placing a chair at the side of a trap door to guard customers from falling. He stepped too close to the hole and his foot slipped to the first step, his body going down with such force that the ankle turned.

The injured man was placed on the billiard table and Dr. Gallivan summoned, who immediately ordered him to be taken to St. Joseph's Hospital, where the fracture was reduced.

POWER CONTRACTS.

The council meets tonight at eight o'clock and notwithstanding the fact that the weather is a trifle warm the city dads may have quite a lengthy session. The list of the contracts and inventory of property of the Peterboro Light and Power Co. have been served and will be presented to the meeting.

LOSS IS 191

Toronto Death List Increased by 45

Toronto, June 1.—The death list of Toronto people aboard the Empress of Ireland has been increased to 191 and survivors number to 84. The list of steerage passengers published today, added forty-five more names to the list of Toronto dead.

A Shot at Cholly.

THE APPEAL TO THE PEOPLE.

THE CONSERVATIVES have thrown down their gauntlet in the lists of Ontario politics. On June 29th, the contest will be decided by an appeal to the people. The Conservatives have three main points in their policy on which they deemed it necessary to have the assent of the electors. These three main points are, first, their record, second, the Workmen's Compensation Act, and third, the expenditure for good roads.

The record of the Whitney Government is one to be proud of. During the three sessions just closed, a vast amount of useful legislation has been put on the statute books, and it exceeds in importance that of any previous Parliament since the present Government came into power. They have been instrumental in making the Local Option Act the power for temperance that it is. They blocked strong efforts to make Local Option victories ineffective, and over all of the Province have rigidly enforced the liquor law. As far as the two parties are concerned, there is at present this difference between them on the temperance question—the Liberals advocate hotels without bars and the sale of liquor over the counter of stores. The Conservatives believe the present policy more conducive to the temperance cause, that such a policy as the Rowell party advances would increase drinking in the home and in the end would be no real advance in temperance reform. During the nine years that Sir James Whitney has been in power, 1200 liquor licenses have been extinguished—nearly one half the total number of liquor licenses there were in the Province. Temperance reform has advanced a great deal and very surely under the Conservatives' period of office. Besides other social legislation the Whitney Government have continued to develop the T. & N. O. R. R. and inaugurated the Hydro-Electric system. They have extended the latter to the business of radials, which will mean much for this Province and particularly for places like the City of Peterborough. When radial lines are in operation in this district, increasing its trade, assisting the farmers to market their produce and enabling merchants to deliver their goods over a wider range of territory, then the prosperity and advances thereby made possible will be the result of sound Conservative Government that was led by Sir James Whitney.

The Workmen's Compensation Act and the expenditure for good roads are two measures that require the support of the people. The former has been passed and the latter is proposed. If the electors think workmen should be compensated for injuries without spending a small fortune in precarious litigation, they will support their view by voting Conservative If they think this province should have a great system of roads, making traffic easy and quick and thereby increasing trade, they will support their view by voting Conservative. If they wish to support radical and untried measures, if they wish that a great system of roads shall not be built, they will vote for the Rowell party. That is the issue—Progress under the Conservatives or no assurance of anything effective under Rowell. As the Review has intimated, the Conservative forces will be led by Sir James Whitney, and under his guidance the Conservatives are confident of the victory that must result from the good judgment of the people.

INVESTING LIFE INSURANCE FUNDS.

THE PROBLEM of investing the funds of life insurance companies to the best advantage has brought out many methods. One way is to employ the money in improving real estate, while many companies are seriously considering a wider distribution of their funds. Others have a policy of investing only in national securities.

Now another idea appears. That is to employ life-insurance funds in the form of small building loans, all over the country, with the insurance feature added. Money is advanced to buy or build homes; the borrower repays in regular monthly instalments, and in the event of his death before the loan is paid off, the home is delivered clear and free to his family, just as the face of the insurance policy is paid when the insured dies.

Life insurance companies have come to be the largest existing sources for gathering the savings of the people. The five largest life insurance companies in the east have upwards of four million policyholders, and the aggregate of their invested funds is two and a quarter billions of dollars invested as follows:—In real estate owned, 5 per cent., in mortgages 30 per cent., and in bonds and stocks, 65 per cent. The amount invested in mortgages is largely in improved real estate, such as skyscrapers in the city of New York.

The new Equitable Life Building now being erected in New York, on the block bounded by Broadway, Nassau, Pine and Cedar Streets, in the Wall Street district, will be the largest skyscraper in the world. When the old building burned down, the company did not want to invest its money in a skyscraper, but only by that form of construction could the ground be made to earn interest on its value. The Equitable will not own the new building; a syndicate of private capitalists was formed to build it.

It will only put in $20,000,000 on mortgage; the syndicate will put in $10,000,000; and the improvement when completed, ground and all, will represent an investment of $30,000,000, of which two-thirds will be policy-holders' money, secured by mortgage.

THE WORLD WAGS ON.

IT HAS BEEN SUGGESTED that the festivities in connection with the tour of the Governor-General should be cancelled in view of the recent Empress disaster. Several circumstances make such action is inadvisable. This is the last opportunity the Duke of Connaught will have of paying Peterborough an official visit. If it were not his last year of office, the case would be different. Besides, his official visiting has been in process for a considerable time. If he were about to begin it, certainly he would postpone it. Further the world never stops wagging, no matter what happens. The living must go about their daily tasks, they must eat, sleep and work, even though borne down by a great grief. In view of all the facts it is not advisable that the arrangements in connection with the tour of the Duke of Connaught should be seriously curtailed.

A PLEA FOR PLAY GROUNDS.

EVERY DAY OR SO is to be found in the newspapers the sad story of some little boy or girl who has been killed or seriously injured by being run over by an automobile or some other street conveyance. In the majority of cases these children come from homes that have little or no play ground. The people belong to the working class, who live in small rented houses. The children, not being able to do all their playing in the house, are forced to run on the streets. Hence the accidents, with consequent loss and burdensome expense on the humble family. Every one of these accidents is an argument for play grounds. As long as the civic authorities permit houses to be built on such small parcels of ground that there is not sufficient play room for children, they should provide grounds where these children may play without being in danger of death or injury from passing vehicles.

The city of Peterborough has not as yet felt the pangs of crowding and of accidents such as point out the necessity for play grounds, but this city is relatively small, and now is the time to take action to secure play grounds. Sites should be secured before they are too expensively built upon. If the council does not see its way clear to buy land for play grounds, as is quite reasonable under the expenditure for civic improvements that are already in course of construction, the parks should not be denied to children. There are throughout this city several three-cornered parcels of land that are unsuitable for building sites, and these could be easily utilized for play grounds, recreation or parks as the case may be. At any rate, the civic authorities should not allow these sites to get away from them. A complete programme of civic betterment cannot be carried out in one year, but the city fathers should have an eye for the future in providing for such a problem as accidents and the lack of play grounds occasion.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE REVIEW has received a copy of an illustrated edition of the Sherbrooke Daily Record. This industrial number is a credit to Sherbrooke and would be worthy of a much larger city. It is printed on coated paper and illustrated by fine two-color cuts, which show the progressiveness of this district as well as the beauty of the Eastern Townships. The advertising is plentiful and in harmony with the general style and quality of the edition.

Fact.

London Free Press.

The political party that initiated subsidies and guaranteed the Canadian Northern cannot now leave its child on the doorstep of its opponents.

Experienced.

At a negro wedding, when the clergyman read the words, "love, honour, and obey," the bridegroom interrupted and said: "Read that again, sah! Read it once mo', so's de lady kin ketch de full solemnity ob de meanin'. I'se been married befo'."

The Name Does Sound Foolish.

Montreal Journal of Commerce.

Mr. Silliman, who has been wandering around in the Mexican Hinterland, has returned to Vera Cruz. That is a fitting name for a man who would take chances such as he took.

A Warning.

Montreal Gazette.

Some of those concerned in the new Alberta oil fields announce that theirs is expected to be a pumping proposition. Oil wells that have to be pumped are all right They can produce much, but it comes slowly and gives a moderate profit. Those who will soon be asked to buy stocks issued on a gusher basis will do well to note the information now given.

A Shrewd Question.

Edmonton Journal.

The Calgary papers say that half a million dollars was invested in oil shares in a single day. An oil boom seems to be about as effective as a circus in showing that, despite statements to the contrary, there are people who have spare cash. It would be interesting to know how many of those who dug up that half million have been standing off their creditors for months past.

The Monroe Doctrine.

Montreal Mail.

The Monroe Doctrine was formulated by James Monroe, the President of the United States, on September 2 1823. It said in effect that the United States would object to any attempt by European Powers to conquer territory on American soil, and was at the time directed against Spain, who was anxious to reconquer her American colonies.

Since then the United States has definitely adopted the Monroe Doctrine as the basis of her foreign policy. It has been used on several occasions, particularly against Napoleon III as to Mexico, and in connection with the Panama Canal and the Venezuelan debt to Great Britain.

Towards the end of the nineteenth century there arose a party at Washington who declared that the Doctrine applied also to industrial interference by Europe. This was aimed at certain Old World capitalists who were obtaining some valuable concessions, particularly in Central America.

Perhaps the most reasonable statement of the Monroe Doctrine is that by Price Collier, the well-known American publicist, whose attitude is that Washington must preserve order among her Southern neighbors, so that no foreign Power may have any excuse for interference. On one point it is likely that Price Collier agrees with the other party, namely, that if Germany or Japan once got a footing on American soil, the United States would have to double or treble her appropriations for national defence.
